The reunion of the whole family was a most affecting sight and almost raised a lump in a reporter's throat. There were wild demonstrations of joy, handshaking and embracing among the men, and kissing, sobbing and shedding tears among the women and children. It was a strange scene and no mistake, and not the least affecting circumstance was the inability of the parents to converse with their long lost daughter, who cannot understand a [illegible] while both mother and father are still without even a small knowledge of English.

Antonia passed yesterday at the house of her sister, Mrs. Josie Kriha, on Michigan street. She will remain in St. Paul for a season and then make her home in Crookston, her husband having obtained a conductor's place on the Manitoba road.

Heroine and Coward.

Athens (Ga.) Banner.

There were many individual deeds of daring at Mud Hazel Creek during the fearful accident to the Pioneer excursion train, but none can eclipse the heroic conduct of Miss Annie Martin, a young lady of Augusta, now on a visit to her sister here, Mrs. W. H. Jones. Miss Martin was an occupant of the first coach, and was sitting beside Captain W. D. O'Farrel. When the car had settled on top of the engine and the hot steam was pouring into the coach, threatening to suffocate all the inmates, Mr. O'Farrel threw a cloth over the lady's face to protect her from the steam, and passed her out through the window unhurt. But Miss Martin was not content with being saved herself. She instantly rushed to the scene of the wreck, and, with her own hands, saved the lives of three persons, one of them a gentleman, by dragging them through the car windows. How this delicate young lady accomplished a task before which some of the stoutest men present quailed, is more than we can say. She seemed endowed with supernatural strength. Miss Martin, during the excitement, saw a lady being crushed beneath the coach where she had fallen, and threatened with death. Turning to a young man, who was standing idly by at some distance, she asked him to rescue the party. "I am not going to risk my life to save any one," was the cowardly response. Miss Martin then, with her own hands, extricated the victim, who proved to be a married lady, and dragged her to a place of safety. But it was at the expense of serious injury to herself, as she received bruises from which this young lady was for some time delirious. Nobly did she continue to work until the last person was rescued from the wreck, when Miss Annie set to work and carried bucket after bucket of water, until the last spark was extinguished in the engine. It must be remembered that this heroism on the part of Miss Martin was persormed in the face of imminent danger to herself, for after the excitement the young lady was discovered to have her arm dislocated in two places, her side badly scalded, besides serious bruises on her body. Had she repaired to a place of safety as soon as released from the coach, instead of returning to the scene of danger, Miss Martin would have escaped without a scratch.

How the Czar Enjoys Himself.

St. Petersburg Correspondence London Post.

In the meanwhile the Emperor enjoys himself after his style at Peterhoff defended on every side like a fortress, occasionally openly showing himself to the enemy—the public. The Empress is slowly recovering from her confinement, but the nervous prostration still remains, and it is largely for her sake that the coronation has been left in its present uncertain condition. Personally, she is averse to its celebration, and shares the views of several of the Czar's advisers, that if he can rule Russia without a crown as well as with one, why should he run the risk of a coronation? The Czar has been amusing himself of late with a sloop, propelled by electricity, which arrived at Peterhoff a short time ago from Cronstadt, where it had been constructed for the heir-apparent. Quite a flotilla of gunboats and torpedo cutters is maintained at Peterhoff to guard the place. Great changes are being made in the personnel of the imperial household, and it is stated that for the future, maintenance of the servants of the palace will only cost £13,000 a year, instead of neerly £100,000, as in the time of the late Emperor. Economy and simplicity characterize not only the course of life at Peterhoff, but also the entire higher administration of the empire. The ostentation that marked every movement and act of the late Czar's brothers, the Grand Duke Constantine, of the navy, and the Grand Duke Nicholas, of the army, has been replaced by the austere simplicity of the present Czar's brothers, Alexis and Vladimir. The parasites of the late court are having a terribly bad time of it now. No mercy is shown them in the reorganizations that are daily taking place, and, as might be expected, their opinion of the Czar is a very bad one, and goes to swell the popular clamor against him. The Winter Palace is under repair, and many suits of the apartments are ordered to be furnished afresh. A few weeks ago a deal of old lumber found in one of the garrets was sold for 2,000 rubles to a dealer in curiosities on the Nevsky Prospect. The rubish filled several wagons, and, although not one-half has as yet been properly examined, the dealer has already netted 20,000 roubles by the sale of two valuable pictures he found the first day among it.

Kissing in the Dark.

Philadelphia Record.

A racy story is going the rounds of summer resorts about a young Philadelphia lawyer who indulged in an osculatory adventure at the Byrn Mawr Hotel, a couple of weeks ago. The gentleman is quite as prominent at the State bar as he is in the county courts, and his presence at summer watering places has always been welcomed. One evening at Byrn Mawr, the story goes, he left his room on the second floor and started down the long, dark corridor toward the main stairway. Suddenly he heard the tripping of feet, and soon discovered the well-rounded form of a female approaching.

As the fair creature was passing, the man of the law very adroitly encircled the tempting waist with his right arm and kissed the damsel full in the mouth. Instead of responding the girl drew away indignant. The freebooter saw he had made a mistake, and said: "Oh! I beg pardon! I thought it was Mary." The lawyer had mistaken a sweet girl of eighteen acknowledged to be the handsomest and coyest lass in the house, for the chambermaid. Next morning he suddenly disappeared with his family, taking the first train for the city. Up at the Hotel Kaaterskill, where the hero of the corridor act has been accustomed to spend a few weeks every summer, the guests say that the chambermaids are raising a fund in expectation of his coming. They intend presenting him with a handsome testimonial, should he come their way. His short, compact form, slick and clean face, and sparse, auburn locks will probably not be seen on the Kaaterskill porch this summer. The password now among the swells at all the fashionable resorts is: "Beg pardon! I thought it was Mary." The strangest part of it all is that nobody knows where the kissing counsellor has gone.

A Titled Porter.

Philadelphia Press.

The late Marquis of Westminister, father of the present Duke was a most penurious man. He always dressed in a very shabby manner, and was in the habit of taking his shoes himself to the cobbler's to be mended. On one occasion, while walking in the vicinity of Maidenhead Station, near to his river seat at Cliveden, he encountered a boating man, who had just arrived by a train from London. The latter was looking round for somebody to carry his satchel, and the old Marquis caught his eye. Not recognizing the eccentric lord, the boating man asked him if he wanted a job, and offered him sixpence to carry his valise to the inn, a quarter of a mile distant.

"Make it a shilling, and I'm your man," said the Marquis.

"All right," said the other, and the Marquis trudged on in front with his burden. Arriving at the inn, he received his shilling and walked slowly away. The donor's astonishment when informed by a bystander of the rank and wealth of his porter, may be better imagined than described.

At a recent English wedding the bridesmaids wore dresses of pale primrose surah, with broad brown silk sashes and sprays of wild flowers with the hats to match. They each carried a bouquet of wild flowers, also an ivory-mounted fan presented by the bridegroom and painted by the bride.

The marriage of Mlle. Berthe de Rothschild with Prince Alexander de Wagram gives the Rothschild family another connection among the great families of Europe. The Wagrams are related to the Murats, the Clarys, and to the royal family of Bavaria. Their magnificent castle of Gros-Bois is one of the finest in France. Into this family Mlle. de Rothschild does not enter empty handed, for her dowery is £100,000 a year. The young lady abjured Judaism, and has become as good a Christian as possible. The happy couple are to live half the year in the country, and the other half in Paris, where the bride's sisters, one of whom is Countess de Grammont, reside.

She Was Suspicious.

New York Tribune.

A lady who was anxious to send two little girls down to Elberon the other day brought them to Pier No. 8 and asked one of the officers of the boat if it connected with "the 2:30 train at Sandy Hook for Long Branch." She was answered in the affirmative; but being uneasy about the safe conduct of her little charges, whom she explained she was not to accompany, she asked, "Are you quite sure?" A short, stout ruddy faced man who was standing near by turned at this, threw away a half smoked cigar and answered for the boat's officer, "Yes, madam," he said, "this is the boat." She looked up at the speaker, a stranger, and was about to thank him when he added, "I am going to the end of the route and I will see that the children are safe." The lady looked at him so searchingly and possibly so suspiciously that he flushed up for a moment and said, "O, I will take good care of them if you will trust them to me. I am General Grant." "So you are!" exclaimed the lady as she recognized the face which painting and photography have made so familiar for the last twenty years. She gladly placed the girls in such distinguished care, and was equally grateful and amused to see the General and his little charges in conversation on the deck of the boat as it moved off.

Just Before the Battle.

"John," said an old Georgia plantation owner to a faithful negro attache of the place, "are the cows all driven out of the south pasture?"

"Yes, sah."

"And the sheep founded up under the east hill?"

"Yes, sah."

"And the mare, 2-year old and bay filly put up in the stable?"

"All snug, boss."

"All right. You know there's a couple of Atlanta editors coming down here in the morning to fight a duel, and one can't be too careful of his live stock while they are popping away at each other all day."

A Valuable Wardrobe.

Laramie Boomerang.

There are now 261,851 Indians in America, and if the wardrobe of the entire tribe should be attached and sold at sheriff's sale, it wouldn't bring $13. The Indian often gets hard up, but he might try from July to eternity and he couldn't soak his trousers for a doughnut with a hole init.

Boston has discarded "tress" as the feminine affix and substituted "trix." We once knew a seamstrix, whose mother was a tailorix, that became quite a poetrix.

If you feel drowsy, debilitated, have frequent headache, mouth tastes badly, poor appetite and tongue coated, you are suffering from torpid liver, or "biliousness," and nothing will cure you so speedily and permanently as to take SIMMONS LIVER REGULATOR OR MEDICINE.

The cheapest, Purest and Best Family Medicine in the World.

An EFFECTUAL SPECIFIC for all diseases of the Liver, Stomach and Spleen.

Regulate the Liver and prevent Chills and Fever, Malarious Fevers, Bowel Complaints, [illegible] Jaundice and Nausea.

SIMMONS LIVER REGULATOR

BAD BREATH!

Nothing is so unpleasant, nothing so common as bad breath, and in nearly every case it comes from the stomach, and can be so easily corrected if you will take Simmons Liver Regulator. Do not neglect so sure a remedy for this repulsive disorder. It will also improve your Appetite, Complexion and General Health.

PILES!

How many suffer torture day after day, making life a burden and robbing existence of all pleasure, owing to the secret suffering from Piles. Yet relief is ready to the hand of almost any one who will use systematically the remedy that has permanently cured thousands. Simmons' Liver Regulator is no drastic violent purge, but a gentle assistant to nature.

CONSTIPATION!

Should not be regarded as a trifling ailment—in fact nature demands the utmost regularity of the bowels, and any deviation from this demand paves the way often to serious danger. It is quite as necessary to remove impure accumulations from the bowels as it is to eat or sleep, and no health can be expected where a costive habit of body prevails.

SICK HEADACHE!

This distressing affliction occurs most frequently. The disturbance of the stomach, arising from the imperfectly digested contents, causes a severe pain in the head, accompanied with disagreeable nausea, and this constitutes what is popularly known as Sick Headache.

Unsolicited testimony to the Efficacy of Prof. Harris' Pastilles, taken from Letters received from Patrons!

Indiana, April 11, '81.—The Remedy is working perfectly. Had suffered from weakness for 6 years past.

Iowa, Oct. 10th, '80.—I am almost surprised at your Pastilles. They have worked like a charm on me. I am just twice as much of a man as I was before taking. I was on the verge of the grave, I thought, and there was no cure for me, but now I am in good hopes for a cure.

West Virginia, Aug. 28, 1879.—I received your medicine and I believe it has cured me, for which I am very thankful. Enclosed find $5. Please send me another box. [illegible] for a friend. You have done a great thing for me. I will send you all the orders I can.

From a Physician and Surgeon.

Missouri, June 22.—Please forward me another box of the Pastilles. The patient on whom I have used most of one box, in addition to a sample box, is fast recovering, and I think another will set him all right.

From a Druggist.

Maryland, Sept. 2, '79.—Last January we got a box of your Remedy for one of our customers, and it has made a perfect cure of him. We have another customer now suffering in the same way and wish one No. 3 box.

TESTIMONIALS.

GENTLEMEN: Your buggies have given me entire satisfaction, both in style and durability. I have used them for the past three years. Your recent improvements on road wagons I consider the best in the market.

JAMES H. RAMBURG.
Frederick Maryland.

DEAR SIRS: We have used buggies of your make that have been in use three years, and no buggy we have that cost twice the amount has given better satisfaction.

JAMES H. ALEXANDER.
Johnstown, Pa.

GENTLEMEN: We have used the Columbus Buggy Company's work for the last five years and can conscientiously recommend it as strictly first class as to style, material, workmanship and durability. Your buggies have given better satisfaction than any other make of vehicles we had in use for the last ten years.

PALMER & WHITTAKER.
Red Oak Iowa.

GENTLEMEN: It gives me pleasure to state that I have been selling your buggies and carriages for four years, and can safely recommend them to any one in want of a buggy or carriage. Yours Truly, J. L. GRIBBLE.
Macomb, Illinois.

GENTLEMEN: With over fifteen years experience in building buggies, wagons, &c., I do not hesitate in saying your buggies and carriages are strictly first-class in workmanship, material and proportions, filling a long-felt want for a reliable article that can be sold at a price lower than any ordinary manufacturer can produce and sell the same quality of Work at Yours, etc. I. S. KRICK, Conneautville Pa.

GENTLEMEN: I have used your Brewster side bar buggies for four years, together with buggies that cost me $200 and $150, and your buggies were the first that went out, on account of being side-bar. They have not cost me $1 for repairs, and those I have sold of your make have given good satisfaction. I think that you make the cheapest and best road wagons that are made in the United States for the money.
Respectfully, F. H. HAMIAN, Lawrence Kansas.

DEAR SIRS: We have been using your buggies for the last four or five years. They have given entire satisfaction. I think they are the best buggies made for the money.
W. B. GRIMES & CO., Liverymen Whitehall Illinois.

GENTLEMEN: We have been handling your work for two seasons, and have in every instance found your buggies first class. We never have had one of your jobs returned to us for repairs; neither have we had a single complaint on account of work not being perfectly satisfactory. Very Respectfully, H. P. BUCKLEY & CO., Springfield, Illinois.

GENTLEMEN: I have no hesitancy in saying that the buggies manufactured by the Columbus Buggy Company are the best work for the price I have any knowledge of. In not a single instance has there been any dissatisfaction on the part of any one of my customers.

FRANK L. HALL.
Owensboro, Ky.

PLAIN TRUTHS

The blood is the foundation of life, it circulates through every part of the body, and unless it is pure and rich, good health is impossible. If disease has entered the system the only sure and quick way to drive it out is to purify and enrich the blood.

These simple facts are well known, and the highest medical authorities agree that nothing but iron will restore the blood to its natural condition; and also that all the iron preparations hitherto made blacken the teeth, cause headache, and are otherwise injurious.

BROWN'S IRON BITTERS will thoroughly and quickly assimilate with the blood, purifying and strengthening it, and thus drive disease from any part of the system, and it will not blacken the teeth, cause headache or constipation, and is positively not injurious.

Saved his Child.

17 N. Eutaw St., Baltimore, Md.
Feb. 12, 1880.

Gents:—Upon the recommendation of a friend I tried BROWN'S IRON BITTERS as a tonic and restorative for my daughter, whom I was thoroughly convinced was wasting away with Consumption. Having lost three daughters by the terrible disease, under the care of eminent physicians, I was loth to believe that anything could arrest the progress of the disease, but, to my great surprise, before my daughter had taken one bottle of BROWN'S IRON BITTERS, she began to mend and now is quite restored to former health. A fifth daughter began to show signs of Consumption, and when the physician was consulted he quickly said "Tonics were required;" and when informed that the elder sister was taking BROWN'S IRON BITTERS, responded "that is a good tonic, take it."

ADORAM PHELPS.

BROWN'S IRON BITTERS effectually cures Dyspepsia, Indigestion and Weakness, and renders the greatest relief and benefit to persons suffering from such wasting diseases as Consumption, Kidney Complaints, etc.

Ague Cure

Is a purely vegetable bitter and powerful tonic, and is warranted a speedy and certain cure for Fever and Ague, Chills and Fever, Intermittent or Chill Fever, Remittent Fever, Dumb Ague, Periodical or Bilious Fever, and all malarial disorders. In miasmatic districts, the rapid pulse, coated tongue, thirst, lassitude, loss of appetite, pain in the back and loins, and coldness of the spine and extremities, are only premonitions of severer symptoms which terminate in the ague paroxysm, succeeded by high fever and profuse perspiration.

It is a startling fact, that quinine, arsenic, and other poisonous minerals form the basis of most of the "Fever and Ague Preparations," "Specifics," "Syrups," and "Tonics," in the market. The preparations made from these mineral poisons, although they are palatable, and may break the chill, do not cure, but leave the malarial and their own drug poison in the system, producing quinism, dizziness, ringing in the ears, headache, vertigo, and other disorders more formidable than the disease they were intended to cure. AYER'S AGUE CURE thoroughly eradicates these noxious poisons from the system, and always cures the severest cases. It contains no quinine, mineral, or any thing that could injure the most delicate patient; and its crowning excellence, above its certainty to cure, is that it leaves the system as free from disease as before the attack.

For Liver Complaints, AYER'S AGUE CURE, by direct action on the liver and biliary apparatus, drives out the poisons which produce these complaints, and stimulates the system to a vigorous, healthy condition.

We warrant it when taken according to directions.

The American Popular Dictionary, $1.00

This useful and elegant volume is a common Library and Encyclopedia, as well as the best Dictionary in the world. Superbly bound in cloth and gilt. It contains EVERY WORD in THE ENGLISH LANGUAGE, with its true meaning, derivation, spelling and pronunciation, and a vast amount of absolutely necessary information upon Science, Mythology, Biography, American History, Laws, etc., being a perfect Library of Reference. Webster's Dictionary costs $8.00, and the American Popular Dictionary costs only $1. [illegible] from the Lowest, —N. Y. Atlas. [illegible] "A perfect Dictionary and library [illegible]" [illegible]

SUNSHINE PUBLISHING CO.,
Geneva, Ohio.

Our readers will find this wonderful book the cheapest Dictionary published. The information it contains is worth many times the amount asked for it, and it should be in the possession of everybody. With this book in the library for reference, many other much more expensive works can be dispensed with, and ignorance of his country, history, business, laws, etc., is inexcusable in any man. Note the price, $1, post paid.

Booming Big.

BALTIMORE TREMENDOUSLY ENTHUSED OVER THE APPROACHING ORIOLE AND NEW ATTRACTIONS BEING CONTINUALLY ADDED.

The Baltimore Oriole is having a tremendous boom, and the indications point unmistakably to the greatest demonstration ever made in the Monumental City. The hearty endorsement of the railroad companies and other corporations, the leading commercial houses and business interests generally in the shape of the most generous subscriptions, render the matter of money one of no anxiety to the committee, and enables them to devote their whole time to perfecting the details of the three days festivities.

The responses from the military organizations invited to enter into competition for the splendid prizes offered, are of such a nature as to insure a most spirited contest. The military parade on the morning of the 12th, and prior to the competitive drill, will be strikingly brilliant and of a remarkable extent. All the competing organizations will be on parade present their fullest ranks, from which the company of thirty-six will be selected to contend for the prizes.

Several of these organizations number from two to four hundred men, and it is now contemplated to offer a magnificent silken banner to the organization making the finest appearance in the parade. The Maryland regiments, battalions and companies will turn out in full force, and the display as a whole will be a grand one. The second day's programme is now so far along as to insure a most unique and novel parade and attendant attractions. The military feature will be particularly interesting, as the winning organizations in the competition drill will have the right of the line. The immediate escort of Lord Baltimore will be arrayed in the most gorgeous costumes of two and a half centuries ago. Cecelius will be accompanied by Rex and the Carnival court, Momus, Comus, the Veiled Prophet and other royal personages of the famous mystic circles of the south. The tableaux following, showing the progress Baltimore has made the past two hundred and fifty years, will constitute a particularly interesting feature of the parade, as the citizens have become evey enthusiastic over it.

That the mystic pageant of Thursday night will surpass all efforts of the kind ever before attempted in the United States, if not indeed in the world, is now a forgone conclusion. It will be a marvel of splendor, of majestic proportions and of superb costuming.

The participation alone of the celebrated mystic societies of the country, renders it an unparalleled demonstration; but when are added the matchless divisions of the order of the Oriole, it is perfectly safe to claim that nothing to approach the pageant as a whole was ever before attempted. Aside from all other systems of illuminating the route, there will be four hundred bearers of patent lights, constructed especially for the purpose, and each light having four burners.

The utmost care is being taken to insure the convenience and comfort of all visitors. No increase will be made in the charges at the hotels or boarding houses, and a complete list is being made of all places in the city where accommodations can be had, and the price thereof. These lists will be printed and circulated at the railroad depots and throughout the city in large numbers.

The Baltimore and Ohio, as characteristic of the management, has thrown open its entire system — mail line, divisions and branches —to the exceedingly low rate of one-half the regular fare, or one fare for the round trip.

Every effort will be made to satisfy the most exacting as to time, comfort or transit and number of trains. A large accession of new coaches and motive power render certain the accommodation of all who may come.

Ticket agents anywhere will cheerfully furnish all information in detail.

PRAIRIE chickens can now be legally shot, to a limited extent. Now the festive hunter, accompanied by his still meaner cur, will range through the farmer's premises, tearing down fences, scaring stock, and setting out fires. It is time the farmers issued proclamations declaring them outlaws, and then proceed with a shotgun to abate the nuisance.

DR. BLISS wants $25,000 for his services attending Garfield. He thinks, his practice would have brought him $1,500 a month. This would not of course foot up to the above princely sum, but no doubt the doctor thinks the "cussin" he gets everywhere, is worth the balance of it.

THE treasury now contains $118,000,000 in silver. Silver dollars are accumulating at the rate of $4,000,000 a month, $2,000,000 of which comes from the mint in accordance with the law authorizing the coinage of that amount every month.

WE see by the Steuben Republican that it is now under the personal management of F. T. Burnham. Mr. Miller is, we believe in Chicago, superintending the management of his new venture, "Chicago Cheek."

How to Save.

All hard workers are subject to bilious attacks which may end in dangerous illness. Parker's Ginger Tonic keep the kidneys and liver active, and by preventing the attack save much sickness, loss of time and expense. Delay at such times means danger.—Detroit Free Press. See other column. 36-4t.

A Sea Serpent With Polka Dots.

FOUR TRUSTWORTHY PERSONS ARE CHASED BY A MARINE MONSTER WHICH BARKS LIKE A DOG.

(New Bedford, Mass., Letter.)

Four young men who have been camping on the shores of the bay relate an experience which, but for the veracity of the parties, would be classed with the sea serpent stories that help to pass the time at the many watering places lining this coast. The names of the adventures are Charles H. Pierce, Captain David E. Ginlet, H. E. Founce and William Vaugh, of Hartford. They were crossing from this town to Wing's Neck, the other day, and thus narrate the story of their exciting trip:

"We left New Bedford at 1 o'clock p. m. in the yacht 'Josie,' accompanied by our sailing master, Captain Walter Briggs. When two miles off the south end of Bird Island Light, at the entrance of Buzzard Bay, one of the company called our attention to a singular looking object about half a mile ahead, and some points off our port bow. Our captain called it a sea-horse. Again, he thought its movements in the water did not resemble those of any fish he had ever seen. We soon ascertained that whatever it was, it was propelling itself at a fearful rate of speed through the water, and making almost a straight line for our little craft. When within a few thousand feet of us it seemed to raise its immense body, or neck, some ten feet out of the water, and, at the same time, twenty feet in the rear, its tail was seen to raise up, and at times lash the water. All at once the fish, or serpent, vanished from sight. For over ten minutes we sailed along, and were near the black bouy, not far distant from Wing's Neck Light, then looking back, to our horror and dismay, we observed the mysterious fish again making direct for our boat at a most rapid rate. When within twenty-five yards of our craft it partly disappeared, but in an instant was seen to shoot out of the water with a humming or hissing sound, and with a distinct bark like that of a dog. Then it dove again and was lost to sight. The length of this mysterious fish was twenty-five or more feet. Its body was about two feet in circumference, decreasing regularly toward the point of the tail, when it seemed but the size of a child's wrist. Its color was a dark gray, but resembling that of the back of a crocodile. The belly was a bright yellow with dark red spots scattered here and there, while its tail was covered with short, thick black hare. The head resembled that of a bull dog. Great flat ears were distinctly seen on either side of its ugly jaws, while two extremely long feelers or horns protruded just over the ears. The eyes were sharp and fiery."

It is said that a similar creature was seen in the bay two years ago. The members of the party are all trustworthy persons, and vouch for the truth of the narrative.

The latest reported wonder of the Yellowstone National Park is a natural gold-plating apparatus, in the shape of a geyser. It is said that a piece of metal held in the geyser during the eruption becomes plated with a durable thickness of gold. The Salt Lake Tribune is responsible for the truth of the report.

THRILLING EXPERIENCES IN THE WORK OF A PEARL-DIVER.

[California Times.]

"I was once a diver—not a wrecker, but a pearl-diver, and a hard business it was," recently observed the captain of a Spanish brig to a reporter. "We worked off the Mexican and Panama coasts, principally on the Pacific side. Sometimes we worked alone, but generally on shares, and sometimes for pay. We went to the grounds in small sailing vessels, then we took to the small boats, and covered as much ground as possible. Each man had a basket, a weight, and a knife. For sharks? Yes, but it is a poor defense, for it is almost impossible to swing the arm with any force under the water. The best weapon is a short spear. When you reach the ground you strip, put your feet in a big sinker, take the basket that has a rope for hoisting, drop over, and soon find yourself at the bottom. Then your buisness is to knock off as many oysters as you can, and pile them into the basket before you lose your wind. It is a terrible strain, but I could stand it in those days for six minutes, and I have known some men who could stay down ten; but it is a sure death in the long run. If the ground is well stocked you can get twenty or more shells, but it is all luck. When the basket is full it is hauled up, and after you come up for your wind down you go again, the sinker being hauled up with a small cord for that purpose. It was on one of these trips that I ran afoul of the animal that gave me a lasting fright. You will smile when I say it was only a star fish, but that it really was. I went down sixty feet with a rush, and, landing on the edge of a big bunch of coral, swung off into a kind of basin. The basket went ahead of me, and as I swung off to reach the bottom something seemed to spring up all around me, and I was in the arms of some kind of a monster that coiled about my body, arms and legs. I tried to scream, forgetting that I was in the water, and lost my wind. It was just as if a plant had sprouted under me and threw its vines and tendrils about me. There were thousands of them, coiling and writhing, and I thought I had landed in a nest of sea snakes. I gave the signal as soon as I could, and made a break upward, part of the creature clinging to me, while the rest, I could see was dropping to pieces. They hauled me into the boat when I reached the surface, and pulled the main part of the animal from me. It was oval, about three feet across, and the five arms seemed to divide into thousands of others. I probably landed on top of that one, which at that time was the largest I had ever seen. I afterward saw the body of one that had washed ashore on the Isthmus that must have had a spread of thirty-five feet. Their power of grasping is considerable, but touch them in a certain way and they throw off their arms in a regular showed, and are soon reduced to an oval body."

Indiana State Fair.

The managers of the coming State Fair, commencing September 25, express great encouragement from the bright prospects for success by the early opening up of the business connected therewith; the anxiety of old exhibitors to secure more space and the several applications to erect special buildings on the grounds for exhibition purposes at private cost.

The indications are such, that in order to meet the requirements, 150 new horse stalls are being made. The stables and pens for other stock remodeled and put in complete order that exhibitors and visitors may realize comfort and pleasure. The gradual growth and increased interest manifested in the State Fairs, and the kindly expressions from exhibitors who represent large manufacturing establishments at the principal fairs, the bountiful harvest now gathered, and a season of abundance in prospective, gives every reason to hope for an improvement on any former year, and the assurance that the Indiana State Fair can be made to rank first on the list of fairs, as the state is now first in the production of wheat, and second to no other state in all the requisites of human prosperity.

Arrangements are pending for special attractions during the fair in addition to the large premiums on speed.

All the state institutions at the Capital City will be prepared to receive visitors during the fair week, and this will be a rare opportunity, at reduced railroad rates, to visit the new state house, in process of construction.

A Strange Story.

Some years ago there lived in Virginia a beautiful and accomplished young lady—a member of one of the oldest and best families in the state. She was the reigning belle in the society in which she moved. In the course of time she married a young man of the highest respectability, both as regards talents and family connections. In due time they had a son born to them. They were exceedingly happy.

The lawyer, in the course of his business transactions, became some way or another entangled in a quarrel with a brother lawyer. A duel was the result. In the contest the husband was killed. The wife became insonsolable. A severe fit of sickness followed. When she recovered, the only thing to lavish the whole affections of her heart upon was her son. Her entire attention was given to him.

After a year or two she was surrounded by an immense number of admirers, and several made proposals of marriage. She denied them all. Her heart was true to her first and only love. At last, many of her admirers importuned her to marry them, offering her fortune, station and everything that would be likely to win a woman's heart, but all to no avail. She replied to them that she could not give them her hand with her affection; her heart was with the buried dead.

The widow found that these approaches were made to her so often and so earnestly that she withdrew herself from society as the only thing like quietness; but even the letters would annoy her. She was determined to get out of society entirely and seclude herself in some retired spot. She did not care where she went if she could only secure quietness and enjoy the pleasure of training and cultivating her boy's mind and have his exclusive society. He was a noble little fellow.

Well, after looking about for a place where absolute, desolate seclusion could be obtained, she be unknown, and the climate would be congenial, she determined upon Florida. So she removed to a retired spot about a mile or so from Ocala, where she found a small hut already built and suited to her requirements. She purchased it and there remained for some time, when unhapily her boy was taken sick and died, and was buried near the house. She planted an acorn near by, that was found after his death in his pocket. It has grown to be a large tree.

Alone in the world, without a soul to converse with, she fretted and pined her life away, her only consolation being in her communications with her Maker. She prayed for peace and obtained it. She had no domestic servant to wait upon her, but cooked her own meals, etc.

Occasionally she would see persons approach her little home, and not wishing to be seen, would retire to a small cave near by, where she could watch the movements of strangers until they were gone when she would come out again and take possession of her little shanty.

One day she walked into Ocala, for the purpose of obtaining some medicine at the drug store. She was closely hooded and disguised. There was one gentleman in the town, however, whom she recognized as an old suitor. She immediately left, and was lost to sight quickly. The gentleman saw the eyes; he thought he knew them; their influence in the past had kept him awake many a night. He was at first staggered at the thought that it might be she. Indeed he was almost paralyzed, for he was single and remained so for her sake. When he recovered his senses sufficiently to know what he was about, he turned into the street to look for her, but she was gone, and no one could tell him anything about her, or in what direction she had gone. He searched the country all around, but his efforts were fruitless. At last he had to give up the pursuit. He was very unhappy.

Well, the lady lived many years afterward, still staying at the same place. At last she found that her health was giving away; that the hardships she had to undergo—living in so wild and rude a condition—necessitated her making a confident of somebody, so as to obtain help. She called in the assistance of an honest quiet colored woman, Aunt Polly Fudge, who was to her some comfort and did chores for her. At last she took sick and was confined to her bed. Polly faithfully nursed her, and at a length the lady died.

She told Polly her history suppressing her real name, and said to bury her in the grave beside her darling boy, under the oak tree that she had planted near the cave, and that she was to be buried in her wedding dress—a beautiful white satin one—and on her head the wreath she wore on the occasion of her marriage. Faithful Polly attended to matters as she was told, and Mrs. Neville for that was the name the lady called herself, gave to Polly all her money, which was $4,000, and also her old clothes.

So rests within a mile or two of Ocala in one of the hammocks the last mortal remains of the poor, broken-hearted widow. The relatives and friends will never know her end or her burial place.

A Heap of Ingenuity for Ten Cents.

[Exchange.]

"Why don't you go west?" demanded the man, after telling a tramp that he had no small change, and could not respond to his appeal for aid.

"I've been out there."

"Why didn't you stay?"

"'Cause I lost my all."

"What all did you have?"

"Stranger," said the old man as he leaned back and wiped his forehead, "I went to Illinois with $6,000 in cash. I went in to raising frogs for the market. There was every show that I would clear $10,000 the first year, when a climax knocked the plump-center all in one night."

"What was it?"

"I had twenty-three thousand frogs on my farm, and every durned jumper got up and jumped over on another man's land."

"They did?"

"Did for a fact; and, as I hadn't branded a single one of them, I couldn't identify my property. That's what broke me all up, and I've come east to see about getting up a machine to scratch a hog's back—something that will permit the hog to scratch himself. If you can spare me ten cents to help me—"

He got it without further explanation.

"How many toes has a cat?" was one of the questions asked at a school examination in Paterson, N. J. No one, even the principal of the school, could answer the question. The teacher sent two lads out on a foraging expedition, and thereafter it was found that the feline has eighteen toes—ten on the front feet and eight on the hind feet. They also found that the elderly maiden lady whose pet was stolen and brought in to have its toes counted, could bounce into a school-room and make it seem like a town struck by Texas cowboys.—[Boston Post.

Beats the Corner Lot.

A hanging garden: Take a printer's towel as a basis. You may have a little trouble in securing one, as the craft usually hangs on to a specimen so long that parting with it is a little like losing an old friend. Carry it home the same as you would a pane of glass, being very careful not to bend it. Suspend it by the four corners of a bay window, and sow flax, lettuce or any other seeds you may wish to cultivate, except pumpkins. The soil is too rich for that class of vegetable. Sprinkle carefully every morning, and in a few days it will be a lovely illustration of the old saying, that nature abhors a vacuum.—[Union County Democrat.

MAKING LOVE IN THE CHOIR.

She sat on the steps of the organ loft
  Just after the second hymn;
And through nave and choir to the cool, gray spire
  The sound rose faint and dim,
As they settled themselves in the church below
  For the sermon that followed next,
And I seated myself at the alto's side
  As the parson took his text.

I marked the tender flush on her cheek,
  And the gleam of her golden hair,
The snowy kerchief 'round her neck,
  And her throat all white and bare;
A throat so white that indeed it might
  An anchorite entice;
And I faintly heard the parson's word
  As he preached of Paradise.

My arm stole gently around her waist
  Until our fingers met;
And a flitting blush made the tender flush
  Of her cheek grow deeper yet.
Snowy and fair the hand beneath,
  And brown the palm above,
And the brown closed softly over the white
  As the parson spoke of love.

Ah, who is wise when deep blue eyes
  Meet his and look coyly down?
Who would but drink, nor care to think
  Of envy's jealous frown?
'Twas but to bend till I felt her breath
  Grow warm on my cheek, and then
My lips just softly touched her own,
  As the parson said amen.
—Puck.

A LITTLE COWARD.

That was what Miss Merivale had called her that moring when she trembled and turned pale because the black mare reared with her. She begged Sir Robert to take her off, and stood in ignominious safety, while Agatha Merivale mounted Stella and rode off triumphantly down the avenue.

She was a coward. She did not deny it, and was sometimes very much ashamed of it. But no one had seemed to mind it, until Agatha Merivale came, with her bold, dark eyes and her dashing ways, her riding, and hunting; and everybody admired Agatha so much, even Sir Robert!

She almost hated Agatha! You see, until Agatha came they had been so happy at De Rossett. Little orphan Madeline Leigh had never been so happy in her life as here at the hall with sweet Lady de Rossett, who was her guardian, and her son, Sir Robert. They were so kind and good to her. They petted her and loved her so. And now Agatha had come, and for two weeks had monopolized Sir Robert and kept the house in a turmoil of gayety, and laughed at Lina, and made her life wretched.

Lina's maid reported that everybody said Sir Robert was to marry to Miss Merivale. Lina made a stern resolve that she would run away from the hall when that event took place. Run away! She would run away now! Not far though—she was too much of a coward to venture far into the world alone; but she would go away across the fields to "Aunt Margaret's," as she called Lady de Rossett's widowed sister-in-law, who lived in a quiet, comfortable house a mile away from the hall.

Mrs. Harrington was an invalid, paralyzed, and confined to her bed. She was rather a grim old lady, and most were inclined to shun her; but sweet, bright little Lina won her way into the old lady's heart, and was always welcome at the lodge.

Yes, she would run away to Aunt Margaret's, and perhaps when she was missed, Sir Robert might feel a moment's uneasiness about her. Seizing her hat and a light shawl, she flew off across the park, calling Leo, Sir Robert's pretty colley, to go with her. Lina did not like to cross the field alone, being possessed by a great terror of bulls; but with Leo she would not mind it much.

Leo was calmly taking a nap on the front portico, but he stared up and raced after her with a joyous bark. But at the little gate that led from the park into the fields, Lina was greatly disconcerted by an unexpected encounter with Sir Robert and Miss Merivale, who came laughing and talking along the path, both looking bright and handsome in the golden rays of the setting sun.

She brushed past them with a hasty "Good evening," but Sir Robert turned back to speak to her.

"Where are you going, Lina?" he asked.

"To Aunt Margaret's," she answered, not looking at him.

"Alone, Lina? Are you not afraid? If you will wait a little while, I will go with you." Sir Robert said, looking down kindly at the girl's flushed cheeks and averted eyes.

"No, thanks," Lina answered, hastily. "I will not trouble you. Leo will take care of me. And you would be late for dinner if you went with me."

"May I come for you, then, after dinner?" Sir Robert asked.

"Thanks, I'm not coming back. I shall stay all night," was the hurried answer, and Lina turned to go.

But Sir Robert detained her for a moment.

"Lina," he said, in a low, soft tone, "what makes you avoid me so, lately? What have I done to offend you?"

Lina raised her blue eyes hastily to his, for one moment, and then dropped them again.

"I have not avoided you," she said, coldly. "You have been very much occupied with—other people. There, I will not detain you."

She waved her little hand haughtily, and walked away from him. He watched the pretty, white-robed figure for a moment, and then Leo came and fawned on him.

"Leo, Leo!" called Lina's voice.

"Go, Leo," said his master, and the obedient dog trotted off down the path after the girl.

It was rather dreary at the "lodge" that evening. Mrs. Harrington was out of humor, because her agent had failed to call that day to receive £1,000 that she wished him to deposit for her. And Parkins, her nurse and housemaid, let the maid-servants all go off to a fair in the village, "where they will certainly get into mischief," Mrs. Harrington said.

But when Lina had talked to her and made her laugh a little, she forgot her grievances, and chatted away very pleasantly. At 10 o'clock she declared she had laughed till she was tired, and Lina must give her her drops and let her go to sleep.

"There! the spoon in gone. Where can Parkins have put it! Child, would you mind running down into the pantry and bringing me a spoon? I would ring for Parkins, but she told me she wanted to get up some muslins this evening, and would come up as soon as she had finished."

Lina did not altogether like to pass down the long stair and silent entries leading to the pantry, but she went, and Leo trotted after her. As she stood in the pantry, looking round for spoons with no light but a faint gleam from the hall lamp, a sound of voices caught her ear.

The pantry was on the ground floor, its iron-bound, shuttered window looking into the garden. The sound was outside the window, and Lina paused to listen. The first word that caught her ear startled her.

"A thousand pounds, and all the old woman's jewelry and plate!" said a man's voice, in a husky undertone.

"Yes," was the reply, in a woman's voice—the voice, Lina knew, of Parkins, Mrs. Harrington's model, soft-voiced, lady-like nurse: "and there won't be any trouble about it, because I have let the women go away to stay all night, and sent the gardener on a fool's errand to missus' brother's, twenty miles off."

"But this girl that came to-night—what about her?" asked the man.

"Oh, she will go to her home presently, and stay there if she is wise. She'd be no hindrance, anyway—a silly timid little thing. But its as well to let her get out of the way," said Parkins, coolly.

"But see here, Molly, why not do it now? Then we'll have more time to get away before daylight," said the man.

"I tell you its not safe before eleven o'clock," Parkins replied positively. "People may come in. Sir Robert don't like her out of his sight long; and that idiotic young Marsden may come mooning in. Wait till half-past 11, and the west door here will open. And, Jim, look here, when you get this swag, you are to take me with you—your wife, mind."

The voices grew fainter. Evidently the speakers were moving away from the house. But Lina had heard enough. Sick with terror she leaned against the pantry wall a moment, and tried to think. What did it all mean? Robbery, murder! And no help near. Her first instinct was to fly out of the house and across the field to the hall. But her absence would be instantly discovered, she knew, and then poor Aunt Margaret would be alone with these wretches. No, she must not go—but to stand here idle would do no good. She flew like a bird along the halls and up stairs, Leo pacing by her side. At Aunt Margaret's door she paused, and a sudden thought came to her. She would send Leo home for help.

"Where is the spoon, child? How long you stayed. Good heavens! what is the matter?" cried the old lady as she saw the girl's terrified face. Lina began some evasive answer, but instantly remembered that Aunt Margaret must be told the whole story, or nothing could be done to save her. She did tell it, and Aunt Margaret listened in silent consternation, and then burst out impetuously with:

"Good heavens, child! Why don't you run right home?"

"Because I knew Parkins would be up here in a few minutes and find I was gone, and then—"

"Ah, well. So you stayed to save the old woman if you could. What are you doing, child? Why don't you lock the door and pile things against it? Good God! If I was just able to rise out of this bed!"

But Lina did not speak for a moment. She had found a pencil and was rapidly writing a few words. When she had finished—

"Now," she said, "when Parkins comes tell her I am to sleep on her couch here in your room, and she must go somewhere else. I will be back in a moment. Leo!"

Out of the room she darted, and down to the hall door, which she unbarred and passed through. Then, kneeling in the shadow of a pillar on the portico she tied the knot tightly in her handkerchief round Leo's neck.

She put her arms round his neck after that, kissed his forehead, and a half sob escaped her.

"Is that you, miss?" said a smooth voice from the hall. "Why, whatever are you doing in the dark there?"

Lina sprang up as if she had been shot.

"I am sending the dog home," she said, speaking quietly though the throbs of her heart shook her whole frame. "He is restless here without his master. Go home, Leo—straight home, sir!"

The dog, with one farewell lick of her hand, bounded down the steps and vanished in the dewy darkness of the summer night.

"Oh, God! let him go safely and swiftly!" prayed the girl in her heart.

Then she went in and helped Parkins bar the door, and they went together up stairs.

Aunt Margaret lay very quietly on her pillow, but with her black eyes gleaming.

"Parkins," she said steadily, as they entered, "Miss Leigh is kind enough to offer to stay with me here to-night. She will sleep on your couch, and you, my poor soul, can go and get a good night's rest in another room."

Parkins was silent for one instant, and then began a series of smooth polite expostulations which no one would heed, and finally the civil nurse prepared the couch for Lina and took herself off observing sweetly:

"If Miss Leigh will leave the door ajar, I can hear a call from this room, and will come instantly."

"Thanks, Parkins, but I hope I shall not have to call you," said Lina, speaking as sweetly as Parkins herself.

Then as she glided to the door as soon as it was closed, she turned, with a face of dismay, and whispered:

"The key is gone! She took it when she was fidgeting in and out with the sheets and pillows."

"There is a bolt besides," Aunt Margaret answered.

Lina gave a sigh of relief as she slipped the bolt into the groove, and felt that she had some little protection against the enemy.

"Now, child," Aunt Margaret said, "can you use a pistol?"

"I never touched one in my life," said the "little coward." But if I had one now I would try."

"Very well. Take my safe key—it is under my pillow—and unlock the safe. They are just as my husband left them a year ago, but Robert looked at them a few days ago and said they were all right. That is it. Put one of them on the foot of the bed, and if those wretches come, try, my dear, to use it. Now put the other here, by my left hand. Thank God! I can use that a little. Now, what are you doing? Oh, yes; pile up all you can against the door. There, you can't move anything else. Now, come here, little girl, kneel down by me, and let's say our prayers together."

With the old lady's thin, pallid hand clasped tightly in her two cold, trembling little ones, Lina knelt down there, and burying her face in the pillow, tried to pray.

Her petition was not a very coherent one; it was only a wild, passionate cry for pity and help, and meantime she was listening, with every nerve strained, for sounds from the outside. A lamp burned in the room. On the mantlepiece a softly ticking clock marked the slow minutes. No other sound broke the stillness.

Presently a sob shook the girl's figure. She was thinking of Sir Robert and his tender care over her.

Oh, if she had not been so wayward and proud this evening, all would have been well. He would have come for her, they would have been safe.

But surely, surely, he would come yet.

He could not fail to find the note, and she knew he would come to save her. But yet horrible doubts came to her as to whether the note would reach him. It might be lost, or Leo might wander about and not get home until it was too late.

Too late! Lina shuddered and sobbed again as she thought what that might mean. Oh, it was hard to think of dying so helplessly, so horribly, with help so near.

The long minutes crept on, and no sound came until 11 o'clock had passed. The little clock softly chimed the half hour. Then, in a few moments, came a sound of stealing footsteps in the passage, and the knob of the door was softly turned.

Breathless silence in the room. Then a gentle tap at the door. Lina clasped Aunt Margaret's hand convulsively, and the old lady spoke.

"What is that?" she asked, steadily.

"It is me, Parkins, ma'am. Would you ask Miss Leigh if she will kindly open the door? I have the toothache, and want some laudanum."

"What a devil it is!" whispered Aunt Margaret. Then aloud: "Go down stairs and get something, Parkins. I cannot trouble Miss Leigh."

Lina hoped that Parkins would urge the point a little. Anything to prolong the parley and gain time.

But a whisper in the passage followed, and then a man's voice:

"Ladies, there's no use making a row. Just open the door peacefully, and you shan't be hurt. We'll break it down if you don't."

"What do you want?" Lina asked, hoping to gain a little time. A new and gruff voice answered insolently:

"You know well enough what we want, miss. We wants the thousand pounds and the diamonds, and we mean to have them. So don't be a fool, but just open the door peacefully, or you'll be sorry."

Lina sprang to her feet and seized the pistol. A flood of color rushed to her cheek and brow. She had been insulted and threatened, and indignation overpowered terror. She went toward the door and called out, quickly and clearly:

"You're not coming in. I have sent for help, and Sir Robert and his men will be here directly. I am armed and if you do break the door down I will shoot you like a dog."

A moment's silence followed, then a coarse laugh, and—

"All gammon. She hadn't no one to send. Break the door down," in Parkins' voice; and heavy blows began to fall upon the door. It trembled and cracked beneath the battery. A panel broke and a man's hand was thrust in; the whole door seemed about to fall when—bang! bang! came two reports from Lina's pistol, and a couple of bullets crashed through the panels, and the besiegers paused abruptly.

"Go away instantly!" called the girl's clear voice, "or I will fire again."

"One more rush, mate, and we are in," yelled the gruff voice outside.

What followed was wild tumult and confusion, the crash of breaking panels and bolts, the fall of the door and the furniture Lina had piled against it, shot after shot from Lina's pistol, a yell of pain and rage from both of them. The door was down. One of the men was in the room. Lina had fired her last shot, and running to the bed snatched Aunt Margaret's pistol, and turned to face the enemy. Suddenly came a wild shriek from Parkins—then a voice calling: Lina! Lina! I am coming!" and Sir Robert de Rossett hurled himself bodily upon the ruffian outside the door, prostrated him, and sprang into the room over his body. And this is what he saw: "Madeline Leigh, the "little coward," with blazing eyes and scarlet cheeks, and a pistol in her hand, standing unflinchingly between Aunt Margaret and a burly ruffian; and Aunt Margaret herself, who had not turned in her bed for a year, standing on her feet on the floor. Two seconds changed the aspect of affairs. After that the burglar sprawled senseless on the floor. Aunt Margaret sank back on her bed with a wild "Thank God!" and the little heroine of the scene lay in Sir Robert's arms in a dead faint.

"Oh, Robert, why didn't you come sooner?"

"Don't you know I came as soon as I found your note?" he said. "Leo went to my room, and I found him there when I left the drawing-room, after 11 o'clock."

"Where are those dreadful men?" Lina asked, raising her head dizzily and looking with a shudder.

"Never mind them, dear. They were taken by the men who followed me. My brave little darling! What a heroine you are!"

Two months later, when Parkins and the two men were brought to trial, Aunt Margaret walked into the witness box and gave her testimony with grim directness and self-possession. Lina gave hers with much trembling and some tears; but she looked intensely lovely, and no one wondered that Sir Robert was going to marry her.

The crowd around the door gave three cheers as she left the court-room, walking between Sir Robert and his mother, and three more for Robert, and then three more for Leo, who followed them.

And Aunt Margaret's wedding present to Lina was the thousand pounds and the diamonds that had been saved by the courage of "the little coward."

A NEW CATTLE PLAGUE.

Remarkably Fatal Disease Attacking the Cattle in Pennsylvania.

Boston Herald.

A new and mysterious disease has broken out among the cattle in some sections of Pennsylvania. They have been known to drop dead fifteen minutes after they were first attacked.

Two cows were driven to pasture early in the morning. They were apparently well, but in twenty minutes they dropped dead. The rest of the herd commenced bellowing and pawing the earth, and prancing about the dead carcasses that were rapidly swelling. In a short time six more of the same drove were dead. The owner had their swollen bodies carefully limed and buried in the woods. In this way some 35 head of cattle perished on different adjoining farms. Some died in the stables. One farmer found two cows dead in the barnyard. When the cattle are first attacked they refuse to eat or drink. They seem to be attacked with a chill, and breathing becomes difficult. Some moan and appear to be in great pain. In a short time they lie down and die in great agony. Their bodies swell out of proportion, and a very foul odor is emitted. A hasty examination of one of the bodies shows that the blood of the dead animal turns completely black. A veterinary surgeon has been kept very busy for the past few days, and at present is working day and night. He says the disease starts in the head, and he has become deathly sick while boring the horns of sick cattle. He says that the cows are dying from apoplexy of the spleen, and his opinion is concurred in by others, who are busily engaged in the work of attending to the various herds now in quarantine. The spleen of some of the dead carcasses is found to be quite putrid. The bodies of dead animals are very poisonous, and one man has already died from lockjaw and blood poisoning. He undertook to skin a carcass for its hide, and also to perform a post mortem. Some of the poison of the animal got into his system through a wound on his hand, and in a few hours his entire system was poisoned. His body, arms and limbs became frightfully swollen and covered with black blotches. He was then attacked with lockjaw, and died in terrible agony. Two others who assisted him narrowly escaped death. Their blotches were burned with caustic. Since then no attempts have been made to skin animals or examine them. They are buried in a hurry, and the balance of the herd quarantined. All barnyards and stables are being thoroughly cleansed, and farmers are quickly quarantining their cattle. The disease is contagious, and said to be worse than rinderpest or pleuro-pnemonia.

Old Style Jersey Justice.

Trenton Gazette.

Some years ago a distinguished member of the New York bar was retained on one occasion by a friend, also a New Yorker, to attend to a complaint made against him before a New Jersey Justice for an alleged assault and battery upon one of the residents of the "old Jersey State."

"I appear for the prisoner," said the counselor to the modern Dogberry.

"You abbears for de bris'ner, do you? And who den be you?" interrupted the Justice, eyeing him from head to foot with marked curiosity. "I ton't knows you. Vair be's you come from and vot's yer name?"

The counselor modestly gave his name, and said: "I am a member of the New York bar."

"Vell, den," replied the Justice, "you gan't bractis in dis here gort."

"I am a counselor of the Supreme Court of the State of New York," reiterated the attorney.

"Dot makes not'ing tifferent," said the inveterate Justice.

"Well, then," said the baffled lawyer, "suppose I show to your Honor that I am a counselor of the Supreme Court of the United States?"

"It don't make a pit better," replied he of the ermine, "you ain't a gounselor von de State of New Jersey, und you gan't bractis in dish gort."

On another occasion the same dignitary said to a jury who had been listening to a "trial" before him of an unfortunate fellow for some offence against the State:

"Shentlemens of der shoory, shtand up; dis here vellow, der bris'ner at de par, says he ish von New York. Now, I dink he pes a putcher-boy, und if he ish a putcher-poy he trives der pigs troo de shtreets, und ven he trives der pigs, he kits oder beeple's pigs mit dem vot he haf pefore. Dot's wot I calls pig-shtealin'. Now, shentlemens, if de vellow shteals pigs in New York, I t'ink he vill shteal a gow in Jersey, and derevore I t'ink he be a gow t'ief, und your shudgement 'all be kilty. Vot you shall say, shentlemens of de shoory?—ish he kilty, ober not kilty? If you say he ish kilty, I sends him to de Shtate Brisen, mit two years."

And he did send him.

Some Veracious Stories.

A Georgia negro, while fishing, fastened his line to his leg for safety. He was soon seen to go overboard, and when his body and the fish were recovered it took the coroner two days to determine whether the negro drowned the fish or the fish drowned the negro.

A small red squirrel attempted to jump from one tree to another as Wm. Miles, of New Chester, Pa., drew on him. The squirrel fell into the Brandywine. It hardly touched the water when several bass came to the surface and, pulling the squirrel under, drowned it.

Silas Hutchinson, of Pocopsin township, Pa., relates as a fact that he saw one of his cows come up suddenly out of the Brandywine, where she had gone to cool, and as she ascended the river bank a black bass about eighteen inches long hung to one of her teats. Finding itself out of water it let go and and wiggled back into the stream.

A big pickerel, hooked by J. F. Wintrop, of Hydetown, Pa., lay so quiet that it was a query with him whether he had a fish or a snag. After trying to worry it without success, a happy thought struck him. Taking the fish-line in his teeth, he established telephonic communication, and yelling "Hello!" at the top of his lungs, the fish darted like a shot, and was so active that it was with difficulty secured. It weighed five pounds.

A Wyoming man saw a Texas steer standing on the railroad track, and knowing that the express train was due tried to induce the beast to move. Several pieces of board thrown at the ferocious monster failed to move it, until at last, as the train rushed down the track at lightning speed, he seized the steer by the tail and twisted it like a wet towel. At this moment the train struck them both, and the result was stupendous. The steer was found two days afterward browsing peacefully in a corn field, with two driving wheels hung on its horns. No trace of either the man or the engine has been heard of since.

The bossest snake story we ever heard of has just come to light in Twiggs, as follows: A few days since, while a certain farmer was cleaning out this fence corners, a huge rattlesnake struck at him, but, missing the intended victim, sunk its poisonous fangs deep into the hoe handle which the man held in his hands. In less time than it takes to write it, the handle was swollen to such an extent that it burst the eye of the hoe and split into a thousand pieces. With the aid of two crowbars and an old army musket the snake was killed. The farmer skinned it, and now uses the hide for a wallet, in which he carries corn to his hogs. The "wallet" will hold three pecks and two quarts of shelled corn. Surely Twiggs deserves the belt.

The Sleeping Woman of Paris.

London Daily News.

A case which is exciting great interest in the Paris medical world is that of a young woman who has been for the last three months an inmate of the Beaujon Hospital. She was found by the police asleep and apparently tipsy, on a seat in one of the avenues leading to the Bois de Boulogne; but, as after remaining for two or three hours at the Police station she did not give any signs of returning animation, she was taken to the Beaujon Hospital. The resident physician found that she was enceinte and adopted several mild measures for awakening her from her lethargy. All of these proved ineffectual, and several other medical men, including Dr. Charcot, were called in. Dr. Charcot was of opinion that the best remedy would be a series of cold douches; but as it was impossible in her condition to apply this, nothing remained but to await the course of events. So the time passed, the patient showing no signs of life except a heavy breathing, but nourishment was administered to her by artificial means.

About the middle of last month, when she had been for eight weeks in a comatose condition, she gave birth to a still-born child, but this did not have the effect of bringing her back to animation, and after a fornight's interval the douches were tried. These seem likely to be successful, for though she can not yet speak she is beginning to express by signs that she understands what is said to her, and can take nourishment in the ordinary way. The doctors hope that in the course of a few days she will be able to explain the mystery, for there is no means of getting at her identity. She has no papers upon her, but a purse containing a few francs, some religious coins and a chaplet. The widest publicity has been given to the case, and several women whose daughters are missing have come to the Hospital in the expectation of recognizing her. One or two have at first believed that she was their daughter, but subsequent inquiries have proved them to be mistaken.

The Business-Like Conduct of a Duel.

Detroit Free Press.

It is on record in this state that a Michigan editor was once engaged to fight a duel. The affair occurred twenty-five years ago, and was brought about by the journalist making several vicious attacks upon the honor and honesty of a member of the legislature. The Solon first tried the usual way of getting even by buying a horsewhip and hunting the editor, but when he had found him he was knocked down and rolled in the mud. He then sent a formal challenge, and as the editor opened the letter he turned to his two compositors and said:

"Boys, how much matter have you got up for the first page?"

"Three columns," replied the foreman, after measuring up the galleys.

"And we need five. You'll have it all up by noon to-morrow, and by Wednesday night all the insid will be up. Then I'll wet down the paper and make up, and while you are working off the outside I'll run out and shoot old Perkins, who has sent me a challenge."

He sent a formal acceptance, named rifiles as weapons, appointed the rendezvous within thirty rods of the office, and then began to scratch out copy. When the hour arrived, he was making up the forms, having got a little behind the program, and by and by his second came in at the back door and said:

"We've been waiting for you all of twenty minutes."

"But I'm busy."

"This is no time to be busy; Perkins is all ready."

"Hang the luck!" growled the editor, as he filled out the column and flung down his rule. "That's just like Perkins—he wants to throw publication day. Come on; I'll fill him up!"

The editor seized his gun, and hatless and coatless, he set out on a lope for the spot. Perkins saw him coming in that fashion, and his knees weakened and his chin dropped, and though the editor yelled for him to hold on a minute, he bolted over the fence and did not come out of the woods until he was six miles away.

A Queer Mode of Self-Defence.

Popular Science Monthly.

Oddest of all defensive methods is that of snapping off the tail. The blind worm or slow worm, is a little snake-like lizard common in the world. When alarmed it contracts its muscles in such a manner and degree as to break its tail off at a considerable distance from the end. But how can this aid it? The detached tail then dances about very lively, holding the attention of the offender, while the lizard himself slinks away. And for a considerable time the tail retains its capability of twisting and jumping every time it is struck. The lizard will then grow another tail, so as to be prepared for another adventure. There are other lizards which have a similar power, though in a less degree.

How a woman can ever again respect her husband after having seen him arrayed in nothing much but a shirt and a night-cap, prowling around a bed-room with a wet-towel and spilling three yards of wall-paper for every mosquito he kills, is one of those social mysteries which the future has yet to reveal.

Caramels and Aloes.—They were courting. "What makes the stars so dim to-night?" she said, softly. "Your eyes are so much brighter," he whispered, pressing her hand. They are married now. "I wonder how many telegraph poles it would take to reach the stars from here?" she said, musingly. "One, if it was long enough," he growled. "Why don't you talk common sense?"

Mr. Snoggs, entering the tin-shop, is nearly paralysed at discovering one of the apprentices hopping about on a hot stove, but making no attempt to jump off. "Criminy jimminy!" cries Snoggs to the boss, "what's that boy doing on that stove?" "O," says the boss, "that's nothing; he's only practicing. After he's been getting around on that stove for a few days he'll be all right for work on a tin roof.

"What's your business?" asked the magistrate eyeing the prisoner with a six-months'-in-the-penitentiary expression. "When I'm sober, Judge, I make my money out of real estate movements," meekly answered the victim of the flowing bowl. "Do you mean to say that you are in the street-cleaning department?" "No, your Honor, I do not; I mean to say that I'm a gravedigger.

A French photographer boasts of having been able to catch the impression of a flying bird. There is nothing at all wonderful about that. An Austin man who has no scientific attainments whatever, without any effort on his part, caught the impression of a flying bat. It was a very clear impression. The flying bat was a brick-bat. He was offering a resolution at a ward meeting when the accident occurred.

"What Ail's This Heart of Mine?" is the heading of a story that is going the rounds of the papers. We suppose he saw his girl out riding with another fellow. There is nothing makes the heart get up and pound ribs and carom on the other vital parts, and jump up and down like a churn-dasher, and get tired and keep so still you think it has stopped beating forever, as to see your girl out riding with another fellow, we are told.

Having Fun With a Deaf and Dumb Man.

Whitehall Times.

Quietly entering a barber shop, the stranger removed his hat and coat, and taking a card from his pocket, wrote on it:

"I want to be shaved."

A barber stepping forward, read the card, and pointing to a chair, said to his brother artists:

"Deaf as a brass kettle, and dumb as an oyster."

The man straightened himself out in the chair, when the manipulator began lathering his face.

"This deaf cuss has a cheek like a stone wall," he said, when a general laugh followed.

"Stick a pin in him and see if he is entirely dumb" said another.

The victim remaining undisturbed, the following shots were fired at him by the delighted tonsorial artists:

"He needs a shampoo; his head is dirtier than a cesspool."

"Shave him with a stool leg; don't spoil your razor on that stubble."

"Gracious! what a breath. It smells like a Dutch band of music."

"He ought to rent that nose for a locomotive headlight," etc., etc., etc.

While all these complimentary allusions were flying about him the operation of shaving was finished, and the man arose, put on his coat, and then turning to the astonished barber, said:

"How much for the shave and compliments?"

"I—I—I—," gasped the astonished man, "Oh, nothing—nothing—call again—excuse"—and as the stranger left the shop the discomfited barbers swore they would never believe in a deaf and dumb man again, until they had first fired a ten-pound cannon about his ears.

He Longed for Watermelon.

Virginia City Enterprise.

Duckwater Jim, a battered and tattered Piute, who claims to be forty-second cousin of Captain Sam, has of late taken a good deal of interest in things beyond this vale of tears. He likes to hear about Heaven, "the place of the long rest," as he calls it. Cocking his old and battered plug hat on one side, and almost closing his eyes in his effort to obtain a realizing sense of this very desirable place of rest, Jim says: "White man up there no more wuk um mine—no more run um railroad?"

"No, Jim, no; no more work at all."

"What white man do?"

Well, Jim, play all the time on a big golden harp."

"And Injun, what he do?"

"Well, he will have a big harp, all same as the white man."

"Guess not," says Jim, shaking his head dubiously. "Ingun mayte play little on jewsharp. But what you think 'bout um catch plenty watermelon?" and Jim opened wide both his eyes and looked as though much depended on a favorable answer to the question.

Colorado Letter.

In Camp—Head-waters of San Juan River, Rio Grande, Colorado, August 12, [illegible]

DEAR EDITOR:—On the 24th of June, I, in company with Wm. P. Waldo, formerly of Indianapolis, left Denver for this section of Colorado. To reach here we take the Denver & Rio Grande railroad to Del Norte, 290 miles distant in a south-westerly direction, passing en-route the Sangre-de-Christo range of mountains at Veta Pass, remarkable for its short and steep grades. Lying at the eastern slope of the range is the town of La Veta, 6,900 feet elevation. The distance to the summit being 14½ miles, and two engines are brought into use to pull us up the steep ascent, the maximum grade being 217 feet per mile; going around the mountain the mule shoe curve is passed, said to be the shortest curve of any railroad in the world, being only 30 degrees of 193 feet radius. Beyond this curve at the point of turning the climb-dump mountain, the track looks down over its own line from a height of 400 feet; finally we reach the summit. The trip is ofttimes made through and above the clouds. The altitude at the summit is 9339 feet, or, 1094 feet higher than Sherman on the U. P. R. R., and the third in height in the world. We take a look at our surroundings from our high position. To the eastward lies the La Veta, to the right of which you see the Spanish Peaks, and in the back-ground the broad plains stretching away in the dim haze of the distance. To the North an awful chasm 740 feet deep, beyond rises Veta mountains, 11612 feet. Looking West we see Mount Blanca, the heighest peak in the Rocky Mountain Range, being 14-463 feet above the sea. To the South and West may be seen San Louis Park watered by the Rio Grande and its tributaries, with lofty mountains in the back-ground. Passing down our train goes through Fort Garland, now occupied by a small number of soldiers, and on to Alamosa, where we change cars for Del Norte, the present terminus of the railroad in this direction. At this point our "grub," tools, etc., are hauled up to Summitville by freight wagons, distance 27 miles. It was our misfortune to get into the hands of Mexican freighters, and three days was consumed in making the trip. The steep ascents making it necessary to frequently double teams, the road being muddy too from recent rains, and the continuous melting of the snow from above. Our Greaser friends could talk but little American, but when it came to whipping the mules and Bronchoes while going up steep grades, the American "cuss words," came out plain and distinct, winding up with a kind of Indiana whoop, that made the old Rockies ring.

Reaching Summitville we visit the celebrated Bonanza mines, and stamp mills of Judge Bowen, said to be the richest in all Colorado. It is said that the Judge after spending all the money he had in the world prospecting, and was on the "Ragged Edge" made the strike of the mine, which has since made him famous. The ore is of the free milling kind, and rich in gold. He has 54 stamps going continually. A block house in which to keep his treasures, where a regular kind of military guard will be on duty day and night. The Judge is a noble, generous hearted man, beloved by all who know him, and is prominently spoken of for United States Senator.

His Superintendent of the mine, Mr. Montrose, showed us every attention, inviting us up to visit the mines etc. Since then being over at the town, I thought I would like a specimen of ore, of a late strike in the great Bonanza. So I went to "Mr. Pete" Barclay, and politely asked him for a small specimen of ore. He replied, "that he didn't have such a thing about him." I suggested that I could find one at the ore-house, he again replied that "he did not know anything about specimens," and turned away from me. I turned and walked away thinking of the many Christian virtues, and wondering what kind of a specimen of humanity I had struck in Mr. Barclay, etc

At this point our effects are lashed on the backs of three Burro's, and packed over a trail to our present camp, eight miles. People may talk of the owlish look of the Burro, but he has more sense than he gets credit for; to see how careful they would step going down steep places, how he would pass around trees, so the pack would not strike them, and how careful he would feel his way through mud-holes, for fear of getting stuck, and his patience with all, impressed my mind with the idea that his judgement in regard to his avocation in life was good, and that they are almost indispensable in climbing around the mountains is acknowledged by all, for they will go nearly every place that man may go, even to walking a log. but why they consider greased gunny sacks, bacon-rinds, and thistles, such a dainty feast, is beyond my comprehension.

Our trail wound around the mountains of the "Continental Divide," down into the canyon, and head-waters of the San Juan River, at the source of which stands Bald Headed San Juan Peak, towering up over 14,000 feet. As we near our camp the trail finds its way into an old Government road that leads from Alamosa to Pagosa Springs, or what used to be known as Fort Lewis, over which supplies, etc, used to be taken to the Fort. It is somewhat out of repair now, and but little used.

My partner having a claim way up the mountain side, over 2,000 feet above the river, we pitch our tent there and build us a log cabin; pluck some fresh Colorado feathers, and are at home—to see our friends when not at work. The view from our cabin is one of the wildest imaginable. The mountains are thrown up in a kind of tunnel shape, the sides sloping down at an average of about 45 degrees, the summits looking down upon the bottom of the gorge from 3,500 to 4,000 feet, the bottom being cut through by the narrow rocky canyon of the river. Four peaks are in view that are all above 13000 feet. One looks so much like the "crater" of an extinct volcano that it has been called by that name. Large masses of snow are seen lying away up along their sides, and lower down are forests of pine, spruce and hemlock. Within the scope of our vision may be found bears, mountain lions, wolverines, wild cats, deer and other animals peculiar to this region of mountains. Only the other day a prospector went up towards the crater, leaving his burro and young colt in the timber. On his return the young burro was gone, only the rope to which he was tied being left. A mountain lion had come and taken the little fellow, hitting the mother over the head for interfering, as is supposed, with his business.

Within this view may be seen some of the most varied and remarkable cloud scenes that the imagination could conjure. Sometimes they sink down, tumble around the peaks, leaving them white with fresh snow, while in the canyon below there is a mild, summer-like shower. Sometimes they are wafted up the valley of the river, and plunging into the canyon below us find their way up to our tunnel, when they diverge in every direction, oftimes completely enveloping us, and shutting out our view entirely. Twice have we witnessed the most beautiful double rainbow, when it was raining in the canyon below us, the bow just crowning the top of a lofty peak, and running down the slope of the mountain side, tinging rocks, woods and streams with all of its beautiful colors brought out in strong relief.

The slopes of the mountains are now covered with the most beautiful flowers, of every tint and color, many of the varieties being unknown in lower altitudes.

I was out gathering specimens of flowers to press, the other day, when out of the tall weeds not more than twenty-five yards away from me, I saw a Mountain Lion skulking away. In an open space, near the timber he stepped and took a deliberate look at me, and then disappeared. I pulled out my Smith & Wesson, 38 caliber, but I did not feel like tackling his majesty, and just stood and looked at him go, and felt thankful at his going.

Payson Springs, 18 miles southwest of us, is celebrated for its mineral waters, and is greatly reverenced by the Indians as "Big Medicine Waters," many of them making annual journeys to drink and bathe in the waters. Just now a number of the Ute Tribe are camped there, the Bucks spending much of their time hunting over the mountains. Only a few days ago a Mr. Byrne of our camp while out hunting for deer met one of them in a lonely place, they exchanged the compliments of the day, watched the movements of each other closely, then separated and went their respective ways.

Our cabin is about 11,000 feet altitude, on one of the San Juan mountains, among the most lofty peaks and what is sometimes called the "Dome of the Continent" from the fact that the streams running down the slopes of these mountains, flow to all points of the compass, finding their way out through deep narrow canyons into the Rio Grande river on the east, and thence to the Gulf of Mexico; and into the San Juan river on the west, and on to the Gulf of California.

Our camp is a new one, and while no rich strikes have been made, some very promising prospects have been opened up, some good assays have been had, that seem to indicate a rich yield after being more fully developed. The mines in this section nearly all carry gold making them more desirable, and then the ore is generally the free milling kind, and much less expensive in treatment.

I am no Pluto, but if my Friends were here, I could lead them up on top of the high mountains west of us and show them the valley of the San Juan, most beautiful to look upon, but I could not give it to them, for it is already taken by Ranchmen. I could point out to them Pagosa Peak not far distant, away to the northwest could show them the Uncompahgre Peak in the Ute Indian reservation; to the west the Needle Mountains, and peak after peak as far as the eye could carry into Utah and New Mexico. I could then lead them down into one of the narrowest, deepest and rockiest of canyons, where the waters in their seeming desire to be free, go dashing and foaming through the narrow gorge, with here and there a cascade leaping from crag to crag down the side of a mountain, fed by melting snow hundreds of feet above

I could show them the "Home of Bruin" as nature has fixed it for him; could lead them by clear streams where the Speckled Beauties are plenty, and a Nimrod with a few grasshoppers could soon have all he desired. And if they could but tarry a few days I will guarrantee that they may have the experience of a hail or snow storm in August, and that they may hear the loudest peals of thunder, as they vibrate from peak to peak in a continuous roll that is awfully grand to listen to.

Very Fast Love-Making.

Galveston News.

Oconomowoc, the fashionable resort in Wisconsin, had among its guests, until a few weeks ago, a little Milwaukee beauty of 17 years, and a young Apollo in the person of a Texas youth. The maid and man met for the first time during a picnic of archers, and it is averred that within three hours after their presentation to each other they were engaged to be married. The ranchero, an exceedingly happy youth, bought a pair of ponies for his sweetheart that afternoon, and in order to secure a boat to suit him, purchased one outright that the girl might enjoy a sail on the lake. Though they waltzed on the piazza until after midnight, they were up with the lark to carry on what the guests thought to be the fastest love making on record. But Psyche's wings were to be singed ere midday, and Cupid was to tread upon a thorn at exactly 12:23 p. m. At that time the train from Milwaukee brought an excited matron who arrived just in time to prevent the marriage of the lovers The unsuspecting doves were getting into a barouche to drive to the parson's when the girl's mother came down upon them like an Iowa cyclone. A friend had telegraphed to mamma on the evening of the dashing courtship, and she hurried to Oconomowoc by the first train. That afternoon firm mother and sobbing daughter boarded a car for home, while the ranchero stood upon the platform and blew a kiss and a cloud of cigarette smoke in their wake.

In Bayou Chicot, La., a full grown wild cat leaped upon Mrs. Griffith Thompson, fastening his teeth in her arm. She grasped the savage beast by the throat and held it until it was choked to death, although it was biting and scratching her all the time.

Farm and Workshop Notes.

Sorghum, as a sugar-yielding plant was introduced into the United States in 1854.

Twenty-three counties in Northern Texas will raise 200,000 bales of cotton this year.

Cork trees are now growing from seed imported into California from Spain in 1862

Mrs. L G. Coburn, a lady of San Antonio, Tex., has 40,000 silk worms at work in her yard.

Rain upon cut and curing clover is very detrimental, more so than upon any other variety of hay.

The Huntsville (Ala.) Cottonseed-oil Mills are shipping hundreds of tons of cottonseed meal to Germany.

Since the new dog law went into effect in Indiana there has been a revival of the sheep industry in most counties in the State.

C. B Harwood, of Davidson county, Tennessee, had a high-grade Jersey, thirteen months and seven days old, to drop a fine heifer calf.

French people are skilled agriculturists, as farming is taught practically and theoretically in 27,000 out of 34,000 Public Schools in the country.

President Chadbourne, of the Massachusetts Agricultural College, remarks that the moment a man stops a good work on account of criticism "he is killed as quick as frost kills a bean."

Unless an orchard is designed for commercial purposes there is no special advantage in setting out all the trees at once. It is better in many respects to plant the trees at different periods.

Griffin, Ga., has the largest peach orchard in the South, containing 50,000 trees, and covering most of 600 acres. On the same farm are 4,000 grafted apple trees and 5,000 pear trees.

The United States is fast becoming, if it has not already become, the first wool producing country in the world. If it is second, it is second only to Australia, of which wool is the largest product.

The great source of fertility is the atmosphere, and if we would avail ourselves of it, we must have our soils in a condition favorable to the deposit by the atmosphere of its fertilizing properties.

Horses are sociable animals, particularly so in the case of young horses. They thrive best in the society of others, hence the the advantage of pasturing several in one field when practicable.

An Iowa paper complains that the more creameries there are in that State the less butter there is in the home market, and the higher the price in the Eastern markets and is sent out of the State.

The real secret of keeping butter is in the manufacturing of a good article, giving it the proper proportion of salt; if all right to start with it will keep, unless put in improper vessels and kept where it is not cool.

Over $8,000,000 worth of cottonseed meal is imported into Great Britain annually to feed cattle, and the London Agricultural Gazette styles it "the very best food imported, and by its use English grazers can compete with the American."

Horses slobber from eating clover. This is annoying, especially in the driving horses, but the remedy is very simple and easy at hand, consisting of a head of cabbage fed to the horse just before using him for work or driving. It is cheap and effective.

If every farmer would keep a record of the number of eggs laid, chickens hatched and those sold or eaten each year, they would form the basis of most interesting statistics, and be a matter of surprise to every one as to the value represented by them in money.

The appropriations for the National Department of Agriculture amount to nearly $600,000 What becomes of it? The annual crop reports have little value as they come to us nearly six months old, and are of no more interest than any other fact of ancient history.

A correspondent of the Country Gentleman says: "Having several valuable young pear trees scratched by cats, and being told that pine tar was a reliable remedy for all vegetable wounds, I applied a coat to the affected parts. The result is, I have more experience and less trees."

Religious Intelligence.

Canon Farrar says the Salvation Army is composed of rowdy Christians.

The Christian Union says that "Mr. Beecher promises to be a radical till he dies."

Among Presbyterian clergymen there are over 600 who wear the title of D. D.

A slab from Plymouth Rock is to be set in the inside wall of Pilgrim Church, Harlem, New York.

The drift of theological discussion in the last few months has directed itself to St. Paul and to all that concerns his writings.

There is a certain number of men in every congregation who are so visibly affected by the sermon that they always want to leave just before the contribution is taken up.

A tract which is being distributed by the Japanese says: "Christianity is spreading like fire on a great plain, so that in capital and country there is no place where it is not preached."

The Methodist expresses the belief unless Methodists put some of their wealth into their colleges, Methodists may as well prepare to meet the ghost of John Wesley at a not distant Philippi.

A negro congregation at Austin, Texas, thought their pastor had their color in mind when he frequently spoke of "the powers of darkness," and requested him to stop such talk or resign.

American bees make $3 000 000 worth of honey a year while the whole amount given to foreign missions falls short of $2,500,000. In the matter of behavior the little busy bee puts our Christian beliver to shame.

From the Rev. Mr. Jackson's sermon on faith, in Boston: "Oh! I've got great faith in de Lord," he cried: "Ef de Lord was to say, 'Jackson, go butt yer head agin dat tree,' I've good faith to b'leeve dat de tree 'ud be removed afore I got dere."

Deacon Smith, of the Mount Calvary Baptist Church, was fined $2 and costs at Hartford for whipping a brother Baptist, who had charged him with a fondness for policy shops. "I'se a bang-up Christian, and Brudder Lane's a liar," was the Deacon's defense.

"The man who attends to the Lord's business," said Colonel Harper to a poor minister who called and demanded aid, "is out just now, but he will be in at two o'clock." The difficulty with most of us is that we have tampered with the clock and it doesn't strike two.

In answer to the call made by the Lutheran General Council, five young pastors have come from Germany to work among their countrymen here. Seventy young men from the Missionary Institute at Sieswick, Prussia have volunteered themselves for similar service.

The committee of nine appointed to consider the question of a distinctively Baptist Bible, has decided to call a convention to meet in Cincinnati in November, in which the whole denomination in this country shall be represented, and the question be thoroughly considered.

It is sometimes said that the degree of D. D. amounts to little or nothing, but in the case of the Pastor of the First Baptist Church, of Detroit, this rule does not hold good. As soon as it was known that the degree had been conferred on him the congregation added $500 to his salary.

The home for worn-out and superannuated preachers that is to be established at Mount Rutzer Farm, owned by the New York Methodist Conference, will be in the shape of small cottages instead of a large edifice, and various gentlemen have already donated one cottage each.

The Methodist, speaking of the Salvation Army, says, "It is a good thing to take men out of the Damnation Army," which it concedes, the Salvation Army is doing; "but," it adds, "the good of it be must measured at last by the extent to which they are kept out of that army."

The revision of Luther's Bible, begun in 1863, has just been finished. Of the thirty original members of the revision committee but fourteen live to see the revision completed. The work is now to be printed and submitted to the University faculties for the public in about two years.

An exchange produces the following titles of two old sermon volumes: "The spiritual mustard-pot to make a soul sneeze with devotion." "Some fine biscuits baked in the oven of charity, carefully conserved for the chickens of the Church, sparrows of the spirit, and the sweet swallows of salvation."

The Saturday Half-Holiday.

New York Mail and Express.

Any one who traverses the business streets of this city on Saturday afternoon will be surprised to note that they present an appearance very much like their Sunday aspect. Very many of the larger establishments close at 1 o'clock on that day during the Summer months, and nearly all are shut by 3 o'clock. The custom is more general this year than ever before, and its growth indicates a feeling of good will from the employers towards the employed that is certainly gratifying. Of course, there are many of the smaller shops which still keep open even later on that day than any other, but the indications point to the eventual closing of even these at an early hour.

Besides the good will which this movement evidences, it may be in part a recognition of the fact that working as many hours in the week as possible is not only not a necessity, but a real waste of energy. We need one day, or part of a day, in the seven for recreation. The tendency of the Saturday late closing has been to make employes take Sunday as a day of pleasure. On that day the wearied salesman or mechanic has been accustomed to take wife and children on an excursion to some of the suburban haunts where pleasure is supposed to be—and often is—obtained. In our opinion, this is one of the main causes of the tendency toward Europeanizing Sunday, which has of late years been so noticeable. The tired worker feels the necessity of recreation more than of obsolute rest; hence he seeks the former alone, and Sunday is made a mere holiday, instead of what it should be, a holy day. But if he has Saturday afternoon for pleasure, the apparent necessity of using Sunday for that purpose disappears.

There are other advantages which accrue from the half-holiday. In most establishments repairs need to be made once a week. This work is now done on Sunday. The workman, unable to resist the temptation of an extra day's pay, barters his rest day for money. The number of men who thus work seven days in the weeks is not small. Saturday afternoon should be taken for this purpose.

The most important feature of the early closing movement seems to us to be in its influence on the better observance of Sunday. Man needs recreation, but he also needs a day for rest and contemplation. In the hurry of business and pleasure men are occupied solely with their physical and mental natures. Their life becomes a monotonous grind, with here and there a pleasant spot, but with no distinctively religious or moral aspects. Most men believe that there is a hereafter, but they think of it as little as possible. Most men believe that there is a God, but on the stupendous results which follow from that belief, on the question which, if that belief be true, is the most momentous which can occupy their thoughts—their relation and duty to that Supreme Being—they are thoughtless; they haven't time, they will tell you, to consider it.

Even in what we may call its economical or brain-saving aspect, religious contemplation and enjoyment afford the most complete rest from ordinary business care. The brain does not stop working; a man cannot rest his mind by trying to arrest thought. The only alternative is to turn the current of ideas into another channel. If that other channel be merely one where thought is lulled, where it is directed to lower objects of contemplation, there is some rest, but very little gain to the man. If the thoughts be drawn up by and towards the power which can elevate them, and directed to the contemplation of higher themes, the rest is complete, and the gain to the man immeasurable.

Of course it would be folly to suppose that early closing on Saturday would effect at once and completely the results which we have indicated; but it gives an opportunity for such results, and in considering the question of a Saturday half holiday, Christian employers will think of these things and Christian employes will be thankful.

If you have any faith, give me, for heaven's sake, a share of it! Your doubts you may keep to yourself for I have plenty of my own.

BAD BREATH!

Nothing is so unpleasant, nothing so common as bad breath, and in nearly every case it comes from the stomach, and can be so easily corrected if you will take Simmons Liver Regulator. Do not neglect so sure a remedy for this repulsive disorder. It will also improve your Appetite, Complexion, and General Health.

PILES!

How many suffer torture day after day, making life a burden and robbing existence of pleasure, owing to the secret suffering from Piles. Yet relief is ready to the hand of almost any one who will use systematically the remedy that has permanently cured thousands. SIMMONS' LIVER REGULATOR, is no drastic violent purge, but a gentle assistant to nature.

CONSTIPATION!

Should not be regarded as a trifling ailment—in fact nature demands the utmost regularity of the bowels, and any deviation from this demand paves the way often to serious danger. It is quite as necessary to remove impure accumulations from the bowels as it is to eat or sleep, and no health can be expected where a costive habit of body prevails.

SICK HEADACHE!

This distressing affliction occurs most frequently. The disturbance of the stomach arising from the imperfectly digested contents, causes a severe pain in the head, accompanied with disagreeable nausea, and this constitutes what is popularly known as Sick Headache.

We had the pleasure of calling on some of our former friends, while at Albion last week. We found J. J. Martin, busy marking new goods and waiting on customers in a jolly way as might be expected. He and his family are pleased with their new home. Elsa Shaffer took pride in showing us over his his new rooms, which are indeed very nice and convenient, and filled with a fine stock of goods. Mr. Forkner, who was at one time proprietor of the DeKalb House at Garrett, is keeping grocery store, and evidently having a good trade. Dr. Leonard, one of our old time cronies, still deals out quinine and "sich" to a large circle of patrons, and he and his estimable lady, evidently enjoy life, and have one of the cosiest homes in the place. We made a brief call on the New Era, and found things moving on briskly, shook hands with Mr. Williams, of the Williams Hotel. Chatted awhile with Tom Felkner, and sent our better half to visit Mrs. Dick Stone, who was sick. Mrs. Stone was once a pupil of ours, and we are glad to know that her lot in life has been made pleasant, by finding her in so pleasant a home. Albion is a lively little place, and the people there always try to make the pilgrim and stranger feel at home while he stays.

Our neighbors, the other papers published in this district appear highly satisfied with the ticket nominated at the judicial convention last Tuesday. Mr. Dills, the candidate for judge, is well known, and has the respect and confidence of the bar, and of the people, and bids fair to make a successful race. If elected, he will make one of the ablest judges the county ever had. Mr. Reynolds, candidate for prosecutor, is comparatively a stranger but is highly spoken of by people of his county. He expects to make a thorough canvass of the district, and people are beginning to predict that he will win. Mr. Gerber, candidate for joint representative, is known to many of our citizens, he having been active in getting up our first county map, some twelve or fifteen years ago. He has been surveyor of his county, is a prominent hardware dealer in Ligonier and a most estimable man. He will make a intelligent member and will no doubt be heartily supported at the polls.

We clip from several exchanges this week to show the feeling in regard to the nominations made last week at Waterloo. The following is from the DeKalb county correspondence of the Toledo Bee: "Mr. Dills is an old time democrat and ranks second to none at the bar of this county as a lawyer of ability and personal integrity. He is a nephew of the late lamented Judge J. Dawson, one of the leading jurists of his time in the state, and it was in his office that Mr. Dills acquired his early instructions in the law, and in a practice of over a quarter of a century he has made a shining mark as a counselor and advocate. Though the district is well fortified by the enemy, the democratic nominee will make a vigorous campaign for the ascendency, with a probability of capturing the prize."

We regret that a few errors crept into our paper last week. This was especially the case in Mr. Dills' letter of acceptance. In the closing part of the article, the words, "if the judge be sufficient," should have read "if the judge be deficient;" and "so freely and generally extended to me," should read "generously extended" &c. There were a few other slight errors, all of which we regret.

We notice that some of our republican exchanges are complaining of the Ft. Wayne Gazette, as they fear that paper is going to support Judge Lowry for congress. Shows the Gazette's good sense. We don't know just what position the Gazette does take, however, but we learn that many of the best men of both parties have concluded to support a man of acknowledged ability for our next member from this district.

Apology.

Senator Harrison in trying to show that they as a party are not altogether to blame for proposing the prohibitory amendment says; "The prohibitory amendment could not have been proposed by the last legislature, without the aid of six democrats in the state senate and eleven in the house who voted for it." Does not every body know that this is false? The senate was composed politically as follows: 25 republicans, 24 democrats, 1 greenbacker. Now any man can see that if the greenbacker had (as he did) voted for the amendment, or one democrat that the amendment would pass. The house was composed politically as follows: 59 republicans, 43 democrats, 1 greenbacker. Now 51 votes in the house for the amendment, and 26 in the senate would pass the amendment. Where does the truth of this statement come in? Remember this is a great moral question, gentlemen.

The reunion of the old 44th Indiana, will be held at Columbia City, Sep. 20. Several members of the regiment from this county, will be present, and make short addresses. Among others, we see the names of Nicholas Ensley, G. W. Gordon, M. B. Willis, E. D. Hartman, F. W. Willis and J. M. Kimsey mentioned among those to whom some work is assigned. Other speakers will be there also.

We see that Hon. Robert Lowry and his competitor, W. C. Glasgow, are to address the survivors of the old 44th at Columbia City. It will now be in order for republican papers to abuse the judge for daring to do such a thing, and at the same time laud to the skies that battle-scarred veteran, W. C. Glasgow, for doing the same thing under the same circumstances.

The county teachers, institute at Albion, last week was a very interesting meeting. The attendance was so great that after the first day, they had to move from the school house into the the court house. Among those who assisted Supt. Prentiss, we notice the names of Prof. Lake, of Ligonier, and Rev. Barr, of Albion; Both did excellent work.

Republicans do not want temperance and politics mixed. Oh, no! All they desire is to have temperance democrats vote the republican ticket, so as to carry the coming election. Then temperance can go to the dogs. It is votes, not prohibition, that they are after.

The democratic central committee met yesterday and nominated B. D. Thomas of Garrett, to fill the place of Mr. Sheets as candidate for commissioner of the southwest district. The choice is a good one.

The Kendallville Standard of last week dishes up its Fairfield items like this: "C. Bengat, of the Auburn Republican, and candidate for county treasurer was here this week, &c."

Money for a Rainy Day.

"For six years my daughter was sick from kidney and other disorders. We have used our savings on doctors, when our dominie advised us try Parker's Ginger Tonic. Four bottles effected a cure, and as a dollar's worth has kept our family well over a year, we have been able to lay by money again for a rainy day."—A Poor Man's Wife. 4w.

ONLY TWO BOTTLES.

Messrs. Johnson, Holloway & Co., wholesale druggists of Philadelphia, Pa., report that some time ago a gentleman handed them a dollar, with a request to send a good catarrh cure to two army officers in Arizona. Recently the same gentleman told them that both the officers and the wife of John C. Fremont, Gov. of Arizona, had been cured of catarrh by the two bottles of Ely's Cream Balm. 37-2t

Mrs. Dickinson, of Fremont, Ohio, who visited Mrs. F. Picker and other acquaintances in town, has gone to her Buckeye home.

The writer is under obligations to Miss Laura Walters for her assistance in the office while we were manufacturing plasters. She handles the stick and rule with credit to the profession.

S. U. Tarney is again at the block in his meat market. Sim. has had a long and serious illness, and we are glad to see him pulling out of the kinks slowly but surely.

Trustee Dancer, from the world renouned Jackson township, where Jake McGinnis and all the live boys hold out, is suffering with a sore hand.

Mr. Kahn, formerly a dealer in clothing at this place, is registered at the Swineford.

Frank Griswold gave us a brief call Tuesday. He is now located in Angola.

Mrs. M. F. Long, who is now at Chicago under treatment for consumption, is doing some better. She will come home next week.

Leb. Anderson, of Waterloo, was on the streets last week. His countenance gave us the opinion that he had a notion to "turn backward in his flight" and move to his old tramping ground again.

Hank Lesh, the heavy man at the Pioneer hardware, has been taking Wizard Oil and catnip tea for several days past. He's gaining gradually.

Miss Jennie Ensley, who will be remembered by many of our young people, is again a resident of this place.

Mrs. Houghton and son Albert, who have been sojourning in Nebraska during the summer, have come home.

Among our callers Tuesday were Mr. and Mrs. F. P. Day, Mrs. S. B. Johnson, Miss Minnie Patterson and Miss Lizzie Clark, all of Waterloo.

James Rose has been cured of the western fever and has again accepted a "posish" as clerk at the Swineford.

Frank Rush, of Orland, was in town last week. He looks as though vegetables were plenty in that neck o' the woods.

Dr. Bowman, of Newville, was on the streets last Friday. The doctor is one of the few who make a success of this profession.

Mrs. Sadie Cobb, of Ohio, is visiting her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Hollister.

Bab. Lewis is afflicted with erysipelas, and carries his hand done up in muslin.

Waterloo Items.

J. G. Johnson, did not go west with the company that started from here recently. He will remain for awhile, and in the meantime assist his brother, Walter in getting started in a dry goods store at Fredericktown, Ohio.

Do not forget the fair that begins here the first monday in October.

Quite a number of our people went to Butler Sunday to attend the funeral of the late George Egnew.

Ola Leib is now at home, having completed a full course in telegraphy. She is now competent to take charge of an office, and this she expects to do after she has visited her people a short time.

F. P. Day has returned from his trip through Nebraska and is well pleased with the country. He and Mr. Duncan bought a section of land, with a view to the future.

The residence of Samuel Jones, who lives north of here in Franklin township was burned to the ground Monday.

Frank Bevier is becoming quite skillful as a printer. He is doing all the work needed in the drug store and has gotten up some nice jobs for outside parties.

Duncan Bros. flouring mill blew up Tuesday morning. Both ends of the boiler blew out, but as no one was in the mill at the time, no one was injured. The mill was not much harmed.

E. T. Brysland and Miss Lillie Spencer attended the McNeil concert in Auburn Tuesday evening.

J. W. Patterson, of Marion, Iowa, spent Sunday here with his relatives.

Mr. Frager has been pulling his onions this week. He expects to harvest 250 bushels.

P. Morell went to Toledo, Monday on business and took in the fair.

The many friends of Rev. E. M. Baker and family will learn with regret, the sad news of the death of his only child, Wm. Baker. The Indianian of Warsaw has the following account of his death in its last number: "We regret very greatly to learn that Wm. P. Baker—eldest son of Rev. E. M. Baker, formerly of this county, and well known to our people—died at Pendleton on Tuesday. A telegram received by Auditor Baker, of this city, conveyed the sad intelligence, and both himself and wife will leave for that place to-day. Mr. Baker was in the 34th year of his age, and had been engaged for some years past in the grain trade, and was succeeding unusually well in a business way. He leaves a wife and two children to mourn his early departure. The funeral will take place to-day."

Henry Shimp, of St. Joseph, Mo., is here for a two weeks visit with his boyhood friends.

E. S. Patterson left Monday after spending his summer vacation at home.

Will Sudlow a former Waterloo boy has been in town this week shaking hands with his friends.

Kilbourne having resigned his position as agent for the American Express Co., at Greencastle, Ind., has been visiting for a few days with his uncle and aunt, Dr. and Mrs. Winslow, preliminary to completing his studies in civil engineering, at the Rensselaer Polytechnic Institute, Troy, N. Y., His mother Mrs. Louisa Sloane Kilbourne, will prolong for a few weeks her visit with her sister, before joining her son in the east.

—Schaab & Beugnot have just received a fine lot of dress goods at prices to suit all.

—Elys' Cream Balm reduces inflammation. Sores in the nasal passages are healed in a few days. Catarrhal headache is dissipated. Senses of smell, taste and hearing are restored. Price 50c. Apply into nostrils with little finger.

Notice to Builders.

The undersigned will, at the office of F. P. Bacon, in Garrett, on Saturday, September 23, 1882, at 3 o'clock p. m., let to the lowest and best responsible bidder the contract for building a school-house one mile east of Garrett. Building must be finished by the 15th of November, 1882. Plans and specifications may be seen at the office of Esquire Bacon, in Garrett. I reserve the right to reject any and all bids. HENRY PROSER, —The atmosphere has changed somewhat—morning and evenings are cool.

—A new crossing has been laid on Seventh street, near Braun's meat market

—Mr. Bachtel has purchased the Altenberg property, on east Seventh street.

—We need not be afraid of a famine this year. The harvests are above the average.

—Joe. Beugnot has again put on a white vest and engaged in the "rosy" business.

—Jas. McClellan, esq., is paying from four to seven cents for hogs. This is a good price.

—Wm. Snell is erecting a new residence joining the Leasure property in the south end.

—The brothers of Mark Rush have been arranging his grave and putting up a monument.

—Rev. Matthews talked to his congregation last sabbath after a vacation of several weeks.

—The girls will soon have to take their big hats apart and pack them away for winter.

—Straw, the music man, will occupy the room where Pommert & Grund are, as soon as vacated.

—If you want neat repairing in boots and shoes, call at the Red Front store near Hoff's grocery.

—Some nice fish are being caught in Cedar creek. The recent high waters have stocked the stream.

—Ora Shaffer is taking the lead in carriage and wagon painting. He turns out some handsome work.

—Mr. Scott, of Ohio, has located here and purchased the dray line. Erv. will continue to drive the team.

—Roy & Co. are making the foundation preparatory to moving Culbertson's frame building thereon.

—A. J. Little has painted his residence and fence in cottage colors adding much beauty to the property.

—Mr. Silvers is arranging to erect a handsome residence on the Burniston lot, corner of Main and Second streets.

—Miller & Getrost had an immense trade Saturday. Judicious advertising breaks the monotony when things are quiet.

—The hitching posts around the public square were all occupied Saturday, and many teams had to be tied on other streets.

—The republican candidates have so little faith in their election that they do not lose much time in talking the matter up.

—Our reporter took a vote among ten gentlemen for treasurer, which resulted in seven for Miller and three for Beugnot.

—T. D. Gross has sold the Cabin saloon and and is off at some pleasure resort. At least the eye beholds him not on Seventh street.

—The best show of fine cattle in Indiana can be seen at the great Northern Indiana Fair, at Fort Wayne, September 25th to 29th. 36-3w.

—New oats have been drawing from twenty-five to thirty cents per bushel this week.

—The swallows are gathering preparatory to emigrating on their annual flight.

—Hollister's is headquarters for fruit this year. He has been keeping a nice stock.

—C. C. Shaffer has bought two fine hearses, one for use here, and the other for Elza, at Albion.

—McQuiston & Long have the best stock of black silks and satins in the city. Call and see them. 37-3

—McQuiston & Long still sell eight pounds of good green coffee for $1 and C C roasted coffee at 15c. 37-3

—The ditch in the west part of town has been cleaned out and deepened. It is an improvement much needed.

—Everyone seems to be trading at Schaab & Beugnot's. They have a wide reputation for selling goods cheap.

—A merchant who advertises freely does not always succeed in business, but precious few succeed without it.

—If the weed crop is not harvested pretty soon but goes to seed, we will guarantee an abundant yield for next season.

—Quite a number of our subscribers have not harvested yet—or at least they haven't paid their subscription as contracted.

—Some of the forest trees have already commenced to don the autumnal buff, which indicates the departure of summer.

—Wm. Murphy and Willie Ryan are painting several buildings at Garrett. This is the firm to contract with for speedy work.

—Fall styles of millinery goods will soon be out, when the laborer's other-half will order a ten dollar hat with an ostrich feather.

—The fall trade is opening up. Read the advertisements carefully and buy of those who invite us through the county papers.

—Isaac Roth had the bad luck to lose one of his dray horses, but we see he has invested in a grey "colt" which promises to be valuable.

—"Detective" Haskins, of Waterloo, has put away the razor and strap and is working in the interest of the coming fair at the above place.

—When our boys visit their girls at Waterloo, they take a hammock with them. The ladies at our neighboring town must be tiresome to hold.

—A greenback stump speaker was on a high old drunk here last week. He "soaked" his watch for lodging and he will make slow time for a few days.

—There seems to be some misunderstanding among the dancers, which will probably result in a few society belles remaining at home. Naughty girls.

—This is no humbug. Miller & Getrost are closing out their entire stock of dry goods, notions, clothing, hats, caps, etc. Gloves and mittens at actual cost.

—P. V. Hoffman who has been engaged in Huntington during the last nine months preparing a new law book will again resume the practice of law at Auburn.

—McQuiston & Long have just received a CASE of choice styles in brocade dress goods which they are selling at 15 and 20c per yard—former price has been 25c. 37-3

—The brick masons who built the school house near Spencerville, last week, speak very highly of the kind treatment received from Mr. J. Moody and his estimable wife.

—Billy Little has invested in a trotting horse. It takes considerable persuader to get the "animule" under motion, but after this is accomplished she moves on Wabash time.

—Our columns are crowded with advertising this week making the usual amount of reading matter a little short. We will arrange it next week to have original matter on the first page.

—The Catholic fair will be held Oct. 16 to 21, in the Ensley room next door west of the postoffice. Don't forget the time and place. It will be a pleasant way to assist in a worthy cause.

—Henry Yesbera has purchased the small building that stood on the Hebel lot and uses it for a work shop. Bob has to sit in the middle of the room to keep from knocking the sides out.

—Jim. Steel is said to be the swiftest painter in town. This item will cause Paddy Ryan to wrinkle his proboscis, but being on the Geo. Washington pattern we can't do it—no sir, we cannot.

—Men who advertise in their home papers are the ones who transact the business of the town. A newspaper generally reflects the worth, enterprise and intelligence of the community in which it is published.

—Francis Picker is looking for a position as target-man at South Whitley, on the new Nickel Plate road. We hope Judge will secure the place, as his experience in this work enables him to give general satisfaction.

—The market is stocked in first-class style with watermelons, cucumbers, pears, peaches and "sich." The doctors are ordering new fall suits and swing ivory-top canes. This is truly a thriving and prosperous country.

Thos. E. J. Cool and Miss Mary Hough were married last week. Tommy is an industrious, steady young man, and the COURIER is safe in saying that the happy twain will glide smoothly and pleasantly through life.

—A. B. Walsworth brought us some large Lawton blackberries last week. It is surprising to see the size this variety may attain. Some of them measured three inches in circumference.

—The ladies of the Presbyterian church desire to return their thanks to Mr. & Mrs. Loas for entertaining their social so pleasantly. Also the Corunna band for their excellent music, and the public for their liberal patronage.

—The marshal is asking those who did not work their road tax to do so now. Every one should comply with his desire and get the thoroughfares in as good a condition as possible before the muddy season sets in.

—We are all very thankful to Johnnie Hebel and Sherm. Hollister for a watermelon of circus tent dimensions, but are obliged to say that our inner selves had no desire whatever to let the fruit melt in our mouths and run down.

—The boys in Mack & Mike's store are in the habit of pinching each other every time they pass. One of them was sparking his girl the other night and in passing a rat-terrier dog quietly resting upon a chair he pinched the canine. That's all.

—Don't take any chances, boys, but vote a straight ticket. When we cast a democratic ballot we vote for an honest party and when we hand in a republican ticket we uphold and encourage a dishonest organization.

—The performance given Tuesday evening by the McNeil family was appreciated by the larger portion of the audience. Their music on the street fell happily upon the ears of those who were short a quarter and could'nt get a "comp."

—The young folks have had a pleasant time for the last few evenings gazing and commenting upon the beauty of the Northern light. It is just as nice to give the origin and tell of the many signs occasioned by this light, as it is to talk ourselves hoarse trying to locate the tail of a comet for her.

—A man, woman and five children passed through town Monday asking aid from the trustee to enable them to journey onward. The husband and father of this flock was an indolent, lazy appearing specimen of manhood, and did'nt look as though he had ambition enough to get away with a square meal

—We hear that one or two of our citizens have refused to pay the sprinkling man for his services. Sprinkling the streets is one of the most enjoyable and beneficial enterprises our people ever originated, and we are sorry to learn that anyone has so little pride as to refuse the small monthly payment of this hard earned money.

—It is said that the owners of property opposite the COURIER office will move away the frame buildings from Beugnot's to Goodman's, and erect substantial brick structures in their places. Seventh street will look attractive should this movement be carried out, and we would only have a few frame buildings remaining in the business part of town.

—The funeral of George Egnew, at Butler, last Sunday, was largely attended as the deceased was an old resident of the county and well known. An extra train on the Wabash took over a part of the Garrett and Auburn masons and a great many of the order came from Waterloo and Edgerton. About one hundred and twenty were in line at the funeral.

—The slaters have the roof finished at the school house and the building is ready for inside work. It is much more handsome and convenient than the former one. It is to be hoped that great care will be taken in the heating aparatus to prevent this structure from being consumed by fire. The water supply should be differently arranged from what it has been, and everything possible be strictly attended to for the safety of the pupils and the building.

—The Corunna band go to Waterloo this evening to give some of its citizens a surprise in the way of a serenade. They are fine players and capital young men, and we understand the people there will show their good will to the boys by a supper at Butt's hotel.

DIED—At St. Louis, Mich., Aug 23, 1882, Mrs. Otis Bartlett, aged 76 years. Mr. & Mrs. Bartlett were among the early settlers of this county, having removed from Ohio to Wilmington township, in this county, in 1837, and removed from this county to Michigan in 1856.

—A cheap excursion will go to Detroit over the Wabash road next Tuesday, Sept. 19, leaving Auburn at 5 a. m. and arriving at Detroit at 10 a. m. Fare for round trip will be $2. As the train returns the same day, tickets will be good the same day only, and should be bought on Monday. A boat ride on the Detroit river for 25c is one of the attractions of the trip.

—James Culbertson's new residence is about completed and is generally acknowledged to be the handsomest one in town. It is surrounded by a neat and tasty iron fence that holds the winning card over all other fences. The rooms are small yet very conveniently arranged, while the cellar and water supplies are handy. Mr. C. certainly has a pleasant home, and we are glad to see him and all other citizens meet with success in life.

—The opinion among republican politicians is that the campaign will go along much more satisfactory without having rallies than with them. During the Garfield campaign rallies were numerous and great flaming posters were placed upon the bill-boards which read: "Grand rally! Let the people turn out enmasse and hear Charles J. Guitean discuss the political issues of the day from a republican standpoint."

—The dance season has opened in this place, and the head of families should begin to curtail expenses in order to have the festive youth attend each and every hop. Our young men would have had the organization effected sooner but for a suitable "high-toned" name. On application to Arabi they have been satisfied, and the new club will eight hands 'round under the flaming title of "Joie De Vie." The following officers were elected for the season: W. E. Ryan, prest.; Willis McClellan, sec'y.; Henry McIntyre, treas.

—Charley Jackson, quinine wrapper at J. C. Henry's drug store, hurt his limb badly. Like the Little end of the COURIER he moves about after the style of Old Black Joe, and don't care a continental whether they have recess at the normal school or not. We sympathize with Charley, and those who have never been thus afflicted know very little of sleeping during the day and keeping the family awake through the night. The most humiliating circumstance, however, is the fact that a fellow has twenty-five cents in his pocket and no possible way whatever for him to get up town to squander the boodle.

Dr. E. C. West's Nerve and Brain Treatment is a never failing cure for Nervous Neuralgia, Nervous Headache, Overworked Brain, &c. Sold at F. E. Davenport's.

A WASHINGTON special says: "The Government Engineers having in charge the work for which appropriations were made in the river and harbor bill, publicly declare that not only will it be impossible to expend the entire amount appropriated during the fiscal year, but that the amounts that will be left to be covered into the Treasury will be very large.

THE Mississippi River Commission have from the River and Harbor bill $4 123,000 to spend on the improvement of the great river, together with about $1,000,000 unexpended from previous appropriations. This is the first time an amount of money commensurate with the importance of the Mississippi has been appropriated by Congress, which has studiously neglected this bounden duty, and favored less important interests hitherto. The $4,000,000 now appropriated is one of the best items in the River and Harbor bill, as it is for a strictly "national highway" which it is the duty of the Government to keep in navigable order and to keep within its banks.

IN relation to the latest trouble in the tempest-tossed "Gem of the Sea" it is said that the constabulary, or Government police, of Ireland number about 12,000 men, and have for the past fifty years constituted the chief reliance of England for the enforcement of its authority in Ireland. The revolt of the constabulary now in progress in nearly every city and large town is really a more serious matter than was the upspring of the Land League. In some localities the constabulary have resigned en masse—in others many of them have been dismissed for insubordination—and the revolt among them seems to be quite general. Their grievances are two-fold—first, under-pay for very hard work, and, second, hard usage by their superior officers. In other words, they are striking for better pay and less insolence.

It appears that Miss Minnie Vinson, of Summitville, who was killed by a train the other day, met her death through her own foolhardiness, in trying how long she could remain on the track in front of the approaching train and escape. The train men say this is a favorite amusement of young girls and boys, whom no number of frightful examples seems to intimidate.

Arthur Brooks, a young cattle buyer, belonging to one of the most respectable families in the county, stepped up to Dr. Thomas Gauze, as he sat in front of his office, at Washington, Wayne county, and began shooting at him with a revolver. Two shots were fired before he left his seat, and a third as he sprang up. The doctor ran down a side street, followed by Brooks, who fired two more shots. At the entrance to the alley at the rear of his office he fell, and was carried home, where he expired immediately. Both men had borne good reputations previously, but Brooks occasionally drank to excess. The cause of the trouble is said to be that Gauze had reported that Brooks was on too intimate terms with a young widow. Brooks remained in town for an hour, and then disappeared.

The opinion is based on Section 6,432, Revised Statutes of 1881.

It Was the First Time His Wife Died.

[Detroit Post.]

In the early days of Michigan there lived in Livingston county an old chap who would bring suit against any man on earth on the slightest possible pretext. The fact that he was often beaten and saddled with costs did not cool his ardor a bit. On one occasion he sued a man for waking him out of an afternoon nap, and again he took out a warrant for a man who accidently knocked his hat off. One day death came suddenly to the old man's wife. He was, as usual, engaged in a law suit, and had just told the jury what he expected to prove in a case where a boy had left his hogs out of the pen when a messenger came in with the sad news.

"Your Honor, I've just heard that my wife is dead," said the old man, as he laid down his notes.

"Then I'll adjourn court."

"Oh, you needn't do that. Just announce a recess for fifteen minutes until I run home and tell 'em not to lay out the body in the best bedroom. Gentleman of the jury, excuse my absence for a few minutes. It's the first time my wife died, and I crave your indulgence."

Last April Mrs. Mary F. Henderson of St. Louis, offered a prize to the pupils of Kirkwood Seminary for the best essay on "Common Sense About Women." FROM THE WIRES.

A Cincinnati dispatch:

The Price Current of this city, to-day, publishes reports from the hog growing districts of the United States, and says that in the supply available for winter marketing there is an average decrease of 10 and 20 per cent. in all the States, except Minnesota and Wisconsin, compared with last year. For the last half of the winter the supply will be better, and while winter packing may fall 10 per cent. below last year, there will be full supplies for spring and summer packing in 1883.

The Exposition pageant procession began to move shortly before 12 o'clock, and reached Fourth street by 1. Governor Foster and other invited guests occupied seats in carriages near the head of the procession. The streets were jammed with people, so as to make progress slow and difficult. All the features of the pageant were brilliant beyond expectation, and the throngs were vociferous in expressions of delight. The twenty-six tableaux cars, representing ten epochs, beginning with Cincinnatus at his plow, and ending with Cincinnati as it is, were all faithfully shown, and the attendants tastefully, and some even gorgeously, attired. The procession was in all respects a most creditable enterprise. More than 3,000 mounted and uniformed men were in line. It is thought it require all the afternoon for it to complete its march.

While Mrs. Margaret Shaw, of Newport, and her granddaughter, aged 5 years, were crossing Sixth street, at Walnut, on their way to see the parade, they were knocked down by the horse drawing a hose reel, responding to a fire alarm. The little girl was instantly killed.

Jamestown, Mich., dispatch:

Mrs Garfield, mother of the late President, and her daughter, Mrs. Larrabee, and Mrs. Larrabee's son, have been here a week, visiting at the residence of Thomas Garfield, a brother of the General. Grandma Garfield is in her 81st year, but can read rapidly and correctly without the use of glasses.

Speaking of Guiteau, she said she felt not the slightest compunction when his execution day arrived but many a time had felt as though he ought to have been hanged a thousand times, as a warning to others seeking for notoriety and to teach them that the wrongful taking of life will certainly be avenged. Referring to President Arthur, she said that he was very kind to her, and as far as she was capable of judging, she thought he was doing very well considering the circumstances under which he was inaugurated. Alluding to Mrs. Garfield, the President's wife, her mother said that she had been very well during the summer, and that she was at present on the farm at Mentor.

The mother is very justly proud of her son. She enjoys meeting people and is perfectly free in conversing about her son's life. She seems proud of her family, and often refers to Thomas as the main foundation of their existence during the early life of James.

Thomas Garfield is now 80 years of age. He says he was often called upon by his mother to convey James on his back through the snow for months to the country school house, several miles from his mother's farm. He enjoys repeating the early experiences of his brother's life.

Iowa City, Iowa, dispatch:

The burning of the new City Hall is now known to have been the work of an incendiary. The fire was started in an upper room, and combustibles must have been used. The building was largely fire proof. A party of tramps recently liberated from the cooler of the Hall are suspected. The insurance is $10,000, in the following companies: Niagra, $2,000; National of Hartford, $2,000; Franklin of Philadelphia, $2,000; Hawkeye of Des Moines, $500; Boston Underwriters', $1,500; New York Alliance, $2,000. The loss will greatly exceed the insurance.

New Haven, Conn., dispatch.

Chip Smith was executed at 10:30, and met his fate bravely. He was accompanied to the gallows by Sheriff Bixbee, Deputy Sheriffs Catlin and Pond, Fathers McGivney, Mulcahy and Dunn. About 300 persons witnessed the execution. Smith said he would meet his fate like a true soldier of Christ.

The Post's Richmond, Va., special says: "C. O. B. Cowardin, one of the editors of the Richmond Dispatch, a leading Democratic paper of the State, was arrested this morning charged with being about to engage in a duel with W. C. Elam, editor of the Whig, organ of the Coalitionists. A warrant is also out for the arrest of the latter, but it has not yet been served.

The expected troubles grew out of an editorial written by Cowardin, which appeared in the Dispatch last Saturday, and which Elam regarded as offensive and injurious to him. He addressed a card to the Dispatch yesterday, which that paper published to-day, denouncing the author of the article, and reflecting upon him in very severe terms. To this Cowardin replied substantially that he would not notice the card; as he had placed the insult upon Elam he was not called upon to continue the controversy. The affair has excited considerable attention. Elam was wounded in a duel with Col. Tom Smith near here in 1879. Both gentlemen are recognized as men of courage.

A special from East Liverpool, O., says: "A few days ago an offer was made by the pottery firms of Wallace Chatwin & Co., Goodwin & Co., Vodrey & Co., and Harker & Co., to their employes of an individual guarantee of the old wages for the year, and their recognition of the Knights of Labor, if they returned to work. The cause of the whole fight has been the question of recognition, and, that settled, there was nothing left to object to. The local assembly met yesterday, and decided to accept the terms."

Philadelphia dispatch:

The Danish bark Marcello arrived at quarantine yesterday, infected with yellow fever. The vessel stopped at St. Mary's, and two days latter five of the crew and the captain's wife were taken ill with the yellow fever. Another of the crew was prostrated and died on their arrival at the Deleware capes on Thursday. His remains were buried in the cemetery at quarantine.

Railroad officials who have made trips of observation over their lines into the Northwest and Southwest, as nearly all of them have, concur in the glowing descriptions of the crops, their size, quality and good condition. There is not one unfavorable report. The observations of these officials are usually reliable for business reasons, and their experience is so great that subsequent developements usually bear out their predictions. Agreeing, as they do, with special and press dispatches, except as to a few isolated localities, the significance and importance of the reports become more striking and conclusive.

The estimated decrease of the public debt for August is about $16,000,000.

A heavy snow storm has been raging in Leadville all last night and this morning.

A new type of fever has broken out among the operatives of the Little Falls knitting mills. Four have died, and twenty-eight are ill with the malady. The Board of Health and physicians are investigating.

A Times-Star special from Memphis, Tenn., says a duel is imminent between General Chalmers and Van H. Manning, candidates for Congress. Both spoke at Holly Springs in joint debate. Manning spoke last and made a scathing review of Chalmers' record. Both remained at Holly Springs over Sunday with messengers passing back and forth, Chalmers demanding full retraction. Thomas Harris represented Chalmers, and Edward Watson was Manning's friend. The rumor of a duel gains credit from the fact that both failed to appear at the place appointed for to-day's debate.

The first new bale of cotton received Saturday night and sold at auction at noon, realized twenty-six cents per pound, and was purchased by the Pioneer Cotton Mills of this city. The bale weighed 456 pounds, classed middlings.

Mt. Vernon, Ind., has been threatened with a mob, growing out of the effort to close the saloons on Sunday and at 11 o'clock week-day nights. About 1 o'clock yesterday morning the residence of John Paul, the City Marshal, was fired by the mob and burned to the ground. The Deputy City Marshal was terribly beaten by a gang of roughs. Telegraphs and telephones were guarded to prevent communication with neighboring towns.

The Governor of Texas has issued the following appeal:

Austin, Texas, September 5.—To the County Judges, Mayors of cities and towns of Texas: I have received a telegram from Thomas Carson, Mayor of Brownsville, stating that there are 300 cases of yellow fever in that city, with an increase of 70 to 100 per day, and that the necessity for means to send aid to the sick and destitute was increasing, and an urgent appeal that any funds which have been, or may be, contributed for the relief of the suffering people of Brownsville can be sent to Ball, Hutchins & Co., Galveston, and can be immediately drawn on by wire by Thomas Carson, Mayor, to be properly expended.

O. M. ROBERTS,
Governor.

Frankfort, Ind., dispatch:

The Banner's extra gives an account of a fire which began in the old Eye-Tooth corner of the public square last night and destroyed property to the amount of $29,400. The sufferers are: Freeman & Albee, $8,000; Ball and Majors, butchers, $700; G. Rice, carriages, $1,600; Shires & Bowen, confectioners, $1,400; Jacob Stetler, grocer, $1,000; Ross Bros., cigars and tobacco, $2,500; Thos. Pedlow, saloonist, $2,500; Kempf Bro., bakers and confectioners, $2,500; Sam Williams, barber, $100; Aughe and Osborn, butchers, $500; J. A. Cunningham, tailor, $300. The loss on buildings was H. H. Bradley, $1,000; Jos. K. Steele, $2,500; Thos. Pedlow, $1,500; Fritch & Rothermel, $2,000. The only insurance was $1,400 held by Shires & Bowen.

A Harrison, Ky., special says Jeff. Robards, a wealthy farmer, living near this place, was shot and killed Sunday night, by Samuel Ball, while visiting the latter's brother. An old grudge was the cause.

Richmond, Va., dispatch.

On the night of December 28, 1881, the store of J. B. Prince, of Green Plains, Southampton county, was burned, and two clerks, John Murrell and Thomas Glover, who slept in the building lost their lives. Subsequent developments showed that the young men had been murdered and the store robbed and set on fire. A negro named Emmett Cloud was arrested, tried, and found guilty, but the jury, which was composed of eight white and four negoes, failed to agree on the punishment. The white men were in favor of hanging, while the blacks were for imprisonment for life. The accused was remanded to jail to await a second trial in November next. Since this confinement he has been sick with consumption, and yesterday, knowing his disease would terminate fatally, made a full confession of the crime. He died Wednesday.

A Boston dispatch:

The British steamer Ardonbahm arrived Thursday from Porto Rico, with a cargo of sugar, reports that yellow fever broke out among the crew shortly after leaving port. One case proved fatal on passage, and three men were sick with the disease up to the arrival. The steamer is at anchor at quarantine.

The Chickasaw Indian Legislature met yesterday at Lispamingo and organized. Governor Overton was declared elected, took the oath of office, and read his message. He recommends more stringent laws, with severe penalties, to be enacted, for the protection and preservation of person, life and property, for the improvement of educational facilities, the establishment of a manual labor school, where the youth can be taught the science of chemistry, practical agriculture and mechanics; that a conference be had with the other civilized tribes in Indian Territory relative to building a union penitentiary and houses of correction; also that all cattle driven through the nation be taxed, and that the time for driving cattle from Texas through the nation be limited to a certain number of days for the trip.

Burlington, Vt., dispatch:

The election returns come in slowly beyond precedent, much less than half the State having been heard from. Returns indicate a Republican victory of 35,000, and a Democratic vote of 15,000. The vote is very light. In the the Second district only fifty-one towns have been heard from. Less than half these give Poland 7,488, Fletcher 5,452, Grout and scattering 2,802. The indication is that there is no choice, which will necessitate a second election. In the First district Stewart is elected by 10,000 majority.

Alexandria, September 4.—The man-of-war Minotaur is shelling the rebel lines because of threatening demonstrations made by the enemy from Mandara.

Great uneasiness is felt in consequence of the arrest of a native spy carrying a letter addressed to Antono Paulo, the Greek Consular Agent at Siout, who is staying here. Paulo has been arrested. It is rumored that the police have discovered the ramifications of a conspiracy in which several Greeks are implicated, the object being to massacre the Europeans in Alexandria in the event of the British troops being seriously engaged at Ramleh.

Dublin, September 4.—A woman died of injuries received in the charge made by the military Saturday. One of the soldier has been arrested. At the meeting of the Town Council, the Lord Mayor stated he had abstained from enrolling special constables as requested by the Lord Lieutenant, because he did not think it was desirable to accept the services of strangers. He had since offered Earl Spencer the services of tranesmen in various localities, but had received the reply that the authorities themselves had obtained a sufficient number of special constables. He stated that specials were now on duty, and the police would be reserved for night.

Constantinople, September 5.—The Anglo-Turkish Military convention has been signed.

Alexandria, September 5.—There has been considerable movement in the enemy's camp, apparently occasioned by the arrival of reinforcements.

Ismailia, September 5.—It has been ascertained by a reconnaissance in the direction of Salihiyeh that the place has been abandoned by Arabi Pasha. It is not expected that we shall have enough provisions to be ready to advance for a week.

The number of engines now en route from Suez and Port Said brings up the total to nine, which will be sufficient for transportation purposes. The English horses are holding out well. The worst of the hot weather seems to be over. It is stated that General Wolseley is in high spirits and confident of success. It will be considered almost a miracle if Arabi Pasha succeeds in holding Tel-el-Kebir.

Port Said, September 5.—Large numbers of Bedouins have again been seen on the banks of the canals between Port Said and Ismailia.

Alexandria, September 6.—The murderers of the Englishmen, Richardson and Dobson, have been sentenced to be hanged Thursday next.

Port Said, September 5.—Some rebel officers from Salihiyeh have arrived at Ismailia to tender submission.

Over 8,000 Arabs are fortifying Salihiyeh. The enemy are embarking their baggage and military stores from Fort Ghemileh.

Ismailia, September 6.—No advance can be expected before the 9th inst.

Kassassin, September 6.—The enemy are showing increased boldness. Yesterday a force of 200 men were observed within a half-hour's march of the British camp. Infantry disguised as peasants frequently fire at British vedettes.

The Duke of Connaught's brigade of foot guards will arrive Wednesday.

Transport arrangements are being rapidly completed.

A party of natives has been engaged to bury the dead.

Alexandria, September 6.—Antono Paulo, arrested on suspicion of being connected with a plot against the lives of Europeans, will be sent to Greece. He is not Consular Agent, as at first stated. The police have advised several other suspected persons to quit the city.

A fire broke early this morning in Rue Cheif Pasha. Several persons suspected of having started the fire have been arrested.

Tunis, September 6.—Four hundred insurgent horsemen have appeared before Kairouan. Troops have been sent for the purpose of surrounding them.

Paris, September 6.—A naumber of persons belonging to the so-called "League of Patriots" last evening assaulted Mayer, the manager of the Lanterne newspaper. The affair is connected with recent anti-German demonstrations by the league.

London, September 6.—Fire occurred in Philharmonic Theater, at Islington, this morning. The roof of the building has fallen in, and the interior of the house is completely burned out.

Blair Athol, the celebrated race horse, is dead.

Artesian Wells on the Plains.

New York Mail and Express.

Vast areas of our Western country, not only in the plateau between the Sierra Nevada and the Rocky Mountains, but east of the latter range, have never been available for agricultural purposes on account of the lack of water. The soil is good enough, and with irrigation the desert would blossom as the rose; but the water for irrigation was not available. Commissioner Horace Beach has been appointed by the Bureau of Agriculture to go West and superintend experiments in procuring water by means of artesian wells. Mr. Beach is a practical artesian well operator, fortunately, so his superintendency will probably accomplish a definite result.

Senator Hill, of Colorado, was the originator of the scheme. After hard work he succeeded in 1879 in getting an artesian well bill passed in Congress, and an appropriation of $30.000 to carry on the work. The practical part was intrusted to Commissioner LeDuc, and under his management, the appropriation was exhausted when the first well was down only 800 feet. Competent judges have since estimated that LeDuc's well could have been sunk for $1,500. Such a result put a temporary quietus on the project, but Senator Hill has now succeeded in obtaining another appropriation of $20,000 for the sinking of two wells. The sites of these have been determined. One will be at Akron, Col., 112 miles from Denver, on the Chicago Burlington and Quincy road. The other will probably be at Kit Carson, south of Akron, on the Kansas Pacific road. Mr. Beach is confident of striking water in the first well before snow flies.

In case of the success of these experiments, great results will follow. Irrigation can be carried on for miles by means of the water flowing from the well. Other wells may be sunk. The face of the whole region round about will be entirely changed. Prosperous farms and communities will spring up in territory now uninhabitable, and barren and desiate lands will be converted into a populous agricultural district. The railway authorities will of course further the project by every means in their power, as it will open up for settlement on their lines a large extent of land now useless.

There seems to be no good reason why water should not be struck if the boring is carried on in a business-like way by a practical man. If he succeeds, Mr. Beach will perform a service to the country which will go far to redeem the Bureau of Agriculture from the odium which now rests upon it on account of the wasteful vagaries of the former Commissioner.

A Subterranean Abyss Swallows Up a Child.

London Times.

The Zirknitz See, in Carniola, is remarkable for the periodical disappearance of the water every summer, subterranean passages serving as the channels of escape. A rapidly ripening crop of grass and some quick-growing vegetables are gathered during the autumn from the dried bed of the lake by the neighboring peasants. A letter from Laybach reports a singular accident of which this place was the theater. A peasant woman and her daughter being conveyed in a cart across the bed of the lake, which was still coverrd with water in some places. Suddenly the cart and its occupants were precipitated into a chasm, through which the water was being swallowed down in a great vortex, and which had not been noticed till too late. With great difficulty the woman was rescued, but the child and cart were sucked down into the abyss below.

Edwin Booth has cleared about $1000 on his engagement at the London Adelphi. This is not a large clearance but it is better than was expected.

DR. HARTER'S

A combination of Protoxide of Iron, Peruvian Bark and Phosphorus in a palatable form. The only preparation of iron that will not blacken the teeth, so characteristic of other iron preparations.

GENTLEMEN: I have used DR. HARTER'S IRON TONIC in my practice, and in an experience of twenty-five years in medicine, have never found anything to give the results that DR. HARTER'S IRON TONIC does. In many cases of Nervous Prostration, Female Disease, Dyspepsia, and an impoverished condition of the blood, this peerless remedy has, in my hands, made some wonderful cures. Cases that have baffled some of our most eminent physicians have yielded to this great and incomparable remedy. I prescribe it in preference to any iron preparation made. In fact, such a compound as DR. HARTER'S IRON TONIC is a necessity in my practice.

Cathartic Pills

Combine the choicest cathartic principles in medicine, in proportions accurately adjusted to secure activity, certainty, and uniformity of effect. They are the result of years of careful study and practical experiment, and are the most effectual remedy yet discovered for diseases caused by derangement of the stomach, liver, and bowels, which require prompt and effectual treatment. AYER'S PILLS are specially applicable to this class of diseases. They act directly on the digestive and assimilative processes, and restore regular healthy action. Their extensive use by physicians in their practice, and by all civilized nations, is one of the many proofs of their value as a safe, sure, and perfectly reliable purgative medicine. Being compounded of the concentrated virtues of purely vegetable substances, they are positively free from calomel or any injurious properties, and can be administered to children with perfect safety.

AYER'S PILLS are an effectual cure for Constipation or Costiveness, Indigestion, Dyspepsia, Loss of Appetite, Foul Stomach and Breath, Dizziness, Headache, Loss of Memory, Numbness, Biliousness, Jaundice, Rheumatism, Eruptions and Skin Diseases, Dropsy, Tumors, Worms, Neuralgia, Colic, Gripes, Diarrhœa, Dysentery, Gout, Piles, Disorders of the Liver, and all other diseases resulting from a disordered state of the digestive apparatus.

As a Dinner Pill they have no equal.

While gentle in their action, these PILLS are the most thorough and searching cathartic that can be employed, and never give pain unless the bowels are inflamed, and then their influence is healing. They stimulate the appetite and digestive organs; they operate to purify and enrich the blood, and impart renewed health and vigor to the whole system.

All is Fair in Love and War.

[Chicago Tribune.]

Two hours have passed. No have seven or eight horse cars, but the one for which Vivian is waiting finally comes along and soon lands him at the door of Pericles O'Rourke's house Ethelberta is sitting in her boudoir (high-toned word for room), sewing some fancy lace into the neck of a velvet dress, as the young man entered:

"I have bad news for you, my darling," Vivian says in sad tones, while a don't bluff-or-you-will-be-called look comes over his face.

Bertie nestled her little dimpled hands confidingly in his. "Tell it to me at once, sweet," she said, "only with you alive and well nothing could be so very dreadful."

Vivian looked at her with a wonderful grave tenderness in his blue eyes.

He was sizing her up.

"My father and I have quarreled, and he has disinherited me. I have—" and here his voice quivered slightly—"been given the g. b. on your account. I am a beggar, Bertie."

Her soft, dusky eyes grew wider and more serious.

"Yes," continued the sucker, "I am poor. But I wouldn't care if it wasn't for you, darling. It means that I must give you up, for I cannot ask you to share life with me on a thousand a year."

She looked at him with a rich, crimson blush surging into her cheeks. If it had been a full, Vivian would probably have gone under, but a flush could never scare him.

"Vivian," she said passionately, "do you think I will let you give me up? I love you too well for that. A beggar or a prince, you are all the same to me—my king, my lover."

And he folded her to his heart with a great, almost speechless tenderness and joy.

"My darling, my precious," he whispered.

Three months, on a golden December afternoon, with a blue sky as in June, there was a grand wedding at the O'Rourke mansion. As Vivian and Ethelberta were entering the carriage that was to bear them to the depot, she looked at him with a weirdly precious smile.

"And so you would not desert me, darling," he said, "even when you thought I was poor?"

"No, my precious one," was the reply. "I learned long ago that a sucker once off the hook will never bite again, and your father and I put up the job so as to land you a little quicker."

How She Won Him.

[Philadelphia Quiz.]

I have just herd the most remarkable story of the evenness of female temper. In fact it seems so surprising to me that I think some record of it should be embalmed in the archives of Quiz. It is a beautiful little fairy story and may appropriately be called "How She Won Him." Indeed it was quite enough to win a far worse man if the worse men are ever won, which I dare say they are not. It happened here in Philadelphia and is on this wise: You know, or rather you don't know until I tell you (for how should you?) that there was a beautiful dinner given "many years ago," and she sat opposite him and looked ever so charming in a wine-colored silk with a square neck, and otherwise arrayed as never were the lilies in any valley of this poor earth. Well, the idiot of a waiter in handling the soup, upset the entire contents of a plate right in her lap. Just think of it girls! The whole front bredth utterly ruined, and for the world it could not be matched. Well what did she do? Did she faint?

Did she say you horrid man? Did she scream? Not at all; she passed the thing off in some witty remark about firery baptism, and calmly resumed her dinner. He, of course, was delighted, thought her a most remarkable woman, and indeed she was; became attentive to her, and finally married her.

One evening long after the event they were sitting before the fire, the children having gone to bed, and were talking about old times, when he said:

"My dear, I never told you, I think, how I first thought I would like to marry you, did I?"

"Why, gracious goodness, no vo-vea!"

"Well," he said, "do you remember that dinner at Mrs. Simkins', where your dress was spoilt by the soup?"

"Indeed I do," she replied. "I shall never forget it as long as I live."

"Well," he continued, "you behaved so well about it that I thought you a perfect jewel."

"Yes," she answered, "I remember behaving very well about it at the time, but, good land, you should have seen the mark of my teeth on the bed post that night."

Now, wasn't that just too perfectly romantic for anything?

Temperance Legislation.

Our "distinguished" cotemporary the Butler Record, in its issue of August 23, in speaking of the proposed prohibitory amendment says:

> "It will be seen that if the amendment is adopted there should be passed a law affixing a penalty for selling or in any way dealing in intoxicating liquors contrary to the constitution. And until this is done the adoption of the amendment will avail nothing. But now the democratic party stands opposed to any legislation of this kind. It expressly declares in its platform that the party is opposed to prohibition. Its members will be elected to the legislature upon that declaration and will be expected to be consistent with this declaration and so vote. Taking this view of the case will the temperance people feel like supporting the democratic party in this campaign?"

In the first place the democratic party in saying in their platform that they are opposed to prohibition, certainly do not say that if the amendment becomes a part of the organic law that they would be opposed to enacting a law to carry out and make the amendment operative or favor any legislation, contrary to the wishes of the people. They always have been and always will be willing to abide by the decision of the people, because they are of the people. The temperance people need have no hesitancy in trusting the democratic party, as they tell them precisely where they stand on this question—that they think the present law rigidly enforced is all that is necessary to suppress the evils of intemperance, and that they are not in favor of tinkering with the constitution at all.' But how is it with the republican party? Do you tell the temperance people what you propose to do? Do you say you are in favor of this proposed prohibitory amendment? Do you say you are in favor of prohibition? Do you say you are even in favor of temperance; no you do not. And suppose you did. What reliance can be placed on your pretentions, judging the future by the past, on this question?

Did you not as a party succeed in carrying this state at the last election upon, if not an absolute bargain certainly an implied agreement, that if you were placed in power you would give the temperance people of Indiana such measures of relief as they themselves might choose to present. Is it not a fact that all over this state wherever the temperance sentiment was strong Mr. Porter was declared to be par excellence, the temperance candidate and that his elevation was to assure that great mellenium when reform and temperance was to perform their sacred office in this state. Did you redeem this promise which you, as a party, made? No you did not. Did not the temperance people of the state prepare a bill, known as the "Local Option Bill" which they, by the petitions of over forty thousand voters, said they desired enacted into a law? Senator Shaffer, a republican, in presenting this bill said:

> "This bill is agitating the minds of more people all over the state than any other measure that will come before this present general assembly. It is a question upon which to-day the eyes of thousands of all classes and sexes rest, and they are watching it with as great solicitude as the fond mother would over her only child. Every Senator here to-day feels the responsibility resting on him of determining which way he shall vote in order to satisfy his conscience and do justice to his consituents, justice to suffering thousands, justice to law, order and humanity, justice to his family and every moral element of society and justice to himself and his God."

Is it not a fact that this bill was entrusted to a committee, appointed by the present republican Lieutenant-governor, as presiddent of the senate, a majority of whom were republicans, and did not this bill remain with the committee until a democratic member who understood your mode of pigion holeing bills that were obnoxious, came to its rescue, and by resolution compelled the committee to report it to the senate where it failed to pass. Now will you not admit that you, as a party, had the power to pass this bill. You had a majority in both branches of the legislature. You had a republican governor, a republican Lieutenant-governor, to preside over the senate, and a republican speaker of the house. You solemnly promised the temperance people to pass this bill; yet you did not. Why did you not? I will let the Indianapolis Journal, speaking for and in behalf of the republican senators who voted against this bill under the party lash administered in a party caucus, answer for you. In its issue of March 30, 1881, that paper says:

> "It may not be generally known, but it is a fact that the republican senatorial caucus decided, by a majority vote, to oppose this bill, and senators were bound by this action. Senators could not vote for local option without disregarding the action of the caucus of the party. And we presume no reasonable advocate of temperance will deny that it is more important to maintain the organization and ascendency of the republican party, than it is to establish local option."

What do you good temperance democrats, who, on the promise of republican leaders, left your party two years ago, twenty thousand strong, led on by John W. Gerrish and voted for Porter, and the republican legislature, on the express promise that they would pass this local option bill. Now think of them, as a party, to be trusted. Did not forty-seven thousand sworn voters asked the legislature of Indiana to pass this bill? Did not the majority of the committee on temperance, who were republicans, present a report against the passage of this bill, and did not the legislature refuse to pass it, although they had a majority in both branches of the legislature; Did not Mr. Gerrish go before that committee and there declare that forty thousand temperance voters of the state had petitioned, and prayed the senate to give the people of this state the local option bill. That upon the express understanding, had with the leaders of your party that they would pass this bill, that he turned over to you all of the temperance votes in the southern part of the state, thereby defeating Mr. Landers. Did not the temperance people all over the state condemn you for not passing this bill, and did not the W. C. T. U. meet in Indianapolis in an indignation meeting and pass resolutions condemning Gov. Porter, the committee on temperance, the republican legislature and the presiding officers of both houses. But at this time you claimed that the present law was good enough. Now suppose the amendment is carried and sent home to the people again and they ratify it. Would anyone suppose for an instant that a republican legislature would enact a law to enforce its provisions—certainly not unless forsooth the caucus should so decide, and I am afraid it would be as it was two years ago: That the republican party would be regarded of more importance than any temperance legislation. Did your governor say even one word in favor of temperance legislation during the entire session of the last legislature. What republican paper spoke in favor of temperance during that time? Did not the Indianapolis Journal of April 2, 1881, in an editorial say:

> "How long will it be before the friends of temperance will realize the truth, that no law which interferes with the personal liberty of the citizen in regard to his eating or drinking, and by attempting to regulate and control his social habits or customs, and his personal and friendly intercourse with his friends or neighbors, can hope to commend its coercive features to public sentiment. All laws are dependent for their efficacy upon public opinion and there is in the hearts of men a permanent protest against the intemperance of the law in the sumptuary, social and family manners, customs and habits of the general mass of men. It is impossible to enforce such laws against an adverse public opinion. The temperance cause will never make any real and permanent advance until it unloads those who offensively assume to take charge of the morals of the people unasked and not wanted, an instance of the truth of our statement is now seen in Kansas."

It was the effects of this article that caused the republican senatorial caucus to decide adversely on the local option bill. If it was rignt to obey the liquor element then and give no heed to the temperance people, have we any evidence that you will not do so again. You cannot show a line, a word, a law or a sentiment emanating from the republican party, as a party, that was in favor of temperance during the last session of the legisture. Now what say the temperance people? It was king caucus threatened by king alcohol that controlled the last legislature. Which will you trust? M. M.

How to Save.

All hard workers are subject to billions attacks which may end in dangerous illness. Kansas Letter.

JAS. A. BARNS,

Dear sir:—After living seven months in prohibition Kansas, I will say that plenty of whisky is drank in the little city of Clay Center, and the most of it drank by republicans, as there are but few democrats here to drink. Though the saloon keepers are heavily fined and imprisoned, yet we see drunken men upon the streets. St. John and prohibition are considered frauds. In Topeka, Leavenworth and other large places saloons sell openly, while St. John is away making prohibition speeches. The republicans who are running for office are all "temperance" men, of course.

We have had a fine summer and good crops, although the frosts injured the wheat on the bottom land we have a good yield. Oats will average from 30 to 60 bushels to the acre, and the corn crop will not be as good as it should be. There has been a large amount of hay made, and vegetables of all kinds are plenty except cabbage. There is a big crop of peaches and some of the finest I ever saw. They range in price from 25 cents to $2 per bushel. Apples are getting plenty in market at $1 a bushel. Stock of all kinds is high except Texas ponies.

There has been a building boom in Clay Center. Thirteen brick business rooms 100 feet long and two story high and also a number of dwelling houses.

Land has been steadily advancing and the demand good. There was a section two miles from here that sold for $18,000, with no improvements of any account and no water. I like the country well so far, and the roads are splendid. Direct all who are coming to Kansas to this place.

G. W. DOWNS.

Birthday Party.

A party was given at the residence of Jacob Lochner, on Friday evening September 8th, in honor of his son Peter's twenty-first birthday. Seventy-five were in attendance, including the Erick Chapel band, they furnished some very excellent music for the occasion. Quite a number of presents were received. At twelve o'clock the dining room doors were thrown open and tables loaded with refreshments were exposed to view. After supper was served, the young people joined in wishing Mr. Lochner success and happiness through the voyage of life, after which good nights were said and the guests departed.

DEATH AND LIFE.

DEAN STANLEY.

O Death! how sweet the thought
That this world's strife is ended;
That all we feared and all we sought
Are in one deep sleep ended.

No more the anguish of to-day
To wait the darker morrow;
No more stern call to do or say,
To brood o'er sin and sorrow.

O Death! how dear the hope
That through the thickest shade,
Beyond the steep and sunless slope
Our treasured store is laid.

The loved, the mourned, the honored dead
That lonely path have trod,
And that same path we too must tread,
To be with them and God.

O Life! thou too are sweet;
Thou breath'st the fragrant breath
Of those whom even the hope to meet
Can cheer the gate of death.

Life is the scene their presence lighted;
Its every hour and place
Is with dear thought of them united,
Irradiate with their grace.

There lie the duties small and great
Which we from them inherit;
There spring the aims that lead as straight
To their celestial spirit.

All glorious things, or seen or heard,
For love or justice done,
The hopeful dead, the ennobling word,
By this poor life are won.

O Life and Death! like Day and Night,
Your guardian task combine.
Pillar of darkness and of light,
Lead through Earth's storm till bright
Heaven's dawn shall shine.

BIBBS.

Castle's Magazine.

There was no doubt about it; John Weare was perfectly wretched that night. He had quarreled with Jennie Bell, and he wasn't going to make it up. The fact was she gave herself too many airs, and he didn't mean to stand it any longer. He didn't care if she was pretty; that was no reason why she should let half a dozen fellows at a time hang about the shop, or stroll in one at a time, and hang leaning on her elbows, chatter and smirk and smile over the counter; cadets and officers, too, wild young fellows, who only did so for their own idle amusement, and would no more dream of marrying her than they would of inviting her to a ball that was coming off next month. To be sure, he was only a common cavalry soldier, but then he had been in the service a good many years now, had an excellent character, and a good trade at his back. His father had died not long since, and there was a cottage all ready for Jennie to walk into, and they might settle down at once if she'd only be sensible. Jennie acted as shop-woman for her sister, Mrs. Evans. A very poor little shop it was, very small and badly stocked, for Mrs. Evans had only managed to get a few pounds' worth of things with what had been suscribed for her at the garrison after the fever had carried off her husband. The speculation answered pretty well at first, for many of the officers' wives, knowing what an industrious woman Mrs. Evans was, made a point of buying their tapes and cotton, and sticks of sealing-wax of her. Then Jennie's pretty face was seen behind the counter, and the shop was filled from morning until night with officers and frisky young cadets, and the original customers took flight—though Mrs. Evans did not know it, believeing the business was safe in the keeping of Jennie, worked hard at the dress-making (she had three children to support, and the shop would not do it.)

The officers were not profitable customers, for they only went to flirt with Jennie under the excuse of buying a penny paper, or perhaps asking for a time-table.

Jennie made the most trim, and pretty, and obliging of shop-women, and the place itself was always a pattern of neatness; but the officers' wives did not care to go and buy thread where they were evidently interrupting a flirtation, and so the business continued to fall off, and Mrs. Evans began to get quite unhappy about it. Jennie—pretty, kind-hearted, thoughtless Jennie—had no idea that she had anything to do with it, or she would have sent every one of her admirers off at a pace that would have astonished them. She had been only too delighted, after her brother-in-law died, to come from Devonshire and live with her sister at Woolwich—not only because she was very fond of her sister, but also because she had wished many times to see John Weare again. She had made his acquaintance when her brother and he—for they had been in the same regiment—were stationed at Plymouth, and she had paid them a flying visit with her father. John had told her that he was tired of the service and wished to settle down, and she inwardly thought that he could do no better than to ask her to settle with him. He had been very attentive when she came to Woolwich, and gradually established himself on the footing of a lover, till he found the shop always filled with the officers and cadets. At first he was shy of appearing before his superiors, then he got jealous and at last angry, for he felt and knew that they meant her no good, and beside it was doing real injury to the business of the shop. At last he spoke his mind and told the coquettish Jennie what he thought, and was snubbed for his pains.

"If you think I don't know how to take care of myself, Mr. Weare, you are very much mistaken, and I don't want anyone to tell me what's right or wrong. I know for myself."

"Well, Miss Jennie, I didn't mean to give offense. I only told you what I thought."

"Then you might have kept your thoughts to yourself," she said, with a little toss of her pretty head—"unless they had been nice ones," she added. He heard the aside and picked up his courage.

"Its awfully hard, too, when one that cares really can't get near you," he replied. Just then Jennie caught sight of Capt. McGee, a tall and handsome man, with long whiskers and a red nose, coming in the direction of the shop, with a big bunch of flowers in his hand. She had heard John Weare's last words, but she was secretly of the opinion that "he ought to have come to the scratch before," so she thought that a little jealousy might do him good.

"Oh, here comes Capt. McGee," she said, in a delighted tone.

"Well, he's just the biggest blackleg in the service, Jennie, and if you take my advice you'll send him off sharp."

"I believe you are jealous, Mr. Weare, and telling stories about the captain; He is always very polite to me," and she smoothed her pretty hair and arranged the trifles on the counter.

"Oh, he's polite enough, no doubt."

"And he's bringing me some flowers."

"Now look here, Jennie, are you going to take them?"

"Of course I am."

"Well, then, good bye."

"Good bye," she laughed. Of course she knew he wouldn't go.

"Jennie, he'll be in directly, and I shall be off; but you must choose between him and me. If you are going to keep on talking to him, I shall never come in the place again, so which is it to be?"

"The captain."

"But I am not joking; I shall never see you again."

"No more am I joking, so good bye."

"Good-bye"—and he went.

II.

He kept resolutely away for a whole month—never once went near the place. If Jennie wanted him she might send for him, or get her sister to invite him to tea, as she had done before. But John Weare was not sent for, neither was he invited to tea, and his spirits began to wax low.

"If she cared for me she'd have got in my way somehow before this—trust a woman," he thought.

The idea of not being cared for was not cheerful. That night he strolled carelessly by the shop, but on the opposite side of the way. Nothing was to be seen of Jennie. He walked on in a brown study, then crossed over, and went deliberately by the shop, with only one eye, however, turned in its direction, but not a sign of Jennie. He went back to the barracks in a dejected frame of mind.

"Its an awful pity—such a nice girl; and there's the cottage all ready for her to step into, and me ready to retire from the service, and a good trade at my back; its too bad, all along of that Capt. McGee, too. And the fruit in the garden (of the cottage) all ripe, and no one to pick it."

The very next morning John Weare walked deliberately into the shop and asked for a penny newspaper, and had the felicity of being served by Mrs. Evans.

"Quite a stranger, Mr. Weare," she said, but that was the only remark she made, and for the life of him he could not screw up his courage to ask for her sister.

That night John Weare was miserable.

"She can't care a rush for me," he thought, and marched all over the town and nearly to Greenwich and back in his excitement.

The next day was a lucky one for John. He came across Bibbs. Bibbs was Mrs. Evan's eldest boy. No one knew what his real name was, or why he was called Bibbs; but he was never called anything else.

"Bibbs," said John Weare, "come and have some fruit," and he carried him off in triumph to the cottage and stuffed him with gooseberries until he couldn't move, and black currants until his mouth was as black as a crow. Then he carried him inside and stood him on the table, and sat down before him.

"How old are you, Bibbs?"

He thought it better to begin the conversation with a question.

"Five and a half. Is that your sword up there?"

"Yes. Who gave you those bronze shoes, Bibbs?"

Now he knew Jennie had given them to him, but he so wanted to hear her name.

"Auntie. She's going away soon," he added. "Let me look at your sword now?"

"Where is she going to?" he asked in consternation.

"Devonshire. Do let me try on your sword?"

"Why is she going?" he asked, with a sick feeling in his heart.

"She's ill, I think, and she's always crying now; one day she was crying over her silver thing you gave her, and kissing it like anything."

The "silver thing" was a little heart of about the size of a shilling, which he had bought at Charleston fair last October, and timidly requested her to accept.

John Weare jumped up and showed Bibbs his sword, and carried him on his back all over the place, and entreated him to have more black currants in his delight. But Bibbs declined.

"Aunt Jennie's going to bring me some from Eltham to-night," he said.

So Jennie was going to Eltham, was she. John Weare took Bibbs home, and on his way presented him with a white woolly lamb that moved on wheels and squaked, and a monkey that went up a stick on being gently pushed.

"Crying over her silver thing!" said John Weare. "I'll go and hang about the Eltham road till I see her and beg her pardon."

And he went, and Jennie met him, and pouted and declared she hadn't once thought of him, and then broke down and cried. And John begged her pardon, and declared that he had been a heartless brute; and then Jennie contradicted him and said it was all her fault, and told him how Mrs. Dunlop, the colonel's wife, had one day walked in and told her, in kindest possible manner that she was spoiling her sister's business, for the ladies who had been interested in her welfare kept away because of Jennie's flirting propensities, which filled up the shop with idle officers, who were always in the way; and how she had been so ashamed and wretched, and so cut up at the desertion of John Weare, that she had intended to go back to Devonshire.

"But you won't now?" he said, as they leaned over the stile leading to they Eltham fields. "You'll get ready at once, and we'll be married as soon as possible, before the fruit in the garden is spoilt?"

It took a long time to talk her into it (about three-quarters of an hour,) but then she was very happy at heart, and chattered like a young magpie, and told John how she had snubbed Capt. McGee, and had thrown all his flowers out of the window.

"And it was really through that dear Bibbs that you waylaid me to-night?" she asked.

"Certainly."

"Why, but for him I might have never seen you again!"

"Perhaps not."

"I'll give Bibbs a regular hug when I get home," she thought. And she did, and the day before she was married she bought him a rocking-horse, which he delights in to this day.

As an instance of the ease with which inventions make their way in the nineteenth century, it may be remembered that nitro-glycerine, discovered in 1846, is now extensively employed, while gunpowder, invented in the eighth century, did not become a determining element in war until the reign of Henry VII.

The ailing fortunes of the Romans caused them to abandon Britain in the fifth century. As soon as the legions were gone, the Northern barbarians began to harass the Southern people. Their petition, sent to the Roman General, ran: "The barbarians chase us into the sea; the sea throws us back on the barbarians; we have only the hard choice left us of perishing by the sword or by the waves." This fear of barbarians induced the Britons to ask the aid of the Saxons, whose coming influenced speech, manners, and the entire history of England.

Quarantine was invented in Venice in the year 1127, all merchants and others from the Levant or Eastern ports being obliged to stop in the house of St. Lazarus or the Lazaretto forty days before they were allowed to enter the city. Various Southern States copied the example of Venice; the habit was soon spread into every European country, and was introduced by the Venetians into Syria and Egypt. At Gaza or Beyrout the guardian who formerly with a long pole, freely exercised, kept one denizen of the Lazaretto from communication with another, was a Venetian, while the sick were attended by an idiot of a medico hailing from some part of Italy, who looked at them from a safe distance through asafœtida smoke.

Flameless Combustion.

St. James Gazette.

The Society of Chemical Industry, although less than a year old, is an infant of much promise; and some sensation was made at the meeting at Owens College last month by Mr. Thomas Fletcher's new theory of combustion. The belief has often been stated that if it were possible to produce combustion without flame, the temperature attained by the consumption of any fuel could be enormously increased; and it seems now that Mr. Fletcher has proved that it is possible. Directing an ordinary blow-pipe flame upon a ball of iron wire weighing some three pounds, Mr. Fletcher after a few moments blew it out. The temperature immediately rose until the iron was fused like wax, and was steadily maintained. Of this experiment we are told that the room was darkened, but the closest examination did not show a trace of flame, although the fact that the gas was burning was proved by repeatedly relighting and extinguishing it." This flameless heat was then directed into a fire-clay chamber containing a "refractory" clay crucible, which was "partially fused and worked into a ball like soft putty," while the walls of fire-clay were at the same time fused by what may be well called latent heat. It is quite clear that no such results have been before obtained by similar means. The gas supply used was given by a quarter-inch pipe; and from Mr. Fletcher's experiments it appears that the presence of flame is not really a sign of perfect combustion, and that far greater results can be obtained in its absence. Whether the discovery can be utilized in practice or not remains to be seen; but it is something to have demonstrated the possibility of absolutely flameless, and at the same time perfect combustion.

Her Romance Cruelly Crushed.

Chicago Tribune.

"And are you then so very romantic, my sweet?" Harold asks, drawing the girl closer to him and kissing her tenderly.

"You know I am, darling," the girl replies, tapping with her riding-whip the pretty foot that peeps coyly out from beneath the dark blue dress.

"An elopement would be very romantic," says Harold.

The face of the girl lights up with a radiant smile. "It would be delicious," she exclaims. "To steal away on a beautiful summer night, like this, with the moon shedding glory over all the earth, and seek some little ivy-crowned chapel where a hooded priest was waiting, and there be made the wife of the man you love, would be just two sweet"—and she draws still closer to him.

"It is moonlight to-night," Harold says.

"Yes," replies the girl.

"And there is a chapel in yonder dell."

"I know it," Bertha says.

"There is only one thing wanting" —he speaks the words slowly and with a tinge of pathos in his tones.

"What is that?" asks the girl, bending forward to catch his every word.

"A man to marry," he hisses in hoarse, bitter tones, and flees with a mocking laugh into the tall timber.

CURE FOR NEURALGIA.

A Tennessee Physician's Experience with Ether Spray.

Dr. McColgan in the Southern Practitioner.

In the spring of 1869 we had the most severe attack of facial neuralgia, which it has been our lot to witness in more than eighteen years of practice. For two weeks we had to confine ourselves to a darkened chamber, and the lightest footfall on the floor caused us the most excruciating agony. All the remedies, local, general, regular and irregular, without any abatement of the trouble. One side of our face was terribly swolen, so much so that it was impossible to extract a decayed molar, to which we charged all our suffering, and it seemed as though we were destined to shuffle off this mortal coil by exhaustion from pain and want of sleep. We finally concluded to incise the swolen jaw, thinking there was an abscess about the root of the decayed tooth, and as the parts were so extremely sensative, and, moreover, having a vague dread of chloroform, we thought we would try local anæsthesia by evaporating ether on the surface until the part was frozen. Our attendant complied with our instructions, and the spray was turned on. The first sensation was one of cutting pain, gradually subsiding until when congelation took place we felt perfectly easy, and ordered the cutting operation deferred. Then for fifteen hours we slept the sleep of the righteous, and when we awoke found the rubor et tumor, colore, cum dolore entirely vanished, and we arose and went about our business, and to this good day, although we carry a perfect cabinet of curious teeth in our mouth, have never had a neuralgic twinge or touch of that "hell o' a disease," a tootnache. Well, to be honest about it, we did not at the time give the freezing process any credit for the cure; we thought the attack had about spent its force, and was going to act well anyway, and we paid but little attention to the matter for a year or more, when a relative, Captain Harris, was visiting us, and took a spell of neuralgia, with which he had for over a year been periodically afflicted, rarely passing a month without an attack. To give him present ease, for which we did not think of any permanent benefit, we tried the spray all along the track of the affected nerve, and until it turned the skin white. The relief was immediate, and, he has since informed me, permanent.

Since then we have used it in fifteen or twenty cases with uniform success, never having to make more than two applications, and it came to be a stock remedy, and we thought, that in all probability was so with most physicians; for we remember that when Richardson first introduced it (like all new things in medicine, it was vaunted for everything), and would probably have still thought so if a gentleman hadn't called on us some time ago to know if we hadn't a new treatment for neuralgia, and stated that a couple of years ago he was on a steamboat and was suffering with that disease when Captain Harris informed him that he was cured by some sort of a freezing process, and advised him to try it. When the boat reached Louisville he called on two or three dentists and three of the most distinguished surgeons of the city, and they told him they knew of no such remedy for neuralgia, and advised him not to have anything of the kind done. On hearing his story we looked over old medical journals and found but a single allusion to local anæsthesia as a remedy for neuralgia.

Now we must confess that all this sounds very much like the story of the superannuated clergyman who accidentally, while in the West Indies, discovered a cure for consumption, only we don't want any one to send a stamp for particulars. Any physician can purchase a hand-ball atomizer for $1 50, and try it. They may use either rhigolene or ether, and it will only be necessary to let the spray play upon the part until the skin turns white. We promised to offer no theory for its action, but we will venture this opinion: That the intense cold, by the revulsive effect, causes a complete change in the nutrition of the nerve; what this change is we will not at present venture to assert, only hoping that others who have better opportunities will give the matter a trial and fully test it.

Burlington Letter.

As you approach the city from the Illinois side, one's attention is attracted by the excruciating slowness with which the train moves. Your impatience prompts you to ask the cause, and some wise person, who has traveled, smiles and says we have reached the big bridge. He is right, for here the great Mississippi is spanned by a magnificent iron, draw-bridge, built under the direction of the C. B. & Q. R. R. Co.; it is 2185 feet long, and consists of nine spans.

Burlington was incorporated in 1837, and at present has a population of about 25,000. It is situated on the west bank of the river, 250 miles above St. Louis and 210 miles from Chicago, and occupies the valley and slopes of the hills at the mouth of a small stream known as Hawkeye Creek. The business portion of the city is situated in a semi-circular-shaped valley, surrounded on three sides by what are known as North, South, West and Prospect Hills, on each of which is located the residence property, reaching back in either direction for nearly two miles. On North Hill is a handsome little open park, surrounded with the fine residences. The park is replete with delicate shrubbery, fountains and seats; and here hundreds gather twice a week to promenade to the music of "dot leetle German band."

During the past few years Burlington has made rapid growth. It is quite a railroad center; four of the companies having machine and car shops located here. The C. B. & Q. R. R have just completed the erection of immense shops, covering nine acres at a cost of $700,000 which is considered a large addition to the place, giving employment to hundreds of machinists and laborers. The same company owns large stock yards, covering eight acres, with a capacity of 200 car loads. The principal buildings worthy of note, are the Court and Opera Houses. Who wouldn't be a lawyer, if every one was sure of of such a building in which to slaughter Blackstone? who wouldn't be a county treasurer, with such a fine office and vaults in which to keep the county's lucre?

The Court-house is a massive iron and stone structure, handsomely finished inside with tile flooring, and wainscoating in every room, of white and black marble, mantles, etc., two large court rooms with marble desks, and a marble "Throne" for the judge. Imagine our Judge C. sitting behind a stone desk, with the background an over-hanging canopy of marble; couldn't he deal out justice? But it might have a tendency to make him marble hearted, though; and it might cause a criminal to commit himself, at the thought of seeing his toombstone erected in the court room, even before had his trial.

In point of elegance the opera house ranks third in the United States. My lack of power will not afford me even an attempt at description; but allow me to place at the disposal of some arbiter elegantiarum a large four-story, stone-front building, profusely decorated on the exterior with stone statuary, and an auditorium finished in walnut and bronze, with two galleries and four proscenium boxes, together with a lot of fine carpets, (the whole of the auditorium except the upper gallery being carpeted in bright red), velvet curtains with gold fringe, silver-mounted fixtures, iron and plush chairs, and delicate white satin-finished drop-curtain, and he will arrange for you the Burlington opera-house. Will Mr. Dolan please take items: but he has no President of the C. B & Q. to back him(?)

There are twenty churches here: four Baptist, one Christian, one Episcopal, one Congregational, six Methodist, three Presbyterian, one Lutheran, and three Roman Catholic. The Baptist Association have an $85,000 University in a flourishing condition.

Masons and Odd Fellows are largely represented. A public library of 10,000 volumes. Three daily papers, one German and two English, including the much quoted Hawkeye. Holly system of water works, and many other features that tend toward making a Metropolis. "Fearing that I have already taken too much of your valuable space," (this is stereotyped and kept standing for "fat," is why I use it) I will say in conclusion that Burlington is well situated for becoming a great commercial and manufacturing city, with its lines of railroads radiating in every direction, bringing products from the north, south, east and west, and the old Mississippi at her door, will always be an important artery in cheap transportation, carrying on her bosom grain, lumber, coal and other heavy merchandize, to the markets of the Sunny South.

G. B. W.

The Character of Martin Van Buren.

Judge Tourgee's Story in Our Continent.

Probably no character in our history is so hard to analyze as that of Martin Van Buren. The secret of his power seems to have died with him. He was not renowned as an orator, and yet must have possessed great power as an advocate. He is not usually credited with having devised any great public measure, yet during the most important epoch of his party's history every measure to which it owed success not only required his approval, but showed his shaping or modifying touch. He was not eminent in debate, but was always a leader of his party in legislation. He is said to have been personally calm, self-poised and unconfiding. He heard every one's opinion, but took no one's advice. He was accounted shrewd and cunning, but was cautious to the verge of timidity, and at the same time confident to the verge of rashness. He never exulted over victory nor whimpered at defeat. He had few personal friends, but an amazing popular following. In theory he was the broadest of Democrats; in practice, the most exclusive of aristocrats. None of his associates seem to have regarded him with affection, and few of his opponents looked upon him with animosity. Perhaps no political life in our history shows so few mistakes. In no single instance did he fail to make the best of the occasion, viewing it from his own standpoint; unless it was the last and greatest of his life—the opportunity to lead the movement that eventually transformed the nation. He seems to have had all men's regard, but to have given none his trust. By his opponents he was called cunning; by his followers sagacious. More justly than almost any other politician he may be said to have achieved his own success. Living, he was the envy of all who would succeed; dead, he has been the model of unnumbered failures. Few statesmen would covet his fame; fewer still do not covet his success. He is the sphinx of our history, the hidden hand in many great events; a man in whom the elements were so deftly mixed that no friend knew his heart and no enemy came within his guard.

The Great Change in New York.

New York Sun.

The work of turning New York from a city of private, individual dwellings houses into one of tenements, each inhabited by large numbers of families, is now going on more rapidly than ever. It will not take many years to make the city very closely resemble Paris, for instance, in that respect. A comparatively small number of people will have houses to themselves—hotels, as they call them in Paris. The great mass of the population, poor and well-to-do, will be crowded in tenements.

Already the great majority of the people of the city live in tenements, either those so called, or in apartment houses, which are the same thing made more elegant and more convenient. Add to these tenement houses at the rate of a thousand a year, and their total will soon be enough to accommodate not half and more, but two-thirds and three-quarters of the people; even all except a small fraction.

During the first six months of this year 1,280 buildings, of an estimated cost of $27,800,805, were undertaken in New York. Of these 322 were flat houses, 228 tenements, and 106 tenements with stores. Nearly half of the money spent in building was laid out on these classes of structures.

JOCOSITIES.

A charming young lady named Helen,
Got away with half a muskmelon;
Her screams after a while
Could be heard for a mile,
And they say the poor girl is still yellin.

He circled then—his sweet behest,
To kiss the one he loved best,
For all she frowned, for all she chid,
He kissed that little maid, he did.
And then—though why I can't decide—
The little maid looked satisfied.

Tying her bonnet under her chin,
She tied her raven ringlets in,
But not alone in the silken snare
Did she catch her lovely floating hair,
For tying her bonnet under her chin
She tied a young man's heart within.

And many a time that little chin
He's heard from since, you bet and win!
And bonnets she's had for her raven hair,
And many a time he's been called a bear;
And now she is throwing her ringlets back,
And says she shall have a sealskin sacque.

"How far is it to Manayunk?" asked a weary Irishman, who was going there afoot. "Seven miles," was the reply. "Whom do you wish to see there?" "Faith, it's myself I'd loik to see there," was the retort.

"Mamma, what makes angels?" asked a little boy who had been reading of the heavenly inhabitants. The mother glanced out into the orchard and, with a warning look, solemnly replied: "Unripe fruit, my dear."

"Do I believe in woman's influence?" said a man on Twenty-second street. "Well, do you see that young fellow trundling a baby-carriage along the street with a look of angelic resignation on his face an inch and a half thick? His wife had just returned from a tea-party and was wagging her tongue like a buzz-saw, when he shut off further talk by by quietly observing: "There is a loquacity which tells nothing." It is related of a young American clergyman who was travelling this summer in England in company with an Englishman, that he kept his eyes on the landscape, and his companion said: "I suppose you are not accustomed to such rapid travelling, but I beg to assure you there is no danger." "Thank you," the American replied, "I have been accustomed all my life to going faster than this, but I am expecting this train to run off the little island."

Sleeper's in Church.

Obediah Turner's journal, 1630—61.

1646. June ye 4. Allen Bridges hath been chose to wake ye sleepers in meeting. And being much proude of his place, must needs have a fox taile fixed to ye end of a long staff wherewith he may brush ye faces of them ye will have napps in time of discourse; likewise a sharpe thorne wherewith he may pick such as be most sounde. On ye last Lord, his day, as he strutted about ye meeting house, he did spy Mr. Tomlins, sleeping with much comforte, his head kept steadie being ye corner, and his hand grasping ye rail. And so spying, Allen did quickly thrust his staff behind Dame Ballard and give him a grievous pick upon ye hand. Whereuppon Mr. Tomlins did spring upp much above ye floore and with terrific force strike with his hand against ye wall; and also, to ye great wonder of all, prophanlie exclaim, in a loud voice, "cuss ye wood-chuck;" he dreamed, as it seemed, yt a wood-chuck had seized and bit his hand. But on coming to know where hee was and ye greate scandall hee had committed, he seemed much abashed, but did not speake. And I think he will not soone againe go to sleepe in meeting. Ye women may sometimes sleepe and none know it, by reason of their enormous bonnets. Mr. Whiting doth pleasantlie say yt from ye pulpit hee doth seemed to be preaching to stacks of straw with men sitting here and there among them.

Anxiety Among the Brethren.

Philadelphia Record.

There is an ill-suppressed anxiety among church members to learn the result of a private ministerial convention in New York which met to discuss the question of pastoral kissing. The only information vouchsafed has been that they strongly condemned kissing "the wrong woman." This is valuable as far as it goes, but it leaves unsolved the important question whom they meant by "the wrong woman." With some people the phrase would mean any woman not the pastor's wife, while others might construe it to take in only the woman who couldn't keep still about it.

AN OPIUM PARLOR.

A Philadelphia House Over Whose Threshold Only Wealthy Women Can Step.

Philadelphia Times.

Mrs. Kate Chisom is the proprietress of the only opium parlor in this city. She resides in a small, unpretending brick house on Mount Vernon street, a few doors from Tenth. A silver plate on the door bears her name, but there is no other indication that the house is inhabited. The green blinds are always kept closed, and the door is only opened for the patrons of the place, who silently come and go. Mrs. Chisom is a pale, refined-looking woman of about 35 years, and her appearance does not indicate a victim of the opium habit. As far as could be seen in a hasty inspection of the three rooms on the first floor, the interior of the house is furnished with a luxury rarely attempted in a house of the kind. The walls are rich in gilding and decoration; on the floors are heavy Turkish and Persian rugs and statuettes, pictures, and bric-a-brac are scattered about in every direction. "The rooms used for smoking are up-stairs," said Mrs. Chisom yesterday, "and, of course, I cannot let you see them; but you can judge by these that no expense has been spared in fitting up the house. I came to Philadelphia on the 15th of last February, and I am quite satisfied that I shall do very well here. My customers are constantly increasing, and among them are some of the wealthiest ladies in the city." On being questioned about her antecedents, Mrs. Chisom told a story of an adventurous career.

"Seventeen years ago," she said, "I married a wealthy Southern cotton planter. He was the owner of a large plantation near New Orleans, and for two years I lived there happily. How did I begin to use opium? Well, it is the old story. I was ill and a friend advised me to try it. I did, and ever since that day I have been unable to do without it. My life became a burden. I neglected everything and could take interest in nothing connected with my home. I made several efforts to give up the habit, but I found it impossible; and after every attempt I began taking it in greater quantities than ever before. My husband died two years after my marriage, and after his death I turned everything I had into money and went to live in New York. There I put myself under the care of a physician who advertised to cure the opium habit. He gave me coffee baths and brandy in large doses, but I used to elude him and get the drug and take it secretly.

"It was in New York that I first earned to smoke opium. I was taken y a friend to an opium parlor on ighteenth street, kept by a French oman called Mme. Fanian. Mans- eld, Montaland, and other notorious omen were regular patrons of her lace. No men were admitted, and ooms were fitted up with oriental lux- ry. I often remained there a week at time without seeing the outside orld. Women prominent in society ame there also, but as a rule they did ot smoke much: the novelty of the hing alone seemed to attract them. It oon became too expensive for me to ontinue to go there, for her charges ere enormous. About this time the ea of having a place of my own sug ested itself to me. I had a number of iends and money enough left to furn- h a few rooms So I opened my pium parlor on East Sixteenth street. y place soon became popular. Many Mme. Fanian's customers came to e, and my success was assured. I ould be there to day had it not been r the treachery of one whom I be- iended. Among the frequenters of e French woman's place was a young tress, then playing a leading part in e of the New York theaters. She s very beautiful, and quite the rage mong the gilded youth who affect ings theatrical. She came original- , I think, from England, and of all e opium-takers I have ever seen she s the worst. She was completely fatuated with it, and, whenever she uld escape from her duties at the eater, she would come to Mme. Fan- n's, and smoke. A short time after ad opened my place, she came to , broken in health, and in abject verty. I pitied her, and took her in d gave her a home, but she proved ingrate, and I soon regretted my ndness to her. In order to obtain oney, she informed the husbands of me of my best patrons that their ves came to my house to smoke ium. Of course this greatly injured y business in New York, but it ght me a lesson that I have not for- ten."

Mrs. Chisom claims that many of e frequenters of her place on Mount rnon street move in good society d reside in the fashionable quarters the city, and she seems to consider rself a public benefactress in offering uiet retreat to women victims of opium habit, where they can in- ge in safety and comfort. "Those o are in any way known are stared a little by the others when they first ne," she naively remarked, "but y do not seem to mind this, and very sociable with each other. ey would use opium anyway, and y might as well come to me as take n their own homes. During the ter parties of three and four will n come together. Actresses gener- come in this way, remain two or e hours and then leave together." . Chisom refused to tell how much charged these aristocratic opium- kers, but from her indirect allu- s to coffee served every hour and iages constantly on hand her rges must be considerable. She rously excludes the sterner sex, ng that men do not interest the nen who indulge in opium adelphia Times.

ne of the best known belles of Vir- a was Mrs. Tuley, now living in an time mansion in this city. Years she was a constant visitor at the ite House. One of her earliest ures in Washington was at the New Year's reception of President roe on January 1, 1825. A letter ten by her at that time to a friend scribing the reception has come to t and is of interest.

he President's levee!" wrote Mrs. y, then a young girl, "is the great ure of the day. We arrived at the White House about 1 o'clock. There was quite a crowd already assembled. The Marine Band in full force was in the great hall playing the national airs, etc. We were ushered into the room where stood the President, his queenly looking wife and their two daughters, surrounded by the members of the Cabinet and their wives, and the Diplomatic Corps and their wives in full Court dress, emblazoned with jewels, orders, etc. It was a dazzling sight to me, a young girl just out of the dull routine of the school-room. Mr. Monroe was standing near the door, and as we were introduced we had the honor of shaking hands with him and passing the usual congratulations of the season. My impressions of Mr. Monroe are very pleasing. He is tall and well formed. His dress plain and in the old style, small clothes, silk hose, knee-buckles and pumps fastened with buckles. His manner was quiet and dignified. From the frank, honest expression of his eye, which is said to be 'the window of the soul,' I think he well deserved the encomium passed upon him by the great Jefferson, who said, 'Monroe was so honest that if you turned his soul inside out there would not be a spot on it.'

"We passed on and were presented to Mrs. Monroe and her two daughters, Mrs. Judge Hay and Mrs. Gouveneur, who stood by their mother and assisted in receiving. Mrs. Monroe's manner is very gracious and she is a regal-looking woman. Her dress was superb black velvet; neck and arms bare and beautifully formed; her hair in puffs and dressed high on the head and ornamented with white ostrich plumes; around her neck an elegant pearl necklace. Though no longer young, she is still a very handsome woman. You remember Mrs. —— told us that, when Mr. Monroe was sent as Minister to France, Mrs. Monroe accompanied him, and in Paris she told us that she was called "la belle Americanie." She also told us that she was quite a belle in New York in the latter part of the Revolutionary War. Her maiden name was Korutright. Mrs. Judge Jay (the President's oldest daughter) is very handsome also—tall and graceful, and, I hear, very accomplished. She was educated in Paris at the celebrated Boarding School kept by Mme. Campan, and among her intimate school friends was the beautiful Hortense de Beauharnais, step daughter of the Emperor Napoleon. Her dress was crimson velvet, gold cord and tassel round the waist, white plume in the hair, handsome jewelry, bare neck and arms. The other daughter, Mrs. Gouveneur, is also handsome—dress rich white satin, trimmed with a great deal of blond lace, embroidered with silver thread, bare neck and arms, pearl jewelry and white plume in the hair. By-the-by plumes in the hair seem to be the most fashionable style of head dress for married ladies.

"All the lower rooms were opened, and though well filled, not uncomfortably so. The rooms were warmed by fires of hickory wood in the fireplaces, and with the handsome brass andirons and fenders quite remind me of our grand old wood fires in Virginia. Wine was handed about in wine glasses on larger silver salvers by colored waiters, dressed in dark livery, gilt buttons, etc. I suppose some of them must have come from Mr. Monroe's old family seat, "Oak Hall," Virginia. We met a number of acquaintances, and Mrs. ——introduced me to many of the dignitaries of the land, among them Mr. John Quincy Adams and his wife. You know he is the Secretary of State. Mrs. Adams is very handsome. She is petite in figure and full of spirit and conversation. Her dress was garnet velvet, with blue plumes in her hair. Secretary Calhoun is very striking-looking—tall and graceful, dark complexioned and dark eyes."

None of His Business.

Detroit Free Press.

"What I was gwine to remark," began Bro. Gardner, as took an undissolved troche from his mouth and placed it on a corner of his desk, "was to de effect dat it am none of our business what our nayburs do, onless dey frow stones at our dog or toss deir oyster-cans ober our fences. One great cause of so much unhappiness arises from de fack dat sartin people want to know all about sartin odder people. Frinstance, Deacon Turner's wife runs ober to my house an' tells my wife dat Elder Dorker's wife has got a new bonnet dat nebber cost less dan $12. De Elder am workin' on a straight salary of $8 per week, an' he has a wife an' fo' chill'en. How kin he save up $12 on sich a salary as dat? How did his wife get dat bonnet? An' what cheek fur a poo' woman who can't set table for seben or ride on de street kyar once a week to flam out in dat manner! De wimin sot dar' an' talk an' wonder an' git mad an' want ter pull ha'r an' I slip out an' go to pullin' weeds in de garden. It's nobod'y bizness how she got dat bonnet, an' yit some folks feel sick bekase dey cant find out.

My ole woman goes down town to buy three towels wid a red bo'der, a spool of No. 60 white thread, an' half a yard of linen to make me some cuffs. She am as pleasant as a June mawnin' when she starts out, but when she returns dar am a hull cyclone in her left eye. She pens me up in a co'ner an' demands to know how de gals who stan' behind de sto' counters fur three, fo' an' five dollars a week kin pay bo'd an' washin' and dress in silks and satins. I can't tell, an' de less I know 'bout it de madder she gits; an' bimeby dar cums a climax an' somebody gits hurt. If a gal kin make fo' dollars a week go furder dan I kin twenty, dat's none o' my bizness or yo' bizness.

"De odder day my ole woman cum home from Jedge Blank's an' said dat de Jedge's hired gal had gin 'em notice dat she was about to go to de kentry on her annual six weeks' wacation. Mrs. Gardner was hoppin' mad, but I was as cool as a red-hot crowbar. Why shouldn't a hired gal want to go to de kentry an' have a rest from breakin' dishes an' kickin' tinwar' aroun' de kitchen? It improves her complexshun, braces up her form, shapes her feet, an' often results in her marryin' a millionaire. If de Jedge an' his fam'ly can't afford to go, dat's nuffin' to do wid de servant.

"Mrs. Kernul Dash was axin' my ole woman only las' nite if she couldn't hunt her up a seamstress who'd be kind an' obleegin' 'nuff to do a few days' work at twelve shillin's a day. She won't git one. Dis am de season when de poo', overworkrd an' half paid seamstress packs her trunk, draws her money from de bank, an' hies to de seashore to secure de benefits of de ozone an' salt-water bathin'. Arter dey reach Long Branch it am hard to tell one of 'em from de wife of a banker or broker, but dat's none of our bizness. Let yer naybur save, squandar, keep sober, git drunk, w'ar good close or ole close—it's nuffin' to you. Let us now extricate ourselves upon de reg'lar order of bizness."

Death From Hydrophobia.

Dallas special to New York Herald.

A private dispatch to your correspondent to-night announces the death, at his home in Grayson county, of George A. Reeves, Speaker of the present Texas House of Representatives, and a candidate for re-election to the next Legislature. His death was a shocking one. About a month ago he was bitten by a rabid dog. Every known remedy was tried, including the application of mad stones, but they were of no avail. A few days since he manifested symptoms of hydrophobia, and two days ago the attack was so violent that it was found necessary to tie him to his bed. He frothed and snapped and raved continuously in the most horrible manner until he died. Physicians were in constant attendance, but could not relieve him.

Mr. Reeves was one of the most popular public men in Texas. He was born in Crawford county, Arkansas, about sixty-five years ago. His father, Wm. Reeves, represented Crawford county in the Arkansas Legislature upward of forty years ago. Shortly afterward he moved to Texas and settled at Old Fort Georgetown, then in Fannin county, but now a part of Grayson, and the family have resided there ever since. The deceased was a deputy sheriff in 1848, was a major in a Texan regiment during the war between the States, had several times been a member of the Legislature, and years ago presided over the House as Speaker, the same position he occupied at the time of his death. Mr. Reeves was a planter and a man of more than ordinary ability.

A Lesson Readily Learned.

London Telegraph.

While one of the Bosnaic delegates who waited upon the Emperor Franz Josef at the Hofburg, a few weeks ago, was staying in Vienna, the owner of the hotel in which he lodged became a bankrupt. Hearing of his host's mishap the worthy Beg sought an explanation of the term "bankrupt," and having thoroughly mastered its meaning, proceeded, on his return to his native village, to impart his information to sundry of his faithful friends, his near relatives and close family connections. "This, O my brothers," he observed, "is the true and proper way to become a bankrupt. First, you must hire a shop, then you must write to rich merchants in far-distant cities, inviting them to forward their wares to you for sale, and pledging yourself to pay them in a few months. As soon as you shall have received sufficient merchandise you must sell it for cash or hide it carefully away. Then must you go to the judge and say to him: "Beloved of Allah! I am a bankrupt. Here are £5. They are all I have in the world." The judge will keep £4 of the £5 and proclaim you in bankruptcy. The other £1 will be divided among those who supplied you with goods. Later on you will remove to another town and begin this good and easy business over again. Thus may the passing bitterness of insolvency be converted into the abiding sweetness of a comfortable independence. Becheem! Upon my head be it."

Winnemucca's Wedding.

Winnemucca Silver State.

His Majesty Winnemucca, M. D. L. V., King of all the Piutes, was recently married to a Princess of his tribe. Buena Vista John, a trusted member of Winnemucca's Cabinet, says the royal consort is past the middle age, and weighs all the same as four sacks of flour. Winnemucca, who traces his lineage, according to the Piute tradition, from the time the Humboldt Valley was a lake, is said to be the fifteen handredth and fifty-fifth monarch of his tribe. He has children past the prime of life, and the old fellow takes a new wife to provide for his necessities in his old age. The Piute marriage ceremony is a very simple affair. The chosen bride retires to her wickiup at an appointed time and huddles in a corner. If she does not like the bridegroom she gets up and runs away when he enters the wickiup, but if he is the man of he choice, remains, and becomes his slave for life.

A Marvel of Surgery.

Dr. Rosewell Park at Prague.

I had the pleasure of an interview with a patient whose larynx and epiglottis Prof. Cussenbauer removed over a year ago. Six weeks after the operation, he began to wear part of the artifical larynx, and after accustoming himself to this he gradually learned how to introduce and use the reed which takes the place of the vocal cords. The apparatus was made for him by Rothe. The patient, a riding teacher, is reputed the best rider in Prague, is busy from morning till night, talking all day, and suffers not the slightest inconvenience or pain. His voice, is, of course, very monotonous, but his enunciation is excellent, his speech perfectly intelligible, and he eats and drinks with perfect facility. This case said to be the best living example of what the art of the surgeon and the mechanician can accomplish for such a terrible disease as cancer of the larynx.

How a Woman Would Manage the World.

Mrs. Jane Gray Swisshelm.

If I was managing this world I'd do it on the plan of nothing for nothing and no trust; I'd give no man a dollar until he had earned it, and for those who would not work I'd have a plantation and workhouse where they'd be taught industry with a good whip, and pay them for their work when it was done. I'd make all the felons work and pay them; and those who could not be taught to be decent members of society I'd put in a bag with a big stone, take them out in the ocean and drop them overboard. I'd assume that "the meek should inherit the earth," and clear all thieves and murderers, all dangerous classes out of the way.

A Bear Fondling a Baby.

Chicago Record.

Henry Flynn, who resides up in the hills near Inskip, was in town the today and had the following incident to relate, in which a bear of the cinnamon species abducted his three-year old daughter, not with and desire to harm the child, but through a strange kind of affection. I appears that Mr. Flynn started one morning to take a horse to pasture about two miles distant from the house, and as his little girl seemed anxious to go, he put her upon the horse's back and let her ride a short distance, perhaps forty rods from the house, where he put her down and told her to run home. He noticed that she continued standing where he left her, and on looking back after going a little farther, saw her playing in the sand. He soon passed out of sight and was gone about an hour, expecting, of course, that the child would return to the house after playing a few moments. On returning home he made inquiry about her of her mother, who said she had not seen her and supposed he had taken her along with him. On going to the spot where he had left her, he saw huge bear tracks in the sand, and at once came to the conclusion that the child had been carried off by the bear.

The family immediately made search through the forest, which was grown up to almost a jungle, rendering their search very slow. All day these anxious parents searched for traces of their child; nor did they stop when darkness came on, but remained in the woods, calling the lost one by her name. Morning came and their search was fruitless. A couple of gentlemen from below, who were traveling through the mountains buying stock, came to the house, and being informed of the circumstances, immediately set out to find her. The gentlemen wandered about, and as they were passing a swamp spot where the undergrowth was thick, calling the child, or else they were talking loud, when one of them heard her voice. He then called her by name, and told her to come out of the bushes. She replied that the bear would not let her. The men then crept through the brush, and when near the spot where she and the bear were, they heard a splash in the water, which the child said was the bear. On going to her they found her standing upon a log extending about half across a swamp. The bear had undertaken to cross the swamp on a log, and being pursued left the child and got away as rapidly as possible. She had received some scratches about the face, arms and legs, and her clothes were almost torn from her body; but the bear had not bitten her to hurt her, only the marks of his teeth being found on her back, where, in taking hold of her clothes to carry her, he had taken the flesh also.

The little one says the bear would put her down occasionally to rest, and would put his nose up to her face, when she would slap him; and the bear would hang his head by her side, and purr and rub against her like a cat. The men asked her if she was cold in the night, and she told them the old bear lay down beside her, and put his "arms" around her and kept her warm, though she did not like his long hair. She was taken home to her parents.

Belles of Newport.

[Cor. Cincinnati Enquirer.]

A great deal is said about the seclusiveness and dainty quality of Newport cottagers. That is all nonsense. Most of them are extremely wealthy, and few put on ridiculous airs; but I have found that they possess just about the same range of qualities that runs through the American population. As I have said, the place is not wholy peopled by aristocrats. The girl-clerk from a New York millinery store comes down here and outrivals in polite airs and becoming clothes the daughter of a Fifth avenue millionaire. And why shouldn't she, in a world where one pretty face is as good as another? By far the most beautiful girl in all Newport at present is a Boston hair-dresser. About all the male admiration in the Casino yesterday afternoon was bestowed upon her, and she received it with the unconscious grace and dignity of an ideal Dutchess. Her father was a bricklayer, I am told, her mother a washerwoman, and she herself ended her school days at the age of 18 to earn her own living. And here she is, a bright-skinned brunette, with big, melting black eyes, abundant jetty hair, regular features, a tall, shapely, well carried figure, and perfectly lady-like manners. She works busily and quite profitably at home, but is now out for a holiday, and when a woman loftily sent for her to come and dress her hair, meaning an insult, she wrote back: "I regret to say that it is impossible. I did not leave my shop as long ago as you did your slaughter-house, but I am for the time being quite as far away from it." The fact was that the woman had, more than twenty years ago, been a practical worker in the Boston pork packing house in which her husband found his fortune.

It has been fortunate that most of our greatest men have left no descendants to shine in the borrowed luster of a great name.

If you feel drowsy, debilitated, have frequent headache, mouth tastes badly, poor appetite and tongue coated, you are suffering from torpid liver, or "biliousness," and nothing will cure you so speedily and permanently as to take SIMMONS LIVER REGULATOR or MEDICINE.

SIMMONS LIVER REGULATOR

The cheapest, Purest and Best Family Medicine in the World.

An EFFECTUAL specific for all diseases of the Liver Stomach and Spleen.

Regulate the Liver and prevent Chills and Fever, Malarious Fevers, Bowel Complaints, Restlessness, Jaundice and Nausea.

BAD BREATH!

Nothing is so unpleasant, nothing so common as bad breath, and in nearly every case it comes from the stomach, and can be so easily corrected if you will take Simmons Liver Regulator. Do not neglect so sure a remedy for this repulsive disorder. It will also improve your Appetite, Complexion, and General Health.

PILES!

How many suffer torture day after day, making life a burden and robbing existence of pleasure, owing to the secret suffering from Piles. Yet relief is ready to the hand of almost any one who will use systematically the remedy that has permanently cured thousands. SIMMONS' LIVER REGULATOR, is no drastic violent purge; but a gentle assistant to nature.

CONSTIPATION!

Should not be regarded as a trifling ailment—in fact nature demands the utmost regularity of the bowels, and any deviation from this demand paves the way often to serious danger. It is quite as necessary to remove impure accumulations from the bowels as it is to eat or sleep, and no health can be expected where a costive habit of body prevails.

SICK HEADACHE!

This distressing affliction occurs most frequently. The disturbance of the stomach arising from the imperfectly digested contents, causes a severe pain in the head, accompanied with disagreeable nausea, and this constitutes what is popularly known as Sick Headache.

KING'S MAGIC TOOTH ACHE CURE

Auburn Courier.

AUBURN, INDIANA, SEP. 21st, 1882

The Candidates.

W. H. DILLS,

the candidate for circuit judge, is well known in all this section of country, having resided in Auburn for the past 25 years. He is a native of this state and is now past 48 years of age, and has reached that time in life when all those faculties so much needed in a judge are at their best. Mr. Dills studied law in the office of R. J. Dawson, at Spencerville, and 25 years ago began the practice of his profession here, and has been engaged directly in the law every since, and in all this time has never been charged with dishonesty. He brings to the office, should he be elected and there is a good prospect that he will, a ripeness of experience greater than can be claimed by his competitor, and much greater than any other judge who has been promoted to the bench from this county for many years. His experience has not only been long but has been varied, and he has had especial practice in that kind of work that is coming up continually in the court, namely the settling of estates and all the business connected therewith. His advent to the bench will mark a new era in this county, and will be hailed with joy by the great mass of the people.

D. D. MOODY,

the candidate for representative in the state legislature, is before the voters of his native county for re-election. He is now in the early prime of manhood. After graduating with honors in the law department at Ann Arbor, he entered the practice here in which he soon took a prominent position, and has a lucrative practice. As an advocate before the court or jury, and as a public speaker he has few, if any in the county, his equal. Politically he is as well known as any person in the county, and his record in office as well as in the party, is all his friends could ask, and of which they may certainly be proud. A bright future in politics and the law is in store for him.

D. Y. HUSSELMAN,*

for clerk of the circuit court, is also a native of this county, coming from the sturdy, honest old Pennsylvania German stock, whose language is his mother tongue. He is about thirty-five years old and has been engaged in the practice of law at Waterloo and this place some twelve years. Meeting with an accident in early life, from which he may never recover and with a delicate constitution, renders him unable to perform manual labor; but having an indomitable and unfailing energy, he will, with his known character for honesty, integrity and sound judgment, if elected, make one of the best clerks our county has ever had.

L. J. MILLER,

again up for treasurer, was forty years ago running around loose in the woods of this county, a poor methodist preacher's son, and like all such sons had and still has the "sand" to make the very best men and citizens. He is all man, a democrat as sound as a "daddy dollar," knows everybody and everybody knows Lafe. Miller, always jovial and fun-loving, yet as sober as a deacon in his office, kind and charitable to a fault and has a walk-a-way for the public's cash this fall.

JOHN BUTT,

for recorder, is the representative of a fine old English family, who emigrated to this county before the coronation and marriage of Queen Victoria, long before half the people in the United States were born—in fact so long ago he scarcely remembers it—is in his 67th year, but looks and acts like a well preserved business man of fifty. In early days he was a school teacher, clerk, farmer, store keeper and of late years keeping one of the best hotels in DeKalb county. That he will be elected and make a No. 1 recorder is just as certain as election day comes 'round.

THOS. H. TOMLINSON, of Franklin township, a farmer, 40 yrs. of age, a resident of this county since 1848, and served in the army a full term—self educated, a widow's son in a new country, received all the hard knocks of a poor widow's boy in such a place, possessing energy, push, decision, with the quick perception and forethought which characterises the Irish blood coursing through his veins, he will make a capital officer in the Auditor's office to which he is aspiring.

J. J. VAN AUKEN,

was raised in Steuben county until he became 18 years old, since which time he has resided in this place. Although only 30 years old he has twice been elected county surveyor and two years ago gave sheriff Leas a close run for sheriff. He is a natural surveyor and engineer, draftsman and architect. His ability to discharge the duties of the office of surveyor, for which he is again a candidate, is acknowledged by all, whether they are democrats or republicans. Everybody in the county knows "Van," and if he is not re-elected by 500 majority this fall the republicans themselves will be disappointed.

J. J. LATSON,

for coroner, is a New Yorker by birth, but a resident of this county for nearly 40 years, one-half of which he has occupied the "high" office to which he is again aspiring. No one has ever filled an office more acceptably than he has. He was never known to miss an election nor have his name scratched off the ticket, but generally manages to run about 50 ahead of any other democrat.

THE COMMISSIONERS.

Oliver H. Widney, for the southeast district, is a son of John P. Widney, formerly a representative and clerk of this county, born in this county 41 yrs. ago, and is one of our best farmers. He served under two enlistments in the war, is more than ordinarily well informed, an industrious, energetic, frugal citizen, and with his great, good sense and decision of character will make a good officer.

Joseph Sewell, of Franklin, is a farmer of the first quality, now over 50 years of age, removed to this county some fourteen years ago, from our joining county in Ohio, Defiance, where he served as county commissioner to the entire satisfaction of the people. Since his residence here he has given proof to all who have become acquainted with him, that he possesses all the qualifications necessary to make a first-class commissioner.

Biggs D. Thomas, of Garrett, is a man in the full prime of life. He has resided in Garrett since it was first organised, is proprietor of the largest addition of that town, a man of wealth, intelligence, experience, integrity, and his appearance indicates firm and solid as the rock of Gibraltar. His selection, unasked for by himself or friends, gives the utmost satisfaction to all.

To show that republicans, themselves have no faith in prohibition as a temperance measure, that they are only making use of it to gain votes, that they know its success means free whisky, we quote from the recent speech of Mr. W. L. Penfield, of this place, delivered before the republican club of Auburn, Sept. 4th. Mr. Penfield says: "The amendment does not prescribe what clothes you shall wear, nor how costly they may be; it does not prescribe what meat you shall eat nor how much; it does not prescribe what you shall or shall not drink nor how much; nor does it in any manner prohibit, nor interfere with any individual buying or drinking all the spirituous liquor he may desire. If the amendment is adopted, you can, if you choose, go or send abroad and have imported and stock your cellars and fill your throats with all the liquors you please, for your own consumption. But the amendment would prohibit the manufacture, sale or keeping for sale of intoxicating liquors except for special purposes. There is nothing in it of a sumptuary character,—nothing, absolutely nothing concerning the quantity or quality of what a man shall or shall not eat, drink or wear."

EDITOR COURIER: On examination you will find that Senator VanVorhis the greenback senator in the last legislature voted against the proposed prohibitory amendment to the constitution.
D. D. MOODY.

We gladly insert the above correction. At the time the original article was written, we believed that the vote was as then stated, but we are glad to do Mr. Van Vorhis justice.

THE Angola Republican, like the Butler Record, now and then takes up the argument in favor of a high tariff, by trying to show that the more you add to the cost of a thing, the cheaper it may be sold. That is, if a thing originally cost a dollar, you can add a tariff of fifty cents and then sell the article for seventy-five cents.

THE Press, at last admits, that the other two commissioners may have assisted Mr. Oberlin to pay off that $8,000 of the county debt, but of course, still claims that Mr. Oberlin was the motive power of the machine. Republicans are nothing, if they are not modest.

THE material of the Edgerton Herald, is offered for sale, as the paper is discontinued. This will be a good chance for any one who needs material to stock up with. It will be sold in lots to suit. Address H. A Granbery, Edgerton, Ohio.

THE romance writer is abroad in the land. If you doubt it, see the account of the Hazzard matter in a recent issue of the Republican. "By me halidome" but it beats G. P. R. James' "solitary horsemen," and nearly equals the Fort Wayne dailies.

THE Egyptian war came to a close last week. The British captured nearly the entire army of Arabi Pasha after a short battle. Arabi himself is a prisoner, and nearly all his troops have laid down their arms.

* * *

BRADY and Dorsey escaped punishment because the jury could not agree. But the republican party is a unit in keeping Dorsey at the head of its national working committee.

* * *

MINER and Rerdell, the only two star routers who were convicted, have been granted a new trial. The whole thing will be opened up once more.

Waterloo Items.

O. L. Hall and little daughter Ethel came from LaGrange, Monday and will hereafter make their home with his mother.

Don't forget that Miss Maggie Bateson has her fall millinery goods.

Charlie Dickinson has returned from Hudson, Mich., where he has been for medical treatment, much improved in health, and is again on duty at Butt's Hotel.

Miss Frankie Ryan, of Auburn, spent Sunday with Miss Rallie Crane.

Mrs. C. A. O. McClellan came down from Ann Arbor, this week for a few days visit.

A freight train was wrecked just east of town last week. No serious damages.

Misses May Homer and Lilly Shoner, returned last Friday from Toledo, where they have been visiting relatives for several weeks.

The quarterly meeting of the Evangelical church, will begin here the 29th, of Sept.

Oris Danks has bought of O. T. Clark his stock of boots and shoes, and will carry on the business at his old stand.

Mrs. R. Shull has returned from Cleveland, with a full line of millinery goods.

John Shull and wife are at Three Rivers, Mich., visiting friends this week.

Boyer & Beidler are receiving their new goods from Chicago, and getting ready for the rush.

Lowenstein & Rothschild are full of business now. They have a well selected as well as a mammoth stock of new goods.

Every body and his family are getting ready for the fair.

Rev. E. R. Willard, of White Pigeon, and Rev. Christine, pastor of the Reform church here, will exchange pulpits next Sunday. Rev. Willard will preach in the Reform church at half past seven in the evening.

H. E. Coe, rendered timely assistance at the examination Saturday.

Over twenty teachers attended examination Saturday.

Public school began here this week, and everything is moving off finely.

The nicest fruit to be found this year, may be had at Brand & Duncan's.

Brand & Duncan have the largest bunch of tomatoes on exhibition at their grocery, that is on record. It is a single stem with seven tomatoes and weighs eight pounds and three ounces. It was raised by Rev. A. R. Shaffer the pastor of the Evangelical church.

Fred Roby has a prospect of obtaining a permanent situation with the great New York jewelry house of Wheeler, Parsons and Hayes. Fred is a steady intelligent young man, who understands his business, and deserves his success.

Will Sudlow, whose parents are now at Carrolton, Michigan, was in town last week visiting his former schoolmates. He is now a young man and is traveling for a commercial house in the east, and is doing well.

Old Mrs. Day is quite ill, and at her advanced age, it is doubtful if she can recover. Her eldest daughter came down on the Jackson train Saturday afternoon, and will remain with her awhile.

On Saturday evening, the 16th, the Excelsior Corunna Cornet Band paid a complimentary visit to Butt's Hotel, after partaking of a free supper provided for them by the liberal landlord John Butt, they discoursed some splendid music in front of the hotel. They then proceeded to different points in the town, and played with their usual brilliancy, returning to the hotel they gave a few farewell tunes, and departed for home, after expressing themselves highly satisfied with their reception. This band is composed of residents, citizens of Corunna and neighborhood. They make a splendid appearance in their new uniforms. They are engaged to play at the agricultural fair here. They deserve a good patronage, and are a credit to the county.

It is awfully discouraging to a local writer, just when he gets a good, lively blood curdling article, and has sent it out on its flight over the county, to have some cold blooded individual drop down on him and take the wind all out of the sails of his imagination, by saying there is nothing in it. But such things will happen. Last week we managed to blow both ends out of the boiler in Duncan Bros. mill, and were beginning to flatter ourselves, that the Fort Wayne papers would have to look to their laurels, when up comes B. L. Duncan himself and says there wasn't much of anything in it. It wasn't much of a blow out, and didn't hurt any one, although the mill was full of men. It wouldn't have hurt them if they had been sitting blackbird-fashion on she lever of the safety valve. That was about what he said, although he knew it was his duty to have that boiler blow up, after the COURIER had so stated.

—Improvements are still going on in different parts of town.

—Frank Less is reading subpoenas to parties in the rural land.

—Rain enlivened things this week and vegetation looks nice.

—A number of our citizens are attending the Hicksville fair.

—You can buy the finest and nobbiest hats at Boyer & Bidler's.

—Chris. Baldock has moved on 4th street, opposite the German church.

—We have ordered more new job type. For good work give us a call.

—But very few of our citizens enjoyed the Detroit excurson last Tuesday.

—Laughing Sim is at his meat market again, slinging meat to beat h—l.

—The Swineford has put an iron fence around the verandas facing each street.

—All aboard for S. U. Tarney's meat market. Best steak only 12½ cents per pound.

—The Lockwood property, corner of Main and Ninth streets, is being improved.

—Sam. Pommert is now pleasantly located in his new rooms in the Hebel building.

—Wheat has been selling for ninety cents, oats twenty-eight and butter at twenty-five.

—Go the entertainment at the Presbyterian church next Tuesday evening. Admisson 25c.

—Don't go barefooted when you can buy a good No. 1 boot at Boyer & Beidler's for $2.50.

—The great Northern Indiana Fair promises to be the largest and best ever held in the state. 36-3w.

—The contract for the Seventh street bridge, which spans Cedar Creek, was let to parties at Mudsock.

—Several picnics in the rural districts made trade somewhat quiet Saturday until toward evening.

—Just think of it—one hundred trotting and running horses, at the great Northern Indiana Fair 36-3w.

—The republican candidate for clerk attends both English and German sabbath schools. Daniel, where art thou?

—Buck Allen has patched up his sidewalk, and pedestrians, bicycle riders, etc., will not find it such a hard road to travel.

—Corn is ready to cut, and the farmer who neglects to harvest the crop soon will suffer the damage occasioned by frost.

—We will have to give a picnic or start a lottery in order to get our wood subscribers to understand what we want with them.

—Mrs. F. April gave birth to two children, one of which was healthy and full grown and other very small without any signs of life.

—The scholars of the Presbyterian Sunday school had a picnic in Baker's grove last Saturday. They enjoyed themselves very much indeed.

—E. D. Hartman has purchased a horse. He will have to get a swifter animal than this one to pass Husselman on the last quarter.

—Cows got into Ben. Williams' corn field and destroyed considerable fodder. Now, Ben either wants money or blood to pay for the feed.

—F. B. Straw is having his new location fixed up in good style, and we can feel proud in having a first-class music store in our town.

—The attractions at Waterloo seem to hold good for our boys. No less than ten or fifteen took the overland route for that place Sunday.

—A few months ago Hazzard was the "biggest" man in town, and now he is the most despised criminal in the county jail. Time makes curious changes in life.

—The Republican says: "Jim. Hazzard is conductor of a freight train on the main line of the Wabash." They must be hard up for material down that way.

—You can save money by getting Davenport's prices on wall paper for the next thirty days. Davenport, the Druggist.

—A pleasant picnic was had in the grove near the old Lockwood farm, south of town, last Saturday. The occasion was enlivened by the Grove Bethel band.

—John Eckenberger is waiting patiently for the November election. John will rake in several dollars that day, yet he says he cannot be hired to vote in favor of "probation."

—Celery, Hop and Dandelion Bitters for biliousness and nervous Headache. Not a patent bitters, but a regular physicians prescription prepared Secundum Artem by Davenport the Druggist.

—Celery Bitters cures biliousness, indigestion and sleeplessness. Davenport, the Druggist.

—Cellery Bitters for headache, biliousness and indigestion. At Davenport's.

—Williard Fee left us a nice lot of apples during a temporary absence last week.

—There will be services at the M. E. church next sabbath at the usual hours. All are invited to attend.

—Messrs. Milton & Eliel, druggists, South Bend, have nothing but good reports of Brown's Iron Bitters.

—You Charles Augustus William Henry, if you don't go to S. U. Tarney's for meat I will break in your head with a board.

—H. C. Shull, left a mammoth head of cabbage in our office last week. It measured forty-three inches in circumference.

—See those special bargains in wall paper at Davenport's before you buy. Last year's patterns are sold regardless of cost.

—Mrs. Wm. F. Marshall, Logansport, found Brown's Iron Bitters the only remedy to relieve pain in the back and debility.

—Boyer & Beidler, Waterloo, have the best assortment of dress goods, plushes, velvets, silks, satins, moires, &c. Call and be convinced.

—Frank Culbertson, has a nice cosy home in his new house. The site is a very pleasant one, and when he gets it into shape, it will be one of the neatest in town.

—Squire Walborn's cement sidewalk is a success, and we predict others will follow his plan, so that in a short time the rattling board walks will be a thing of the past.

Lost, somewhere along the road between Auburn and New Era, a dress model, such as is used by dressmakers. The finder will confer a favor by leaving it at this office. 2t.

—The liver is the organ most speedily disordered by malarial poisons. Ayer's Ague Cure expels these poisons from the system, and is a most excellent remedy for liver complaints.

—Tickets will be sold by the Jackson road during the fair at Fort Wayne, Sept. 25 to 29, from all stations, at reduced rates. Fare from Auburn will be $1,10 for round trip.

—Nervous Prostration, Premature Old Age, either caused by tobacco, alcohol, overwork, or excesses, cured by Dr. E. C. West's Nerve and Brain Treatment. Sold at F. E. Davenport's.

—The printers at the Republican office—with their "neatness and dispatch"—bungled up Penfield's prohibition speech so badly that it appeared as though it had gone through a $7,000 drunk.

—The milliners are receiving their fall stock of goods. The styles have changed somewhat, and now we will see the lady a half an hour before we do the hat. Prices, however, range about the same.

—Someone, whose name we did not learn, placed us under obligations last week, by making a deposit here of a lot of the largest potatoes we ever saw, regular monsters. And they are of a good quality also.

—At the school meeting, four miles west of town, held last Saturday evening, Miss Anise Cowan carried a "majority of all the votes cast," and was elected the governess of that school for the winter term.

—The largest and best stock in this neck of woods to select your wedding and birthday presents is at Bassett & Maxson's, Waterloo, Ind., where they still continue to do watch repairing in a substantial manner. 2t.

—Isaac Ochs lost a good horse, the other day. He had traded a new buggy for the animal and hitched it up and drove to Newville and back. The horse was put in his stall and after a few peculiar motions fell dead.

—Joe. Stafford's colt is yet unable to work. It was injured at the time E. D. Hartman's horse was killed by a Wabash train. Doc. Cowan's black mare was at this "picnic," and owing to her clear, white eyes she escaped.

—Remember when visiting the fair at Waterloo, to go to Bassett & Maxson's watch, clock and jewelry emporium, and don't forget to buy your wife that gold watch and chain you promised her so long ago. Don't forget now. 2t.

—The brick masons have commenced work on the building to be used as a wagon manufactory. This establishment will give employment to fifty men and will be a worthy addition to the labor and business portions of our town.

—Some of our marksmen will shoot for the hundred dollar prize offered at the Hicksville fair. We hear that F. D. Ryan and Dr. Ford will be among the contestants, and this warrants us in saying that they will bring back the boodle.

—Ely's Cream Balm reduces inflammation. Sores in the nasal passages are healed in a few days. Catarrhal headache is dissipated. Senses of smell, taste and hearing are restored. Price 50c. Apply into nostrils with little finger.

—The M. E. church is being re-seated. The Zimmermans have the job and are fitting it up in nice shape. The new seats are of a tasty pattern, in the natural, colored woods, and will besides add greatly to the comfort of church goers.

—The Swineford House, is greatly improved by the addition of those iron balconies. They were put up by J. L. Ferguson, of Columbia City, and we understand he will also make quite a number of iron fences for citizens of this place.

—Burglars have been at work in the south end with pretty good success. They gained entrance into Dr. Allen's residence and bagged a watch and ten dollars in money, relieved Snyder's blacksmith shop of some tools, and were probably frightened away from Penfield's dwelling by the lion bark of Doc. Cowan's Newfoundland dog. Load the musket.

—Brocade satins for dolmans at McQuiston & Long's.

—For collars and collarettes go to McQuiston & Long's.

—The marshal had a chance to rake in the usual show license Saturday if he had taken time by the forelock. An organ grinder and Johnny Slifer gave an open performance to a penniless crowd in front of the Cabin. All traveling nuisances should be made to whack up or no show.

—John Tresh is doing better work on the roads than any marshal we have had yet. Nothing is being filled into holes or low places except gravel which we have so long wished for. We hope John will keep up this spirit of enterprise until every street in Auburn is thoroughly graveled.

—A man named Evans, living in the Lowrey property, lost a horse last week. The animal was in such misery that it was thought best to shoot it. Umber, a cousin of Buffalo Bill, was sent for and after blazing away several times the animal passed off and is now enjoying greener pastures and a quiet time.

—D. D. Moody and Fred. April, one of the shining lights in the republican camp, had a "discussion" on the prohibition question. Quite a crowd had gathered to hear the argument when Charley Klotz broke in between a paragraph and said: "Moody,usht let 'im hup. The tam fool is too Dutch to get his head through it."

—It should be remembered that after the 8th ult. any person in this state removing from one township to another will lose his vote. All democrats who contemplate a change of residence should wait until after the November election. It does not make so much difference about republicans, they will get whitewashed anyway.

—The jail canaries will soon have their trials. Jimmy, the ditcher, will begin digging trenches as soon as Lockwood gets through him, and the other boys will probable take a trip. Things look very "phat" for the prosecutor at the September term of court, and Pete grins a big smile as he thinks of the tens and twenties in store for him.

—Pommert & Grund are now in their new room in the Hebel building. We venture to say it is the nicest and best furnished barber's establishment in the state. The seats are of the new patent kind of folders, and the new mug rack and its drawers, finished in the finest woods, is a beautiful and expensive affair. It will pay to go and see it.

—Will S. Gilbert, of Chicago, is now in town canvassing for that fine work "The Golden Censer," a book of the rarest merit, written by the well known John McGovern, of Chicago Tribune staff. We recommend Mr. Gilbert and this book to the liberal patronage of our people, and trust that his sales will be as abundant, as his book is meritorious.

—Dry Houghton is known everywhere as a successful farmer, never has anything to say and would make a good president for a prohibition club. But what we started out to say is, that he takes the elderberry pie in raising onions. On less than a half an acre of ground he measured two hundred and twenty bushels, not counting those that had been sampled during the quiet, summer evenings.

—We were pleasantly surprised this week by a friendly call from H. C. Shimp, who was for some time a clerk in the employ of Henry Husselman, in Waterloo. He is now engaged in business with him in Chepstow, Kansas, although engaged most of the time as traveling salesman by Kennard, Daniel & Co. of St. Joseph, wholesale grocers. He is prospering, a fact his many friends here will be pleased to know.

—When will women ever have any sympathy for the horse? We noticed two ladies, one day this week, that were driving one foaming with prespiration. At each step the lash was applied to the dumb brute while it was exerting every muscle to push forward, yet the merry, giggling lassies wanted just a little more speed. Not only do most women drive too fast, but also worry the horse terribly by the awkward handling of the lines.

—Mr. & Mrs. Ed. Freeman, of Jackson township, celebrated the fiftieth anniversary of their wedded life last week by an golden wedding, an account of which we publish. The old people enjoyed the occasion and dispensed their hospitality in true old fashioned style, as was proved by sending the printers a huge cake, so large a one in fact, that even printers could not get away with all of it at one sitting. We hope they will enjoy several such meetings.

—The name of the new dance club will never again appear in the Courier. We mentioned it last week, and have since heard that four deaths have occurred by people who supposed it to be a puzzle and worried themselves into eternity trying to find out what it really was. Another young man who received an invitation card hesitated a few minutes and said: "Well, it's impossible for me to go. I've gone on three excursions this summer and I will have to let this one out."

Thursday, Sep., 14, 1882, being the fiftieth aniversary of the wedding of Mr. and Mrs. Ed. Freeman, who are among the old settlers of Jackson, their friends and neighbors gathered together to celebrate the occasion. The Rev. Llewlellyn, after a few impressive remarks presented Mr. & Mrs. Freeman with a number of costly presents in behalf of their friends and neighbors, followed by Dr. Ford who presented each with a pair of elegant gold glasses, a gift from the ladies and gentlemen of Auburn. The guests from a distance were: Mr. & Mrs. Charles Ford, of Richland county, Ohio; Mr. & Mrs. Beamer, Mr. & Mrs. Rodabaugh, Mr. & Mrs. Dancer, of Noble county, Ind.; together with eighty-seven neighbors and friends. A large table thirty-six feet long was fairly groaning under its load of good things. At the head of the table sat the old couple, their beaming faces showing the pleasure at thus entertaining there many friends. Orpha Miller, Charles Ford and others made the day pleasant with music. The guests are under obligations to Mrs. Elizabeth Myers, Mrs. Rosanna Hilkey and Mrs. Caroline Depew (daughters of Mr. & Mrs. Freeman) who made the occasion as pleasant as possible. After enjoying a hearty repast and having a pleasant time generally the guests departed. X.

—Schaab & Beugnot have just received a fine lot of dress goods at prices to suit all.

—It is not often that we compliment a business house gratuously, but we must admit that the popular firm of Schaab & Beugnot have used the best judgment in selecting their fall and winter goods of any store in Indiana. Charley Schaab waits upon the ladies' counter in a very artistic and becoming manner, and Joe. McKay handles the clothing department in regular style—that is he makes coats fit snug in the back. Charley Klotz accommodates the German patrons in his usual pleasing way, and all of our readers will be benefited by trading at this mammoth double-floor establishment.

—Harry Rush, Billy Little and Chris Baldock went to Orland, last week, to assist the ball nine there in a match game with the Lagrange club. The latter club got wind of our three knights of the field being employed and the nine had a sudden and bad attack of "stay at home" the day set for the play to come off. A scrub nine was gathered and an interesting game played. The boys met Dr. Kessler and call him the "same old doc." He is still peddling pills and quinine, although he has accumulated sufficient wealth to rock back on his ears if he desired to. His son, "Bub" is a tiller of the soil and is master of the situation.

—We notice that some papers are still circulating the report that our citizens gathered around the jail, and but for extra policemen and the firmness of our sheriff would have swung the miserable Geo. Hazzard, from a limb of a weeping willow. These reports are unfounded in every particular, yet in some communities the slippery George would be gathered in and go through a tight-rope performance with less ceremony than Guiteau did. Hazzard will have a legal trial and the law will be strictly enforced concerning his crookedness. There is no question but that he will receive a trip pass over the Wabash to the home of the forgers, horse thieves, etc.

—Auburn Junction is becoming noted for dances. During the warm summer evenings of the season just past these festive occasions have been the amusing part of life and merriment for the young folks at that place. Last Friday evening was set apart for the biggest hop in the history of the club. It was a pleasant gathering and nothing high-toned about it to "mar the feelings" of anyone. When not engaged for the next set they don't promenade the floor with some sunflower youth and be laughed at by the crowd—no, sir. They sit by the window in the moonlight, and the pretty cheek of the country girl lies close to his, her velvety lips kiss him tenderly back of the left ear as she whispers: "Excuse me now. I must dance with Peter this set, or I'll lose my grip."

—The opening of the new dance club last Thursday evening was a nice affair, however not more than twenty-five couple participated. A Courier reporter found the president of this organization whittling at a store-box on the following morning, and with a 4x6 smile this officer praised the hop highly. He would not tell us who was considered the best lady or gentleman dancer, but said that himself, Hank Lesh, Jimmy McClellan and Emanuel Getrost did'nt take a back seat for any of them, and that the girls they had rented for the season were right with them, Eligh. The young folks anticipate a pleasant time during the fall and winter months, and the Courier wishes them all the happiness that can be obtained upon the dance floor or in any other social event.

—We are glad to learn that the voters here will not split any tickets this fall. While they admit that some of the republican candidates are good fellows, they know of no reason whatever why they should receive democratic votes. The young voters especially are firm in this decision. We frequently her them name one particular candidate, who now nods a "hello, how's the folks?" from across the street, when a few short months ago this gentleman would not have noticed a laborer upon the highway if they had rubbed garments. Such little transactions return to the memory, and men who will be so dignified when life is somewhat of a struggle with them, financially, we must expect, after being fed and fattened from the county till, they will ignore us more than ever. We are glad to know that the general voter is taking this matter into consideration and will work their p's and q's to keep all such men a few hundred votes in the rear.

—Several little domestic troubles have furnished the south end citizens with gossip material during the past few days. First on the list comes Mrs. Penny, a bride of two weeks. Her husband said he was going off to look for work and started after supper Saturday evening. He either can't write and has no money to telegraph, or does not want his darling to know of his trials and troubles. Those who are familiarily acquainted with the circumstances think that its a clear case of "good bye, John."

Last Thurday evening Johnny Picker's wife packed up all the best household effects and skipped. They had a pleasant home and everything seemed to go along nicely. She was no doubt influenced by "Walager" and his "wife" who are now located at Waterloo, as we hear the trio are stopping together at present. Johnny is an industrious young man and always provided plenty for his wife, who does not seem to appreciate the kindness of a dutiful husband.

The talk is current upon the streets that Sam. Maxfield and his beterhalf have crossed swords. Sam. is working at the drive well business and is away from home a great deal of the time. He returned unexpecedly the other evening and upon entering the house his eyes fell upon the form of a man named Miller, we believe, making himself quite at home. We don't know what the man's errand was but it didn't go down very pleasant with the husband. Mr. Maxfield is a good, honest citizen and takes pride in having his home cozy and attractive. The affair has created considerable talk.

There is a rumor going the society rounds that a sensation is gradually coming to light in the north end that will be astonishing. We are not in possession of the facts to warrant a truthful statement, hence we will wait until some future time.

County Board of Health.

An order of the Board of Health of DeKalb county passed at the September session. Ordered:

That the secretary shall have published in the Auburn papers the following order, passed September 7, 1882, and this shall be the legal notice to all concerned, viz:

1. That now, in the absence of the unfavorable influences existing last winter, it shall be the duty of all unvaccinated persons in DeKalb county to comply with the law on vaccination within ninety days of the date of this notice.

2. It shall be the duty of the trustee of each township to see that the director (or some one appointed in each school district) attends to the following duties:

To receive and record or to have recorded the vaccination certificates of the teacher and scholars of the school and all persons living within the bounds of said district of all ages, and then to report all of said certificates to the office of the said township trustee, where they will be kept on file, and where a complete record of all the vaccinations in the said township will be kept, except in incorporated towns where a Board of Health exists; that it shall be the duty of said Board to collect and record said certificates; and it shall be the duty of such director, or person appointed, to report to said trustee the names of all persons who neglect or refuse to comply with said law of vaccination or furnish said certificate, and the trustees and Local Boards of Health to report such names to the County Board of Health.

Obituary.

Blanchie Crosley, daughter of N. and K. Crosley, died September 11, 1882—aged 2 years, 2 months and 8 days.

OUR LAST ADIEU.

Good-bye, Blanchie;
You need our protection no more,
But with God and his angels
Will sing on the golden shore.
We think of you at evening,
As there is a vacant seat,
By the absence of our loved one
And the silence of little feet.

Good-bye, Blanchie;
But why did you leave us so soon?
Our home is so lonely without you;
Our lives are shrouded with gloom,
And will be until in the future
The Lord may call us home,
And beyond the dark river of death
Together we may roam.

Good-bye, Blanchie;
The Lord has called thee home;
May the angels ever protect thee
Wherever you may roam.
You was a guardian angel here.
But now with that throng above
You may walk in peace and safety,
And be near the God of Love.

Good-bye, Blanchie;
Rest in peace secure;
For the trouble of this life
You need no more endure;
But rest in peace serenely,
And think of us as we do,
Now, again for the last time,
Bid you a long adieu! adieu!

W. Chaffee.

Died.—Mabel E. Batt, September 14, 1882, at the residence of her grandparents, Mr. and Mrs. A. Evans, St. Joe, Indiana—aged 4 years, 8 months and 11 days.

After a severe illness of five months and sixteen days, all of which time she was perfectly helpless and received all the care that love and affection could bestow, her disease baffling the skill of all her medical attendants till death came to her relief. Little Mabel was a lively and precocious child, such as seemed to ravish our affections with its intellectual and spiritual brilliancy and filled one's heart with joy and love. She will be missed here so sadly, but gladly welcomed over there. Truly she is a heavenly treasure.

OUR FLOWER IN HEAVEN.

We heard the voice of the Lord
One beautiful summer day,
"Give me one of your finest flowers
For my heavenly garland gay.

So we gave our dear little Mabel,
The flower we loved the best,
The Lord received it tenderly,
And laid it in his breast.

Triumphant the angels bear her
Away from the shades of night,
Up through the shining portals,
Into the city of light.

Oh! the wondrous beauty of heaven;
Glory the heart hath not known;
Oh! the bliss of its many mansions,
The gleam of its great white thrown.

Rest, beautiful Mabel, rest!
Rejoice in thy glad release;
In God's eternal sunlight
Rest in the kingdom of peace.

And when the sabbath bells ring out,
Wherever we may roam,
We shall know the Lord who watches all
Has taken our darling Mabel home.

CARD OF THANKS.

To the people of St. Joe and vicinity who so kindly assisted in our affliction and bereavement during the long and protracted illness of our granddaughter, also to the ladies who prepared the beautiful wreath, we would tender our sincere and heartfelt thanks.

Mr. A. Evans and Family.

—Steel and Son painted a very nice sign on the south side of J. C. Henry's drug store. The mechanical part of it, however, is out of balance by the use of a character and. If a plain extended letter had been used with the word "and" in the center below the "drugs" the work would have shown off much better.

Personal.

Dave Hampton has been in town for several days.

Mrs. Benedict came home from her Butler visit Monday.

A. C. Harrod, of Edgerton, is here teaching penmanship.

Samuel Teeters is off attending school at Crawfordsville.

Recorder Boland and wife spent several days at the Toledo fair.

Berry Lowrey was in town over Sunday. He is now working at Toledo.

George Larimore has gone to Avilla to do some work there in his line.

Mr. Hoisington, of St. Joe, is visiting his son-in-law, C. P. Houser, this week.

Chas. Rugman and Milton Clark, of Butler township, were on the streets Monday.

Miss Rallie Crane, of Waterloo, attended the opening dance here last Thursday evening.

W. L. Penfield is at Delphi, Ind., this week, laying off Blackstone at the legal bar there.

John Robbins was on the streets this week, resting from the noise and work of drummer life.

Mrs. Abe. Orr and daughter, of Kendallville, were visiting in town the fore part of the week.

Frank Griswold has vanished again. He will probably go to Montana, where he has a brother, this fall.

Dr. Kelley, of Syracuse, and Cyrus Kelley, of Smithfield, called around on Monday. Both look healthy.

Mrs. A. J. Little and her grandson, Tracy, will look over the attractions at the Fort Wayne fair next week.

A son and daughter of Mr. Barhite, formerly of this place, but now of Kendallville, were in town over Sunday.

Mrs. Lizzie Kelley came over from Smithfield on a visit here and was accompanied by Mrs. D. C. Kelley, of Syracuse.

George Weamer has returned from quite an extended visit in the western country. He will probably move there next spring.

Frank Bevier, of Waterloo, took a look through the Courier office Saturday. Frank is developing quite a taste for printing.

Dr. A. W. Allyn has returned to Auburn, after living where the orange tree blooms for a year. The Courier welcomes him back.

Mrs. Jones received a telegram Saturday informing her of the death of her father. She left the same evening to attend the funeral.

Mrs. M. F. Long came home from Chicago last Saturday very much improved in health. This is encouraging news for her many friends.

E. E. Barber, of Butler, was in town Monday. He has been absent, at Cleveland, this summer, in the employ of the Continental railroad.

Charles Bassett, of Waterloo, passed thro' town Tuesday on his way to Hicksville, where he goes to assist Charlie in the jewelry store during the fair.

Rev. W. H. Daniels has so far recovered from his recent illness as to be able to resume his duties once more. There will be services at their church as usual.

George Zimmerman is at Fort Wayne and is quite sick. He went there a short time ago for treatment, but instead of getting better, is now worse. Serious fears are felt that he may not recover.

A. Obendorf, of Wilmington township, whose mother has been ill for some time at the residence of friends near here, is able to state that she is much better and will soon be removed to their home.

John Hill, who some years ago left for the west to lay up a store of the shining lucre, has returned. John appears about as of yore with the exception of looking a little nearer the end of life's journey.

S. H. Snyder, who has been "studying" medicine with Dr. Cowan for some months, will wind up the pill and quinine trade in Chicago this winter. The Courier hopes he may make an M. D. of some note.

Norman Little, of Connecticut, a brother of A. J. Little, met the latter yesterday for the first time in twenty-five years. It was a happy meeting, indeed, and will be more frequent in future years. It was amusing to the writer to have Norman tell of teaching us how to walk twenty-eight years ago, and to-day we could floor him too slick.

Waterloo Fair.

People every where are getting ready to attend this popular fair, for it brings within the borders of our county, a show nearly as good as can be seen at a state fair, and a crowd nearly as large. Every profession and every kind of business will be represented as usual, and all who compete know from the past record of the society that they will received fair and courteous treatment of the hands of the managers. Entries can be made in advance, and all who have made up their minds to exhibit would do well to have their entries made at once. 2t.

The Distingutihing Charm.

A delightful fragrance of freshly gathered flowers and spices is the distinguishing charm of Floriston Cologne. 35-4w.

—Dennis Lanham was the first man to respond to our call for wood. The quality is soft maple, not ripe yet, but by the time the cold, chilly winds of December rattles about our frame it will be ready for use. This kind of fuel is not of the best, yet it beats p. elm two to one. Uncle Dennis, may your life be pleasant and profitable.

—You can make your entries for the fair at Waterloo, at any time now. Go to A. R Stevens, Sec'y.

—Davenport the Druggist has a few patterns in wall paper, carried over from last year, which he is offering regardless of cost. Come and see.

—Mr. Jones, where did you get that nice steak? At S. U. Tarney's. My wife ate two pounds for breakfast.

Two Jasper county farmers bought and planted some seed potatoes said to be the Early Rose. After due time, as the plants failed to come up, they prepared to put in other crops on the ground, thinking the seed potatoes worthless. On disturbing the ground, what was their surprise to find the hills were filled with new potatoes in a forward state of growth. No vines or tops have been visible at any stage of growth. John A. Hamilton, of Goodland, is authority for this statement. Mr. J. C. Kleoune, of Logansport, raised a crop of potatoes this season under exactly the same circumstances, the truth of which is established beyond question.

Strange Paris Fashions.

Parisian milliners and dressmakers have to make a heavy call upon their inventive faculties in the month of July when their fair customers are trotting down to Trouville, to Dieppe, or elsewhere, in search of pleasure and health. The style of feminine attire adopted for those fashionable "plages" differs entirely from that approved of for Paris. Walking costumes, morning dresses, all the various changes indispensable to a Parisienne when at the seaside, must be novel, original and striking, something quite out of the common run, no matter how ugly, provided they be sufficiently eccentric in pattern and make.

This year a lady who aims at being unimpeachable on the score of fashion will be dressed somewhat after the following manner. She will wear on her head a colored cambric hat or bonnet, supported by whalebone, and bearing a strong family likeness to a battered umbrella, weather-beaten by long use. The rest of her person will be arrayed in what is called la robe a images, or the picture-book dress.

Some ladies will exhibit little boys and girls dancing around on their backs; others will have groupes of children eating cakes on their skirts, or vulgar little urchins putting out their tongues on their sleeves, or otherwise improperly conducting themselves on their flounces and frills.

There will be shepherds and shepherdesses for those who are more poetical in their tastes, regiments of soldiers or groups of sailors to meet the requirements of others, little devils and imps performing a variety of antics for such as have preference for the diabolical, and so on, until a party of ladies with different partialities would, setting aside what personal charms they may possess, be a really interesting and attractive study to the seaside lounger.

A costume one hears of as destined to create a great sensation is the Jardin d'Acclimation dress, which is thickly covered with minute elephants, dogs, camels, dogs, etc., all artistically grouped and represented in the most natural attitude possible.

Most of these costumes are made in linen, cambric, or some such light material. A lady who applies to her couturiere for one made in some heavier stuff is told that her choice lies, as far as pattern is concerned, between the mattress design and the Louis Quinze curtain model.

A person under 20 can, without offending the dictates of fashion, wear a dress of silk or woolen material imitating as nearly as possible, Sevres china, and place on her head a hat very much resembling a basket of cherries.

If the fair sex adopt generally the picture-book, the menagerie, the military, the mattress and the Sevres china dresses for the seaside, a walk along the sands at Trouville or Deanville will offer an agreeable, or at least a remarkable, coup d'œil this summer.

Fraudulent Brandy.

New York Mail and Express.

It has long been so difficult to obtain perfectly pure brandy that American whisky and alcohol diluted with water have been generally used for medicinal purposes. But the ruin of the vineyards of France has made matters much worse, and Consul Gifford, of La Rochelle, Naples, reports that most of what is sent to the United States as French Brandy is produced in that region, and is an adulteration of the worst sort, if it is proper to call anything an adulteration which does not contain a particle of what is genuine. The people of this republic pay nearly $3,000,000 a year for imported brandy, including the duty of about 100 per cent., and the greater part of the liquor is so fraudulent that its use is extremely injurious. Why is it not possible for this country to produce its own brandy? It is very desirable to have enough that is pure for medical purposes, and a great company might establish a lucrative business by manufacturing it. While the vineyards of France have been vanishing during the last three years, those of the United States have been increasing, and it ought to be possible to produce enough white wine for distillation to supply all the pure brandy the physicians may need for patients in the United States.

A Dakota Snake Story.

Fargo special Globe-Democrat.

Just after the close of a circus performance this afternoon, a huge boa constrictor and python made their escape from their cage, and, not having been fed for two or three days, seized upon a young camel and crushed it to death in an instant. One of them went for a beautiful Indian antelope, and would have killed it in a moment, but a number of circus men came to the rescue with pitchforks and goads and drove the serpent into a corner. Jennie Hickey, the young girl who acts as snake charmer, and has charge of the monsters, was summoned and struck the large snake twice with her whip. He darted furiously at her, twirled himself around her, and in a second or two would have crushed her in his coils, as he had the baby camel, but with great presence of mind she drew the long keen knife she always carries for such emergencies, and cut the huge reptile in two. It was a narrow escape, and the girl was greeted with a round of applause when she came into the ring to-night.

FROM THE WIRES.

Kassassin, September 9—6:30 a. m.—Firing commenced on both sides at 7 o'clock this morning and continued with great precision until 9 o'clock, when the enemy retired.

London, September 9.—The News has received the following account of to-day's fight at Kassassin:

"Kassassin, September 9—9:20 a. m.—After 6 o'clock this morning the Bengal Lancers and scouts came in with news of the enemy approaching in great force on the north side of the railway. Our army was at once put in motion, and by 7 o'clock an artillery duel began. Arabi's troops, of all arms, are spread over the entire ridge, and a mile and a half up the line. A train heavily armed has appeared. Close to where I stand our forty-pounder and Krupp guns are placed, shelling the enemy's right. There is also a twenty-five pounder a few yards off, playing on the same position. We have the enemy's range exactly. One of our shells burst right over the enemy's ranks. The Egyptian artillery have got our distance very well, and their shells are dropping steadily into our camp. We have the horse artillery extended along a line half a mile in length, on the north side of the railway. They are firing rapidly, and at present the Egyptians are slowly retiring. Up to this moment no casualties have occurred. Reinforcements are just coming up from Mahsameh. A Krupp gun recently captured from Arabi, sent a shell nearly in front of his train. Our infantry are slowly advancing, and the enemy slowly retreating.

Kassassin, September 9.—Noon.—The attack of the enemy has been repulsed, but the action still continues along the whole front, which extends a distance of three miles. All the troops are out from the British camp, and the wounded are now being brought in. The total casualties are not yet exactly known, but the British loss is roughly estimated at 100 killed and wounded. Many shells fell in the British camp before the enemy was repulsed.

Alexandria, September 11.—General Wolseley was lured into making an attack on Arabi's position in the neighborhood of Tel-el-Kebir by the report that the Egyptian chieftain was suffering from dysentery. That may have been the case, but the disease didn't extend to his troops, who repulsed the English and drove them back to Kassassin. Advices from English sources are that the Egyptians lost 200, dead and wounded, and the English 60.

The difficulty with regard to the final signing of the draft of the Anlo-Turkish Convention hangs upon the question whether Turkish troops having arrived at Port Said will be allowed to disembark or be required to await instructions from General Wolseley. The proclamation against Arabi Pasha has produced considerable agitation among the Arabs, who generally regard Arabi Pasha as the savior of Islam. It is believed that Arabi Pasha will promulgate a counter-proclamation against the Sultan. A dispatch from Egypt states that Arabi Pasha has expelled all Turks and Circassians from his camp.

General Wood and staff, yesterday, reconnoitered the coast from Ramleh to Aboukir in a steam barge. One of the officers who recently deserted from Arabi's army, and who accompanied them, asserts that a regiment at Mandara is prepared to desert at the earliest opportunity.

The firing heard last week, behind the enemy's position, which caused the supposition that dissensions had broken out in his camp, arose from active drilling and firing practices of new levies. Arabi Pasha has been at Tel-el-Kebir since the 25th of August.

Naples, September 11.—Telegrams from Tunis report that great excitement exists in the Italian colony there, in consequence of the sentence passed by the French council of war on an Italian, condemning him to two years imprisonment for attacking a French soldier.

[illegible], September 11.—The conflict of jurisdiction in Tunis between Italy and France is considered an incident of the gravest character, tending to aggravate the strained relations between the two countries.

Limerick, September 11.—Hynes was hanged at 8 o'clock this morning. Hynes endured the pinioning and recited his prayers calmly. Only a slight tremor was preceptible immediately before the bolt was drawn. Death was almost instantaneous. A large crowd outside the jail waited the hoisting of a black flag, many praying for the convict's soul. It is not known whether Hynes made a statement previous to his death, but it is certain that, up to Sunday, he denied any complicity in the murder. A military guard was held in readiness, and seven hundred extra policemen from northern counties were drafted to Limerick, in view of the possibility of a disturbance. During Sunday, prayers for Haynes were offered in many of the Catholic churches in counties Limerick and Clare.

St. Petersburg, September 11.—It is stated that the government has chartered six transports for the conveyance of stores and military to Vladivostok.

Kassassin, September 13.—The attack on Tel-el-Kebir began at 4:45 o'clock this morning. The main attack was directed against the enemy's extreme left flank, four miles north of the railway. A heavy artillery and infantry fire is now proceeding. The British troops are advancing rapidly, and evidently turning the enemy's flank. The British armored train with the forty pounder Krupp gun, which was captured at Kassassin, and the Gatlings, have just come into action. The fire of the enemy, opposite the extreme right of the British, is nearly silenced.

Alexandria, September 13.—The Khedive has received a telegram from Sultan Pasha saying the British attack on Tel-el-Kebir commenced at 4:45 o'clock this morning. Tel-el-Kebir was soon carried. Forty guns and a large number of prisoners were captured. The cavalry are in pursuit. Arabi's force appears to be quite broken up. A dispatch from the front reports that the demoralization of Arabi's army is complete. His infantry are flying toward the desert.

Kassassin, September 13.—At the capture of Tel-el-Kebir the Egyptian loss is estimated at 2,000. Our loss is probably 200, including many officers. The Highland Brigade bore the brunt of the action.

Alexandria, September 13.—The Egyptians opened fire when the British were within about a mile of Tel-el-Kebir. The place appears to have been finally captured by a rush. The Indian Cavalry are hotly pressing the fugitives on the south and the British Cavalry on the north of the canal. She enemy's killed alone amount to 2,000. The retreat of the enemy on the north is cut off.

London, September 13.—General Wolseley telegraphs that Arabi Pasha escaped on horseback to Zagazig.

The cut letting the sea into Lake Mareotis has been completed, and the water is spreading rapidly.

London, September 13.—A correspondent gives the following description of the battle:

"Tel-el-kebir, September 13—4:45 a. m.—General Wolseley has arrived on the ground. The artillery opened fire before the enemy were aware of our presence. The infantry immediately after pressed forward, deploying and opening fire from a sheltered position. At this moment the battle is raging fiercely, so far as firing is concerned, but the men have not yet come to close quarters with the rebels.

"9 a. m.—The great battle is practically over. The rebels discovered our men when about a mile from their works, and opened a heavy rifle fire. Our men paused for a moment on the line of the sand hills, and then, with a gallant rush, they were among the rebels."

Acting on General Wolseley's orders, they reserved their fire and went in with the bayonet. The slaughter for a time was very great. The rebels could not stand it, and broke and fled, pursued hotly. I followed the Royal Irish Regiment into the trenches before one of the forts. They were filled with Arabi's followers, dead and dying.

"The final rush was made over a distance of 200 yards, the men skirmishing and seeking cover until they reached this point. Several thousand Egyptians were taken prisoners.

Indians fired the Conlee regions of the prairies in Montana. The whole country is ablaze. Settlers are removing cattle and flying in all directions. Fifteen hundred Pregans abandoned their agency. They demand increased rations. Depredations are threatened. The Cheyennes and Arapahoes have broken out of their reservations at the Reno military fort. The cattle men are arming.

Heavy rains have fallen throughout the northern and northwestern parts of Texas, and reaching south as far as San Antonio. At the latter place yesterday there fell four and three-quarter inches of water. The Concho river is out of its banks again, and the towns recently flooded are again submerged. Floods are also reported at Forts Stockton and Davis. At Eagle Pass the Rio Grande had spread all over the lower part of the town, and the people living on the side of the bluff are preparing to move. The river is higer than ever before known. Much apprehension is felt for the safety of life and property in towns along the lower part of the river, which are in more danger than those farther north.

A swindle has just been unearthed at Port Huron, whereby the Grand Trunk is a sufferer to an unknown amount. It consisted of sales of scrap iron to an old junk dealer in Detroit. Two clerks in the railroad office there are the guilty parties, and have skipped out. Their names are M. Walsh and W. Whitaker. How long the stealing has been going on, and how much swag has been received, is unknown, as the dishonest clerks have destroyed all traces of their transactions. Two or three heads of departments at Port Huron and Detroit have been discharged because these thefts escaped their detection, being blamed not for complicity but for negligence.

Easton, Pa., dispatch:

A frieght train and shifting engine collided at Delaware station. Both engines and several cars were wrecked. Celee Montee, the oldest watchman on the road, who was riding on the engine, was jammed head-foremost into the fire box and burned to a crisp.

Another victim to the habit of jumping on and off moving trains was added to the long list at Galva, Ill., last night. Patrick McGuire, of this city, a young man of 18 years, for a long time favorably known as an employe in Taylor & Co.'s mill, was found dead and horribly mangled in the east yard about 11 o'clock. He is supposed to have been trying to steal a ride home on a freight train. His parents, who are hard-working, respectable people, have the sympathy of the community generally. The remains will be brought here to-day for burial.

Andrew Wittig, an old man of 74 years, the keeper of a small grocery in East St. Louis, was brutally murdered at an early hour this morning. It is not known exactly how the act was committed, but the circumstances show that the grocery was entered between midnight and daylight by burglars, and the supposition is that the old man, who resides in the upper part of the building with his family and heard the noise, got up, went down stairs, was assaulted by the robbers and dragged in the adjoining alley. At all events his dead body, the skull smashed in with bricks, was found there by his wife about six o'clock. A clew points to a white man and a negro, who left for Cairo on the steamer Continental early this morning, as the murderers, and measures have been taken to have them arrested at the first point the steamer lands.

Payments already made on account of expenses in the prosecution of the Star Route cases are as follows: B. H. Brewster, for services and expenses before his appointment as Attorney General, $5,000; W. A. Cook, $6,702; George Bliss, $19,251; W. W. Kerr, $6 527; R. T. Merrick, $5,000; A. M. Gibson, $5,000. Total, $47,480. It is estimated that the total expenses of the trial will be $200,000.

At 2 o'clock, the jury not being ready to report, further recess was taken until 6 o'clock.

Hon. R. W. Melindy, formerly Judge of the circuit composed of Branch and St. Joseph counties, was found dead in bed at a hotel at Eaton Rapids this morning, where he was trying the virtues of mineral springs. He was a Captain in the Twenty-ninth Michigan Infantry during the war, and has been a victim of appoplexy for years.

A Jefferson City special says: "In the United States Circuit Court yesterday, William P. Barnes and Finis E. Johnston, County Judges of Cass county, were committed to jail by an order of Judge Kreckle, for refusing to make a levy on the county to satisfy a judgment obtained against Cass county to pay the bonds and interest issued by Cass county, in aid of the Tebo and Neosha Railroad."

The jury in the Star Route case came into court at 11 a. m., but being unprepared to render a verdict were again locked up according to common law—that is, without light, fire or any comforts of civilized society until the verdict is reached. The court took a further recess until 2 p. m.

At 2 o'clock the Star Route jury informed the court they were not ready to report, and a further recess was taken until to-morrow morning.

At ten minutes past 10 o'clock this morning the jury in the Star Route case entered the court-room, and through their foreman reported to the court that they had reached a conclusion as to four of the defendants, but stood as on Saturday as to the others, being unable to agree as to them. The court declined to receive the verdict and took a recess until 2 p. m.

At 2:05 the jury entered, and through their foreman reported that they were unable to agree. The court stated that it had come to the conclusion to accept a partial verdict.

The roll of the defendants was called, and all answered "here."

The jury then rendered a verdict of acquittal as to Turner and Peck, and of guilty as to Miner and Rerdell. As to the others, they were unable to agree.

On the objection of Mr. Merick, that Peck had not been arraigned, and consequently could not be included in the verdict, the foreman repeated the report as to the others, but left out the name of Peck.

The jury were then discharged, and Henkle & Williams, for Miner and Rerdell respectively, gave notice of a motion in arrest of judgment and for a new trial.

The Evening Post's Washington special says: "The District Attorney, acting upon the information of Foreman Dickson, will issue warrants for the arrest of Brewster, Cameron and Henry A. Bowen to answer the charge of attempting to bribe a juror. Mr. Merrick is busily engaged in getting his information into shape to prevent the District Attorney from acting, so we are evidently on the brink of a very unpleasant scandal, involving charge and counter charges of bribery and perjury.

A synopsis of Dickson's sworn statement in regard to the attempts at bribery which he has filed with the District Attorney is published this morning. It contains only one point in addition to what he set forth in yesterday's statement. Dickson says that Bowen in the course of the conversation, in which he urged the former to secure the conviction of Brady and Dorsey, asserted that after conviction the President would pardon the defendants, possibly within thirty days. To Dickson's inquiry on the point, Bowen answered that Bliss, Merrick and Kerr were entirely ignorant of this movement on the part of Attorney General Brewster.

Down in Maine.

Portland, Me., September 11.

At 11:30 this morning the tallies show that one-quarter of the city vote has been thrown, standing: Republican, 953; Fusion, 715. Republican majority, 238. The city Republican majority for Governor in 1880 was 185, so the present majority indicates a substantial gain.

At Calais, the election is progressing quietly with a full vote. Robie will carry the city by from 300 to 400 majority.

At Damariscotta many Greenbackers are voting the straight Republican ticket.

Dexter reports a gain for the Republicans.

At Gardiner a full vote will be polled. At 1 o'clock the indications are that the voting is nearly two to one in favor of Robie. The Republicans will probably elect Representatives to the Legislature, although there is strong opposition.

Portland.—At 1:30 the tallies showed two-thirds of Portland's vote in, standing as follows: Republican, 2,480; Fusion, 2,136. Republican majority, 344, against a total majority last time of 185. Independent Republican and straight Greenback votes are insignificant, and may be considered simply scattering.

Houlton.—Indications point to a Republican gain of 600 in the county.

Lewiston.—The vote stood at 1 o'clock, Robie, 1,042; Plaisted, 865.

Auburn.—Four down town wards give Robie 783, Plaisted 577.

Brunswick.—Voting is progressing quietly. The indications are that about an average vote will be thrown, with very little gain by either party.

Augusta—The election here is quiet, but a heavy vote is being polled. The Republicans are sweeping every ward at the rate of two to one, largely increasing the majority of 1880. The Independent and straight Greenback vote is heavy.

Belfast—The contest is very animated here, and a larger vote than ever before has been thrown. The Republicans are gaining largely.

Biddeford—Up to noon only about a third of the total vote had been thrown. The vote between Plaisted and Robie is very close. Very few straight Greenback, Independent or Temperance votes are being cast.

Portland, Me., September 12.

The Republicans have carried the State by a plurality estitmated at 8,000 for Robie for Governor. The Republican majority in both houses of the Legislature will be largely increased. The indications now are that the Senate will stand twenty-eight Republicans and three Fusionists, a Republican gain of six; and the House ninety-sever Republicans and fifty-four Fusionists, a gain of thirteen. All four of the Republican Congressmen are elected, which is a net gain of one. The Legislature will re-elect Mr. Frye United States Senator.

A dispatch from Vinita, I. T., gives some particulars of an attempt last night to rob the Missouri Pacific train. It appears that the Adams Express agent was informed yesterday that an attempt would be made to rob the express train due at Vinita at 10:30 last night. The plan was for two of the robbers to board the train at Vinita, quietly capture the conductor and sidetrack the train four miles north of Vinita, where others of the gang would meet them, rob the express mail and passengers, and then ride away on horses provided for the purpose. The express agent telegraphed Mr. J. B. Barrett, route agent, and he and Detective Irskine, of the St. Louis and San Francisco road, and others went south on the freight and met and boarded the passenger train at Chauteau. They made their arrangements to thwart the robbers. When the train left Venita, two of the robbers met Conducter Warren on the front platform of the smoking-car, and ordered him to throw up his hands, and shot him in the face. Warren fell of the train. The detectives then opened fire, killed one of the robbers and captured the others. The train was backed to Venta, and the wounded conductor, who was dangerously hurt, was picked up. The train then started north again, but was not molested at the place agreed upon, the other members of the gang evidently thinking something had gone wrong.

Great excitement exists in East St. Louis on the question of whether colored children shall be sent to the pudlic schools where white children are taught. The trouble has been culminating for some time. During vacation the School Board selected a site for a school building for colored children, located between railroad tracks. The colored people objected to this location and threatened to send their children to school with the whites. Yesterday at the opening of the schools a number of colored children applied for admission to the white schools, but the principals refused to admit them. The excitement grew apace, and the Board ordered school to be closed for the day. Last night, several street fights occurred, and to-day the schools were again opened. A few white children presented themselves, but the colored ones were again on hand, and yesterday's action was repeated. Some teachers left their schools, and finally the schools were again closed for the remainder of today. The board had, in the meantime, rented a building to serve as a school for colored children, but the colored people would not send their children there, claiming the right to have them enrolled in white schools. Fights occurred between white and colored children this morning. The excitement is growing, and it is not known how the matter will terminate.

A New York dispatch says:

A combination of Protoxide of Iron, Peruvian Bark and Phosphorus in a palatable form. The only preparation of iron that will not blacken the teeth, so characteristic of other iron preparations.

GENTLEMEN: I have used DR. HARTER'S IRON TONIC in my practice, and in an experience of twenty-five years in medicine, have never found anything to give the results that DR. HARTER'S IRON TONIC does. In many cases of Nervous Prostration, Female Diseases, Dyspepsia, and an impoverished condition of the blood, this peerless remedy has, in my hands, made some wonderful cures. Cases that have baffled some of our most eminent physicians have yielded to this great and incomparable remedy. I prescribe it in preference to any iron preparation made. In fact, such a compound as DR. HARTER'S IRON TONIC is a necessity in my practice. DR. [illegible]

"Our Little Ones."

This little paper for children, is one of the cutest of all the many cute little magazines for children. The stories are so natural and childlike, and the illustrations are so real, that one who has a particle of love for children, never tires of wandering among its dainty freshness. No one who has children should be without it.

The following from the Butler Review, shows the high estimation in which our candidate for sheriff, is held by the people in that town: "Both the candidates for sheriff reside at this place, and have long been friends and neighbors. No one knows better the good qualities of Mr. Boyle, the democratic candidate, than his opponent, Mr. Hazlett. Several years ago when Mr. Hazlett was draying in town, he got hurt or was sick, and unable to either procure the feed, or attend to his horse or cow, and Mr. Boyle carried hay from his own barn and fed Mr. Hazletts' stock. This is the kind of a man Mr. Boyle is, as scores of our citizens will testify, and to-day, he is the same true open hearted friend that he was in former years. We mention the incident above to show our people the manner of man they are to have for their next sheriff, and this too, will show to the public why he is so popular among those who know him best."

At the judicial convention held at Waterloo, on the 5th, by the democracy of the circuit composed of the counties of Noble, DeKalb, Steuben, Wm. H. Dills, of Auburn, was nominated for judge, and Harry Reynolds, of Ligonier, for prosecutor. Considering the fact that the circuit ordinarily has a republican majority of nearly oe thousand it is somewhat significant that there should have been three aspirants for the democratic nomination for the judgship. It looks as if the democrats in that circuit meant to prepare a surprise for their political enemy.—Elkhart Monitor.

The republican majority are dead to conscience; they are dead to the appeals of the suffering industries of the land; and there is left but one effectual remedy which the people can now apply—"smash the machine." I call upon the capitalists; I call upon the labors and upon strikers; I call upon every man who does not want to arrest the property of this country to come forward in the fall elections and smash the republican machine.

*Extract from speech of Abram S. Hewitt in the house of representatives June 23, 1882."

Eli B. Gerber, of Ligonier, the candidate selected for joint representative by the democracy in convention assembled at Waterloo, last Tuesday, is a man of moral worth, and one well calculated to fill this responsible position with credit to himself and to those who vote for him. Possessing, as he does, the entire respect of the community in which he lives, and having a large acquaintance—not only in the county where he resides but throughout the entire district—his selection cannot be otherwise than a good one, and his election assured.—Kendallville News.

—The undertakers are accumulating wealth, yet we think they deserve the big profits which accrue from their business. We learn that there are men in this county who owe for their wife's burial for over three years, and when they asked the man of coffins to trust them, with tears in their eyes as large as beer kegs, they faithfully promised to pay the bill in sixty days. This class of dead beats is what makes the honest laborer's credit good for nothing and causes large profits in the undertaking business.

In Montgomery and Lake counties, and we might include half of the counties of the state, the republican leaders are playing anti-prohibition to catch votes, while in the balance they are pleading for prohibition to catch votes. Any informed voter of that party knows this to be true. What is the sequel? The plain, unvarnished fact is that it is all for the purpose of retaining power, at the sacrifice of principle.—Huntington Democrat.

The Chicago Times: "Mahone is not only exacting five per cent. assessments from the men, but he is squeezing the lady clerks. This is scandalous." It is infamous. And this is going on right under the nose of President Arthur. Horrible—ain't it? Down with machine politics!—Valpo. Messenger.

Obituary.

DIED.—Monday September 11, 1882, at his residence near this place, after an illness of only one week, Christian Sheets, aged 57 years, 2 months, and 27 days. The deceased was born in Wayne county, Ohio, June 14, 1825, where in August 1846, he was married to Margaret Carr, who survives him. About six weeks after his marriage he with his young wife emigrated to this county, and settled upon the land now a part of his farm, and within a few steps of the place he died, erected a log cabin in which to live, the old cabin still standing at the place. For thirty-six years he continued to reside at the one place he so soon selected for himself and his youthful companion, sharing with her the pleasures, joys and sorrows incident to a life of a comparatively new country. By the strictest economy and untiring energy he accumulated a reasonable competency which, he now, just past the meridian of life and so recently in such good health and apparently robust constitution, is called to leave to those whom he so highly prized and endearingly loved. As a husband, father, brother and neighbor he was ever present, mirthful and kind with a firmness and fortitude in all the social relations, yet with a heart as warm and tender as an infants, with the world at large that firmness and fortitude in business affairs nearly amounted to sternness and severity in the make of his recognized character for honesty and unflinching integrity. As a citizen he was at all times foremost in the enterprises affecting his neighborhood and the introduction of new inventions, and appliances for economy and labor-saving upon the farm, as well as of valuable stock raising; in fact having one of the model farms of our county. He was a member of the M. E. church for the last thirty years, and his hand and purse were always open for religious and moral purposes, as well as to the poor and needy of his neighborhood. Around his dying bed were gathered, besides his loving wife and children (except the youngest son who is in Montana and could not arrive in time) his only two brothers and three sisters from Ohio, all of whom have the heartfelt sympathy of this entire community. The funeral services were held Wednesday at the Presbyterian church, the Rev. Mr. McCarty, of the Garrett, M. E. church officiating, and was attended by a large concourse of citizens from all parts of the county. Thus again are we called upon to mourn the loss in our community of a highly respected, enterprising, worthy and christian friend and neighbor. We all soon may follow him. May he rest in peace.

SEEK

health and avoid sickness. Instead of feeling tired and worn out, instead of aches and pains, wouldn't you rather feel fresh and strong?

You can continue feeling miserable and good for nothing, and no one but yourself can find fault, but if you are tired of that kind of life, you can change it if you choose.

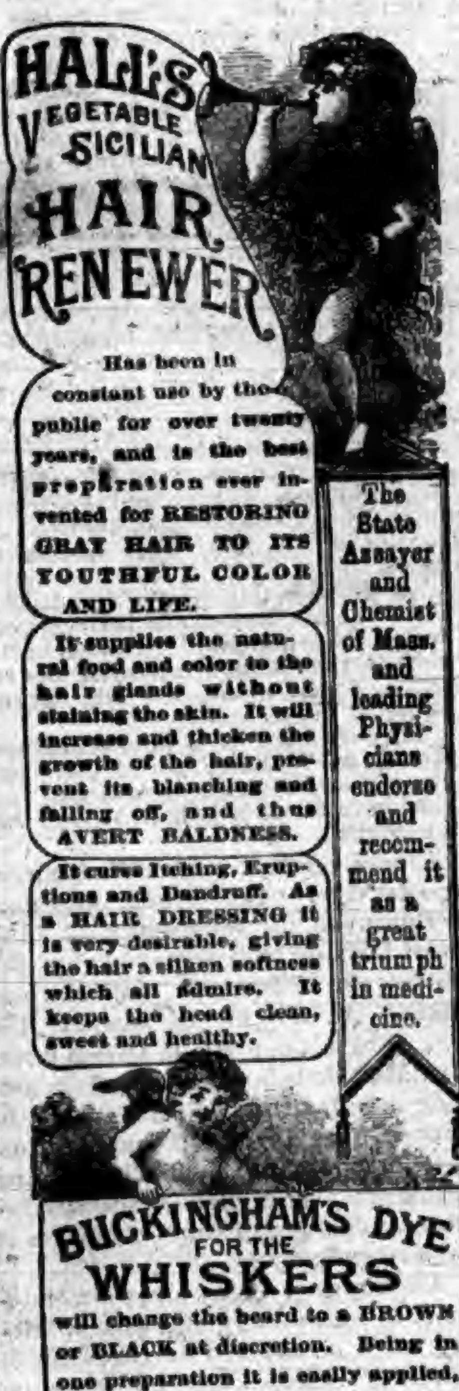
How? By getting one bottle of BROWN' IRON BITTERS, and taking it regularly according to directions.

Mansfield, Ohio, Nov. 26, 1881.

Gentlemen:—I have suffered with pain in my side and back, and great soreness on my breast, with shooting pains all through my body, attended with great weakness, depression of spirits, and loss of appetite. I have taken several different medicines, and was treated by prominent physicians for my liver, kidneys, and spleen, but I got no relief. I thought I would try Brown's Iron Bitters; I have now taken one bottle and a half and am about well—pain in side and back all gone—soreness all out of my breast, and I have a good appetite, and am gaining in strength and flesh. It can justly be called the king of medicines.

JOHN K. ALLENDER.

BROWN'S IRON BITTERS is composed of Iron in soluble form; Cinchona the great tonic, together with other standard remedies, making a remarkable non-alcoholic tonic, which will cure Dyspepsia, Indigestion, Malaria, Weakness, and relieve all Lung and Kidney diseases.



Has been in constant use by the public for over twenty years, and is the best preparation ever invented for RESTORING GRAY HAIR TO ITS YOUTHFUL COLOR AND LIFE.

It supplies the natural food and color to the hair glands without staining the skin. It will increase and thicken the growth of the hair, prevent its blanching and falling off, and thus AVERT BALDNESS.

It cures Itching, Eruptions and Dandruff. As a HAIR DRESSING it is very desirable, giving the hair a silken softness which all admire. It keeps the head clean, sweet and healthy.

The State Assayer and Chemist of Mass. and leading Physicians endorse and recommend it as a great triumph in medicine.

BUCKINGHAM'S DYE FOR THE WHISKERS

will change the beard to a BROWN or BLACK at discretion. Being in one preparation it is easily applied, and produces a permanent color that will not wash off.

—Cut the corn.

—Wheat about all sowed.

—Get the winter supply of wood and coal before the roads break up.

—Paint the dwellings this fall and protect them from the weather.

—Prosperity makes a fool weaker and a wise man stronger, and adversity does the same.

—Don't fail to attend the Waterloo fair. The crowd will be larger than ever this time.

—One of the mistakes of human life is to suppose that others opinions are to make us happy.

—Life, according to an Arabic proverb consists of two parts—the past a dream, the future a hope.

—There is no strength in exagerration, even the truth is weakened by being expressed too strongly.

—Many men admire women intensely: but they can't be persuaded to hold the baby just for a moment.

—McQuiston & Long have the best stock of black silks and satinsin the city. Call and see them. 37-3

—The Corunna band has been engaged to furnish music for the Waterloo fair. They make a fine display in their new uniforms.

—Someone claims to have found this legend written in a Leadville church: "Please do not shoot at the organist; he is doing his best."

—We are told "the evening wore on," but we are never told what the evening wore on that occasion. Probably the "close" of a summer's day?

—Davenport the Druggist has a few patterns in wall paper, carried over from last year, which he is offering regardless of cost. Come and see.

—The industrial schools are having an apparently good effect upon the Indians. The red men have begun to work well and to take a pride in their work.

—The members of every christian church stand in the pulpit beside their pastor, and enforce or weaken all that he proclaims by what they are and of what they do.

—McQuiston & Long have just received a CASE of choice styles in brocade dress goods which they are selling at 15 and 20c per yard—former price has been 25c. 37-3

—At the summer resorts it is said that one wave from a woman's handkerchief will continue to attract more attention than hundreds of waves from the lake.

—You can't make yourself good by simply going to church, and after that doing as you please, any more than you can make yourself polite by swallowing a dancing master.

—Morse, who invented the telegraph, and Bell, the inventor of the telephone, both had deaf-mute wives, which leads a wag to observe: "Just see what a man can do when everything is quiet."

—When an Illinois man gets to marrying too often the neighbors take it upon themselvds to dig up two or three dead wives and discover that they were poisoned. This makes the bridegoom unhappy.

—The surest road to success in life is that of persistent and thorough work. Speculators who make money rapidly, generally lose it with equal rapidity. It is the patient, steady plodders, who gain and keep fortunes.

—MILLINERY.—Mrs. Clock has received new fall styles in hats and bonnets. Has the latest styles and shades in ribbons, flowers, plumes and tips. Keep also a assortment of black and cream Spanish laces. 36-4w.

—This is true indeed; but when her welcome is clouded with an atmosphere of angry words and coal scuttles, there is something about it that makes a man want to go out in the woodshed and sleep on the ice chest.

—A man will eat soggy biscuit twice a week without a complaint when his girl invites him out to tea; but when the girl becomes his wife, if there is the faintest suspicion of saleratus in them, the neighbors will think the district school is out for recess, by the racket he makes.

—Go to Rice's gallery for all kinds of pictures. They are working cheap, and guarantee satisfaction. Call at their gallery and see samples of work and get prices. They have new instruments for doing all kinds of work. Enlarging done to order. They solcit your patronage. 36-tf.

LOST, somewhere along the road between Auburn, and New Era, a dress model, such as is used by dressmakers. The finder will confer a favor by leaving it at this office. 2t.

—Upon being ask how she would regard the taking of another wife by her husband, the daughter of Brigham Young, a four months' bride, answered: "Of course it is a painful thought, and I try to put it away from me, but I should accept it as a duty to my husband and because the church requires it."

—A young man of Maryland committed suicide because he was too poor to marry. This is an isolated case. The poor young man generally marries and if his wife does not commit suicide a year or two afterward it is not because she hasn't sufficient provacation.

—According the following from the Wabash Plain Dealer, George Hazzard is not entirely broke as credited by our citizens:

"Mrs. Dr. Armstrong, of LaFontaine, who is a sister of Geo. Hazzard, denies saying that George can lay his hands on from $50,000 to $75,000, or any other sum of his own money. He is supposed to have had from $2,000 to $2,500 in cash on his person when he left La-Fountaine."

—The largest and best stock in this neck of woods to select your wedding and birthday presents is at Bassett & Maxson's, Waterloo, Ind., where they still continue to do watch repairing in a substantial manner. 2t.

—It is about time the report was revived, and on this occasion it appears in the Boston Advertiser:

"The White House will have a mistress next winter. President Arthur is undoubedly engaged, and the marriage will take place early in the fall. The name of the lady is for the present a state secret. The engagement was made last spring, and the lady has this summer, at different watering places, been the recipient of the choicest flowers from the White House conservatories."

—In our hurry last week a sheet of manuscript giving a sketch of our candidate for sheriff was mislaid. We are very sorry, indeed, that it happened and hope our readers will excuse us for the blunder. The old addage, however, that it is "never too late to do good," will help us out, and the gentle man can have his "send off" this week which we hope will be satisfactory to him and his friends:

JOHN W. BOYLE,

of Butler, candidate for sheriff, has been a resident of this county over 30 years, settling and marrying in Concord township. He has been a farmer all his life, but occasionally engaged in other pursuits in addition to looking to his farming interests. He is a man of more than ordinary education, energy and enterprise, having at all times since his residence at Butler, taken great interest in the welfare of that village, and especially in the construction of the two railroads into that town. For integrity and honesty he is the peer of any man in the county, and will, wherever known, run in advance of his ticket.

—Celery, Hop and Dandelion Bitters for biliousness and nervous Headache. Not a patent bitters, but a regular physicians prescription prepared Secundum Artem by DAVENPORT the Druggist.

Correspondence.

BUTTE CITY, MONTANA, Sept. 12, 1882.

EDITOR COURIER:—It may be of interest to some of your many readers to hear something about the Yellow Stone National Park, and having just made a tour of that wonderful region, will attempt a brief description of the most important points of interest. This country situated in the northwest corner of Wyoming Territory, embracing a small portion of Montana and Idaho, is 55 by 65 miles in extent, and occupying a lofty position. Her waters reach the Gulf of Mexico, via. the Missouri and Mississippi rivers, and Pacific ocean, via. Snake river and Columbia. The Geysers and a great part of the numerous boiling springs are situated in the western part of the park and on both sides of the west fork of Fire-hole river, a full description of which could be made to fill a large volume, and be of a great interest to a lover of the works and wonders of nature. The hot water of these different springs seem to partake of the same nature, being strong of minerals and during their constant flow, this mineral or sediment is deposited forming large mounds and craters, and in some instances covering acres of ground, with a grayish formation somewhat resembling limestone. Architectural Fountain, (so named from its curious structure) has a circular rim or crater 20 feet in diameter, scalloped and beautifully ornamented in various colors and tints. The water is continually boiling, steaming and overflowing on all sides, occasionally becoming furious and throwing hot water and steam at a lively rate, filling to overflow the surrounding cups and covers. About the rims of the cuplike cavities, and on the smooth surfaces in many accessible places, are written or carved the names of tourists. The mound formed by this spring covers about an acre, and is about 16 feet high. Several other springs of less importance cluster about this one and some of them very beautiful. Crystal lake is worthy of notice, situated only a few rods from the river, and elevated at least 50 feet above it, a circular lake of hot water 3 acres in size with a beautiful tinted and ruffled border, full and overflowing on all sides, the water is so clear that one can stand on its edge and look many fathoms into the seething pit below. Its curious basin is adorned with more brilliant colors and decorations than any one can imagine. One very remarkable feature of the geyser basin is the Chalk Vat an oblong pool 40 by 60 feet in diameter, of boiling clay or mud varying in color from a cream white to a bright pink, its boiling is like that of mush, huge bubbles rising slowly to the surface, exploding with a puffing sound, spists of hot chalk are thrown 2 or 3 feet high keeping up a constant puff and splutter. Where this boiled substance has cooled and dried about the edges of the vat, it can be cut with a knife, and resembles chalk. Hell's-half-acre, a geyser of importance, has turned itself loose within the last year, formerly being a flowing hot spring of no great note. Its eruptions now occur every 50 minutes, and it throws an immense body of water in every direction 200 feet or more. Many rocks are thrown out, from the size of a half bushel to mere pebbles, and scattered about for several rods. This geyser, unlike most others, has no mound, but to the contrary has torn a great hole out of the river bank a half acre in size. Its irregular wall on the upper side is 20 feet high and on the lower a little above water level so that the boiling contents during the spasms are poured over into the river, and right here I will say that the river is so heated up by the continued flow of hot water from this spring that five miles below it is milk warn, and fish do not flourish for fifteen miles below. Old Faithful, is the tourists favorite. His display is grand, and is regular as clock work, never failing every 68 minutes in sending up a column of water and steam five feet in diameter, throwing it skyward to a distance of 150 feet, and holding the stream to that height for 8 or 10 minutes. The stream is vertical and in decending, the water forms a glittering shower, splashing into a succession of beautiful reservoirs of every conceivable shape. The mound is about twenty-five feet high. The Giant, king of the park, throws a vertical stream 6 feet in diameter to a height of about 300 feet, continuing for three hours. His rumbling can be heard a distance of three miles, and his heaving and straining cause every thing to quiver for rods around. With eyes peeled and mouths ajar we stared spellbound, or, thunder-struck, expecting some great explosion, or at the next heave to see his whole stomach thrown up. The crater of this geyser is 10 feet in diameter at the base, and 15 feet high, resembling an old hollow stump, broken out on one side. It issues every 4th, day. The Giantess, is a grand spouter, and has a orifice of 25 feet. Her display occurs once in about twelve days, and a large body of water is thrown to the height of 200 feet, and continues gradually diminishing for ten hours. The Bee Hive, throws a stream 2 feet in diameter 220 feet high about every twelve hours, continuing 15 minutes. It has a crater four feet high, and five feet in diameter at the base, resembling in shape an old fashion bee hive. Castle geaser resembles an old ruined castle, and looms up fully 20 feet above its mound with oddly fashioned terraces and steps in regular succession leading down to its base. The formation, as hard as flint, has taken a great variety of shapes. A grumbling, murmuring sound is continually heard within the great chimney, and about every 48 hours a grand display of water dances to the tune of 160 feet for a few minutes, then comes a discharge of steam with a whistling roar as though a hundred boiler escape valves were turned loose at the same time, taming down gradually its former grumbling. Many others of less importance, but still very interesting might be described, but for want of time and space we will simply give the names of a few of them. Towitt, Grand, Saw Mill, Three Brothers, Splendid, River Side, Grotto, Fountain, Fan, Troops, Laundry, Dental, Cup Circes Boudoir, Paintpot, Devil's Punch Bowl and many others. When time will permit I will write more about this trip and speak of Yellow Stone Lake, Falls and Cangu, Sulphur Mountains, etc.

Respectfully Yours,
J. P. GOETSCHIUS.

The Texas cattle fever has made its appearance at several points in West Virginia, and there is reason to fear that it may extend to the cattle herds of the west. It first appeared in Alabama, then in North Carolina, and then in the neighborhood of Abingdon, Virginia, whence it spread to localities near Wheeling, West Virginia, and Reading, Pennsylvania.

The Decatur Democrat puts it like this which hits the bull-eye of the target: "According to some people, a person is not a temperance man, unless he commits himself to the wildest flights of the ultra prohibitionists. There is no sober temperance sentiment outside of their ranks. But they will find this is not one of the mistakes of Moses, but of the radical implacable and impolitic element within themselves, that is doing as much harm to the temperance cause as all other opposition combined. Our people are fair minded and fast becoming tolerant. Opinions will be gauged at the ballot box, and will perish or survive under the pressure of that law, which recognizes the survival of the fittest."

AS THE WIND BLOWS.

The wind blows north, the wind blows south,
The wind blows east and west;
No matter how the free winds blows,
Some ships will find it best;
Some one out in the wide, wide sea
Shouts with a happy air:
"Ho! shipmates, ho! set all the sails,
The wind is blowing fair!"

O a ship sails out into the east,
Another to the west;
One has to struggle fierce and hard,
By the wind and waves oppressed,
Under bare masts, tossed to and fro,
By rain and salt spray wet;
The other flies before the gale
With all her white sails set.

"O wind, O wind, why dost thou blow,
And out to ocean roar,
When I would steer my little bark
Toward some pleasant shore?
What honor will it be to thee
If down beneath the wave,
My simple craft and I shall find
A cold, forgotten grave?"

"O foolish one why wilt thou steer
Against the mighty gale?
There are ten thousand ships afloat
Besides thy tiny sail.
If thou would'st float o'er pleasant seas,
Oppose me will no more;
When I blow shoreward, then do thou
Sail also to the shore.

"Yet if thy will with mine must strive,
Do then the best you can;
Against my might set all thy skill,
And fight me like a man.
Stand by the wheel, steer steadily,
Keep watch above, below;
Such hearts will make the ports they seek,
No matter what winds blow."

THREE NIGHTS.

It is now several years since I was returning from the northwestern district of Lake Superior. Winter, with its winds and deep snows, had already set in, and instead of the usual lake voyage, my journey to the land of civilization had to be performed in a sleigh. Each day I took my way over roads whose ruts the snow had filled, while my horse's bells rang gayly out through the snow clad forest, whose pendent circles flashed in the sun's rays like a fruitage of gems.

We had passed Lake Superior, and were treading the forest bordering on Lake Huron, when one evening we came to a better cultivated farm than usual, where the scraping of fiddles and the echoing of the music announced one of those blithsome frolics with which the settlers at intervals lighten the monotony of backwoods life.

But it soon appeared that this was an extraordinary festival, being for the bridal of our host's daughter, whom all these friends, who came from many miles around, were to accompany to see the knot tied on the morrow. What a joyous scene it was.

The sun rose on our unwearied revels, ushering in the wedding day, and then one and all—for I deferred my journey in honor of the occasion—prepared to escort the bride on her way.

Through many of the backwoods settlements clergymen have never passed, and troths are lawfully plighted before the nearest magistrate. But on the present occasion it chanced that a clergyman was visiting his brother-in-law at a farm some twenty miles distant, and the marriage was hurried that the bride might have the advantage of a "parson's wedding."

My two-horse sleigh being the best appointed vehicle in the company, I placed it at the bride's disposal, and we were soon speeding through the forest followed by a bevy of sleighs and trains filled with a laughing crowd; and while the sleigh bells rang out the merriest of bridal peals, the young settlers played wild choruses upon their horns, until the woods echoed with their minstrelsy.

About midday we reached our destination. Our fair bride seemed almost scared to find how solemn were the words which bound her to share the burdens as well as the joys of her bridegroom, though she plighted her vows in a trembling but earnest voice, and smiled happily as he handed her into the sleigh for the return journey.

Again we swept through the bush with laugh and jest. My high-bred horses, fresh as when we started, soon far outsped the heavy steeds of the other travelers, and left them out of sight and hearing.

"Let us go by the lake shore," cried the bridegroom; "then you'll see the 'tumble,' and we will be home before the others are."

This was highly approved by the new made wife, and, as I was somewhat weary of the monotony of the woods, I readily agreed. Between us and the shore was a winding gully filled with frozen snow, which soon brought us to the broad belt of ice bordering the land. Beyond was the lake, which, as far as we could see, stretched a vast expanse of blue, refreshing to the eye wearied by the universal whiteness. Troubled by a recent gale, the lake heaved and rolled in heavy swells, whose very action was cheering amid the dead stillness.

Meanwhile we bowled merrily along over the wavy ice, which flashed and sparkled in a thousand blinding and gorgeous rays beneath our horses' feet.

At length a deep reverberation announced the tumble, a succession of foaming cascades by which the waters of a lofty river found their way into the lake, and whose picturesque beauty was enhanced by the lines of glittering icicles which fringed the overhanging rocks and the glacier-like cone of ice the spray had raised before it.

This admired, we passed on, for the day was fast drawing to a close. As the sun sank behind the pine crest of a distant headland, we came to an estuary, whose further point it formed. Beyond was the farm, and we urged the horses to a swifter pace, for with the sun's departure came a greater increase of cold.

The estuary, some eight miles wide, stretched deep into the land, and, to save time, we drove straight across the vast sheet of ice that bridged it. Night fell as we proceeded, but though the moon had not yet risen, the misty reflection of the snow lighted us on our way. We had reached the center of the bay when a report like a discharge of artillery filled the air, and, rolling back over the ice, was repeated by a thousand echoes.

It was the unmistakable sound of cracking ice.

Without a word I put the horses to their speed.

The next moment a yet louder and sharper concussion broke on the stillness, followed by a third, which sounded as if it rent the air asunder.

My companions peered eagerly into the dark. The horses stopped suddenly, and looking before them we perceived a dark belt of heavy waters. The crack was too broad for our horses to leap; all left us, therefore, was to turn landward, hurry on and outstrip the danger. But with each step the gap beside us widened, until it resembled a river, and to our consternation we discovered that the ice had split on either side, leaving us floating on a large cake of ice, which the swift current of the river was driving rapidly out up the lake.

What a sudden dismay came over us as we gazed at the increasing chasm!

The bridegroom was eager to swim the space, and bear tidings to the farm; but it would have been a useless sacrifice of life.

There was but one chance left—that we might yet hit upon some projecting point on the lake shore. But as our raft floated steadily further and further out from land, that last hope vanished; and, before long, we, who had been so joyous, stood sadly watching the white outline of the hills fade into the night with the sorrowful knowledge that we should perish miserably upon our frozen resting-place, or be swept into the ice-cold waters of the lake.

It was a terrible prospect.

The remembrance that we had, in a measure, brought this upon our own heads, increased its bitterness. Had we but apprised any one of our route when we diverged from the usual track we should undoubtedly have been sought for in canoes and most probably rescued; while, as it was, the blind path by which we turned off to the shore would put them all at fault. The bridegroom's self-reproaches were keenest, for he felt himself the destroyer of the bride so lately committed to his care; while the poor girl wept in utter abandonment of spirit, not only for the blighting of her bright hopes and the young life she must render up, but for the sudden parting from the beloved one she should never see again.

The moon rose in the deep blue sky, making night beautiful and flooding our ice-craft with its silvery light quivering in broken rays on the broad lake which now rolled in waves around us, and shining like a glory on the distant hills, giving us one more glance at earth.

The cold was becoming intense. The wind, straight from the frozen north, swept over the lakes in gusts, and seemed to pierce us like icy arrows; and though wrapped in heavy sleigh furs, and crouched within its narrow limits, we could scarcely endure the rigor of the night; and, worse than all our fair companion had to share these hardships, with no protection save the most sheltered corner of the sleigh, and the warmest wrapper. Yet she never murmured.

Day at length broke on this long night of misery. The current of the lake had swept us out of sight of the land.

We told ourselves we had no hope of rescue, yet long and anxiously we watched the circling horizon for some sign of coming aid, and it was with deeper dispondency we discovered that as far as the eye could reach there was nothing but lake and sky, save on the spot some five miles distant, where floated a fragment of our raft, which cracked from the commencement had parted during the night, bearing away with it both of our horses. As the day wore on another hardship was added, that of hunger. Since the preceding morning we had eaten nothing, and our long exposure made the want sorely felt. Though many birds flew over the lake, not one came within reach of our rifles.

Two days passed, and no words can tell the intensity of our suffering as we floated on our frozen prison; each hour served to augment our misery, and, when the third day broke upon us cold and exhaustion were fast doing their work, and we lay helplessly in the corners of the sleigh. But the young bride still bore up. Whether it was the unbroken vigor of her youth sustained her, or that marvelous endurance of her sex which has so often carried them through wreck and tempest, I know not; but she was still comparatively strong, and while she drew our covering closely around us, she earnestly entreated us still to hope and trust.

I began to think with horror that a time would shortly come when the unhappy girl would be left alone upon the ice.

Thus another night closed.

As the hours passed, a furious storm arose upon the lake, lashing its waters into foaming billows, which dashed against our raft, tossing it wildly among the waves; clouds black as ink rolled over the sky. Our hunger was succeeded by raging pains almost beyond endurance. It was well nigh maddening, and many times, as we sat cowering within the sleigh, listening to the rushing of the waves, did we pray that they would overwhelm our raft at once and end our misery. At length this desire seemed granted. There was a sudden crash and a violent concussion, as though we had struck upon a rock, and the billows beat and roared more wildly than ever. But we could distinguish nothing. While we waited the dawn crept slowly over the sky, and our indomitable bride, springing up, uttered a cry of joy. Before us, rising in hills and valleys, lay the snow-clad land, and against its icy border our raft was tightly moored.

The gale had driven us back to the shore of the lake, and thus saved our lives.

Not far off the ascending smoke announced a dwelling, but we had no strength to reach it, so we fired our rifles, a signal which quickly brought the inhabitants to the shore. They proved to have been members of the late wedding frolic; and nothing could exceed their astonishment and joy at our discovery. Every possible act of kindness was lavished upon us until we had recovered.

A Hat-Case Full of Money.

From the London Telegraph.

Mr. James Rice, in his "History of the British Turf," tell us that the victory of Ellington for the Derby, of 1856 "was marked by singular incident in connection with his trainer." The horse had been heavily backed for the Epsom race, but suffered a humiliating defeat when he ran for the DeeStakes at Chester, so that all possibility of "hedging" was out of the question. "The result was," says Mr. Rice, "that against his will, Mr. Thomas Dawson, the trainer of Ellington, won £25,000 by that horse's victory. On the Monday after the race Mr. Dawson went to Tattersall's to receive his money. The whole of it was paid to him in bank notes. After the settling he dined and took the train for the north, having first packed his bank notes in an old leather hat case without any lock, and tied simply with a piece of string. Mr. Dawson fell asleep in the train, and when the [illegible], who knew him well, awoke him at Northampton, and told him that he must change carriages, Mr. Dawson got out of the train, leaving the old hat-case behind him. In those days telegraphy was not so simple and easy a matter as it is now, and Mr. Dawson did not recover his hat case for a whole week, during which time it had traveled to Edinburg, Aberdeen and various other places. Ultimately it came back to the rightful owner, with string neither out nor untied, and with all the bank notes safe inside."

We need hardly add that, despite his characteristic and unmercenary indifference to money, the celebrated "Tom Dawson," than whom no more popular or large-hearted trainer ever plied his difficult or responsible craft, took care to display no solicitude about the missing hat-case, and abstained altogether from revealing the nature of its contents. He merely told the station master at Leybourne that it was an article he had owned for a great many years, and that as, in addition, there were some papers in it which were of no use to anyone but himself, he should like to recover possession of it.

Long Stockings.

Post-Dispatch Interview with Dry Goods Clerk.

"What is the popular number?"

"The 8½ size. A good many buy No. 8, but I know it is too small for them."

"How?"

I size 'em up by the bust, waist, arm and hand. If I were to give by accident a larger number than they ask for, they mutter 'stupid,' or look amazed. They are dreadful touchy about their sizes."

"What is the length of limbs?"

"From twenty-seven to twenty-eight inches. You see that brings it well up over the knee, and then a hose suspender is hooked on, and they are in a trim harness."

"I thought garters were used."

"So they are, but for ornament only. They've taken off all that ribbon and lace business, and use only a buckle, ranging in price according to their means. You'll never guess what they wear attached to the under side of the buckle."

"A face-powder rag?"

"No; a scent-bag."

"Phew!"

"That's what you'd say if you picked up one of them after it's filled with the owner's favorite perfume. Sachet powder, you know."

"Do you mean to say that you can tell where the odor is applied, whether on the handkerchief or at the knee?"

"Go long! It's as easy as whistling. If the scent strikes you horizontally it is sure to be on the handkerchief, and comes like a broadside of smoke."

"Well, and the—"

—the other. Why, that takes a man of delicate sensibilities to understand. It gives you a sort of Black Friday emotion. By degrees you become aware of a faint odor, which seems to lift from the floor, as if a white rosebud had just been crushed by the lady's foot."

"Does it materialize?"

"You've struck it. I can see the entire stocking supply dancing about as if filled with—well, patent forms."

"Young man, you should acquire a cold."

The Oddest Case of All.

Perhaps one of the oddest and most amusing instances of "two-sided persons," is that of a young man who lived some years ago in Flora, Clay County, Ill. He was related by marriage to the Foster family, and worked for some time on the Foster farms, and at Sim Foster's mill, on the Little Wabash river, near Clay City. Frank, for such was his name, was smart and shrewd, and possessed a powerful and active frame. He had never been sick since he was an infant, and had never had the slightest touch of paralysis. Notwithstanding, his face and chest on one side were profusely bathed in perspiration, even on the coldest days in winter, while on the other side, taking the nose for a dividing line, no sign of perspiration was ever seen, even in the hottest days of midsummer. This, of course, excited considerable remark and amusement. But his appearance was still more striking when, sitting in one of the country stores of an evening, he would go to sleep on one side, with that eye fast closed, while the other side would be wide awake, and he would be keeping up his end of the conversation. When last seen he was to some extent outgrowing his peculiarity, but probably never fully did so. He had consulted one or two country physicians, but never laid his case before those competent to advise him. It is to be regretted, as he would have excited great interest in medical circles.

Our Earnings and Savings.

According to Mr. Edward Atkinson, but half of the 52,000 people of the United States can be reckoned in the working force of the nation. The earnings of this working force, male and female, cannot exceed an average of $1 a day, each for the 365 days of the year, [illegible] the annual income of the [illegible] numbers, is $10,000, [illegible]. He [illegible] mates that the [illegible] of the population averages 45 [illegible] each man, woman and [illegible] cents of every dollar earned is consumed, leaving but 10 per cent, of the annual earnings to maintain existing capital and increase the nation's wealth. His opinion is that the increase in wealth is less than $500,000,000, annually. His purpose in his exhibit is to encourage economy. Learn to work more thoroughly, more savingly; to raise as much as possible, with as little waste as possible, is his injunction. The lesson which he teaches is the one which of all people on earth the people of the United States need to learn.

Herbert Spencer dictates every word of his books to an amanuensis, and works only three hours a day. For years he has not worked longer than that. Then, when the allotted three hours are spent, anything for diversion—particularly the opera or the concert, or billiards, and, above all, when he is quite used up, the country. He is extremely fond of the country, and in his periods of greatest distress, will fly thither and stay until he picks himself up a little.

MARK TWAIN.

He Tells How an Old Salt Interprets the Story of Elijah and the Prophets of Baal.

One trip the captain had a clergyman on board, but did not know he was a clergyman, since the passenger list did not betray the fact. He took a great liking to this Rev. Mr. Peters, and talked with him a great deal; told him yarns, gave him toothsome yarns of personal history, and wove a glittering streak of profanity through his garrulous fabric that was refreshing to a spirit weary of the dull neutralities of undecorated speech. One day the captain said, "Peters, do you ever read the Bible?"

"Well—yes."

"I judge it ain't often, by the way you say it. Now you tackle it in dead earnest once, and you'll find it'll pay. Don't get discouraged, but hang right on. First you won't understand it; but by and by things will begin to clear up, and then you won't lay it down to eat."

"Yes, I have heard that said."

"And it's so, too. There ain't a book that begins with it. It lays over 'em all, Peters. There's some pretty tough things in it—there ain't any getting around that—but you stick to 'em and think 'em out, and when once you get on the inside everything's as plain as day."

"The miracles, too, captain?"

"Yes, sir! the miracles, too. Every one of them. Now, there's that business with the prophets of Baal; like enough that stumped you?"

"Well, I don't know about"—

"Own up, now; it stumped you. Well, I don't wonder. You hadn't had any experience in raveling such things out, and naturally it was too many for you. Would you like to have me explain that thing to you, and show you how to get at the meat of these matters?"

"Indeed I would, Captain, if you don't mind."

Then the captain proceeded as follows: "I'll do it with pleasure. First, you see, I read and read, and thought and thought, till I got to understand what sort of people there were in the old Bible times, and then after that it was all clear and easy. Now, this was the way I put it up, concerning Isaac* and the prophets of Baal. There was some mighty sharp men amongst the public characters of that old ancient day, and Isaac was one of them. Isaac had his failings—plenty of them, too; it ain't for me to apologize for Isaac; he played it on the prophets of Baal, and like enough he was justifiable, considering the odds that was against him. Now, all I say is, 'twan't any miracle, and that I'll show you so's't you can see it yourself.

"Well, times had been getting rougher and rougher for prophets—that is, prophets of Isaac's denomination. There was 450 prophets of Baal in the community, and only one Presbyterian, that is if Isaac was a Presbyterian, which I reckon he was, but it don't say. Naturally, the prophets of Baal took all the trade. Isaac was pretty low-spirited, I reckon, but he was a good deal of a man and no doubt he went prophesying around, letting on to be doing a land office business, but 't wan't any use; he couldn't run anything. By and by things got desperate with him; he sets his head to work and thinks it all out, and then what does he do? Why, he begins to throw out hints that the other parties are this and that and t'other—nothing very definite, may be but just kind of undermining their reputation in a quiet way. This made talk, of course, and finally got to the king. The king asked Isaac what he meant by his talk. Says Isaac, Oh, nothing particular; only can they pray down fire from heaven on an alter? It ain't much, may be, your Majesty only can they do it? That's the idea. So the king was a good deal disturbed, and he went to the prophets of Baal, and they said, pretty airy, that if he had an alter ready, they wear ready; and they intimated he had better get it insured, too.

"So next morning all the children of Isreal and their parents and the other people gathered themselves together. Well, here was that great crowd of prophets of Baal packed together on one side, and Isaac on the other putting up his job. When time was called, Isaac let on to be comfortable and indifferent; told the other team to take the first innings. So they went at it, the whole 450, praying around the alter, very hopeful, and doing their level best. They prayed an hour—two hours—three hours—and so on, plum till noon. It wa'n't any use; they hadn't took a trick. Of course, they felt kind of ashamed before all those people, and well they might. Now what would a magnanimous man do? Keep still, wouldn't he? Of course, what did Isaac do? He gravelled the prophets of Baal every way he could think of; Says he 'You don't speak loud enough, your god's asleep, like enough, or maybe he's taking a walk; you want to holler, you know—or words to that affect; I don't recollect the exact language. Mind, I don't apologize for Isaac; he has his faults.

"Well, the prophets of Baal prayed along the best they knew how all the afternoon, and never raised a spark. At last last, about sundown, they were all tuckered out, and they owned up and quit.

"What does Isaac do, now? He steps up and says to some friends of his there, 'Pour four barrels of water on the altar!' Everybody was astonished, for the other side had prayed at it dry, you know, and got whitewashed. They poured it on. Says he, 'Heave on four more.' Twelve barrels, you see, altogether. The water ran all over the altar, and all down the sides, and filled up a trench around it which would hold a couple of hogsheads—'measures' it says; I reckon it means about a hogshead. Some of the people were going to put on their things and go for they allowed he was crazy. They didn't know Isaac. Isaac knelt down and began to pray; he strung along and strung along, about the sister churches, about the State and the country at large, and about those that's in authority in the government, and all the usual programme, you know, till everybody had got tired and gone to thinking about something else, and then, all of a sudden, when nobody was noticing, he out with a match and rakes it on the under side of his leg, and puff! up the whole thing blazes like a house afire. Twelve barrels of water? Petroleum, sir, petroleum! that's what it was."

"Petroleum, captain?"

"Yes, sir; the country was full of it. Isaac knew all about that. You read in the Bible. Don't you worry about the tough places. They ain't tough when you come to think them out and throw light upon them. There ain't a thing in the Bible but what is true; all you want is to go prayerfully to work and cipher out how 'twas done."

Eccentric Preachers.

People's Friend.

Friar Cuthbert was one of the class of jocular preachers so popular in mediæval times. They preached what was called Risus Paschales—comic homilies for Easter. Their works have been printed, and the student of early manners may consult them with advantage, though he may be repelled by their coarseness. They were bold satirists, dwelling perhaps too exclusively on the baser aspect of human life. In their denunciation of prevailing vices they did not spare the most exalted personages. Maillard, the cordelier, so irritated Louis XII. by his strictures that he threatened to have him thrown into the Seine. "The King may do as he pleases," replied the undaunted preacher, "but tell him that I shall sooner get to Paradise by water than he will arrive by all his post horses."

But we shall best give the reader an idea of the style adopted by these jocular clergy by quoting a few sentences from a sermon preached by Father Onoroto, the Capuchin, which we have come across in a curious old Italian work. In the course of the sermon he brought into the pulpit a skull, which he addressed as follows: "Speak," he said, "speak and tell me whether you were not once the head of a magistrate? You don't answer? Silence shows consent." He then placed upon the head a judge's cap, exclaiming at the same time, "Have you not often been in league with the advocate in order to deprive the widow and the fatherless of their rights? You don't answer? Silence shows consent." He then laid down the skull and took up another, to which he exclaimed, "Were you not the head of one of those light-minded damsels whose every thought is given to their coquetries?" Then taking a cuff from his sleeve, he placed it upon the hideous relic of humanity, crying: "Miserable head, where are now the soft, languid glances that used to captivate the unwary? Where is that beautiful mouth which formed such fascinating smiles? Where are now the pearly teeth, where the rouge, where the cosmetics with which the face was so often painted?" And so on in this strain the capuchin continued, describing all the various conditions of life, and altering the position of the skull, which he held in his hand, according to the subject with which he had to deal. On one occasion Louis XIV., asked Bourdaloue, the famous orator of Notre Dame, his opinion of Onorato: "Sire," was the reply, "that preacher tickles indeed the ear, but also pricks the heart. People return at his sermons the purses they steal at mine."

A Female Constable.

Indianapolis Journal.

Governor Porter yesterday received a letter from Columbus, informing him that Mrs. George Ruggles, upon whom he conferred the power of a special officer of the law some time ago for the purpose of securing the arrest of a bigamist, had returned with her prisoner, having captured him in Kansas. The case is a very singular one. Several months ago William J. Beck was married to Sarah Mutch, of Columbus, and it was developed some time afterward that he had another wife. A warrant was issued charging Beck with bigamy, and he lost no time in getting out of the State. Moved by her sympathy for the wronged woman, Mrs. Ruggles resolved to assume the task of bringing him to justice, and, after taking the necessary preliminary steps of obtaining the authority for making the arrest, she proceeded to Kansas and there captured her prisoner. Determined to take no risks on his escape, she shackled him hand and foot, and succeeded in getting back to the State without any great trouble. The case is one which contains the elements of a first-class romance, with a moral and practical illustration.

Indiana and the Lime Kiln Club.

Proceedings in Detroit Free Press.

Under the head of communications, the secretary read a letter from the office of the Secretary of State of Indiana asking the club to use its influence to stop the adulteration of food and drink, and inquiring if Brother Gardner had any suggestions to make.

"I has given dis adulturashun subjeck considerable thought," said the old man, as he elevated his glasses. "When I take home fo' cents' worth of bakin'-powder, I am made to realize dat my biscuit am to be mixed wid alum, cream tartar, chalk, clay, and de land only knows how much bran-mash, beeswax an' lemonade left ober from de las' picnic. Dey adulturate my sugar, my tea, my coffee, my beer dat I keep in case of sickness, an' when I carried home my las' codfish, I foun' whar dey had tried to adulturate him wid scrap-iron. As to de remedy, it seems to me dat if we would all agree to lib fur six months on co'n-meal an' bacon, it would stop dis wickedness, but I should want to see de hogs killed and de co'n husked wid my own eyes."

Central American Ruins.

Desire Charnay, in reporting to the French Geographical society the results of his three years' explorations of Central American ruins, mentioned that during his last journey in Yucatan, he entered the remains of a palace at the town of Kabah, and found on the wall thereof an Indian painting of an armed Spaniard on horseback. This, he maintained, is indisputable proof that the palace was inhabited at the time of the Spanish conquest. Some authorities hold that these ruins belonged to a people long ago extinct, and that they are not less than 3,000, perhaps 10,000, and, according to one traveler, 40,000 years old. M. Charnay will not admit that they are more than 750 years old, and holds that they all belonged to the race which the Spanish invaders found in possession of the country.

JOCOSITIES.

The boy stood near the mule's hind legs,
With utmost confidence—
Although no more he'll look so sweet,
He'll have a deal more sense.

Plaint of a bachelor:

When Peggy's dear her arms imprison,
I often wish my lot were hisson.
How often would I stand and turn
To get a pat from hands like hern.

No woman should borrow the husband of another, because it is not good for a man to be a loan.

After a man has been hugged nearly to death by sin, he generally turns round and embraces religion.

It was a dressmaker looking at a bow-legged bather who remarked: "My! what bias limbs; how awfully they stand in need of a tuck and a gore."

A German who has been a Lutheran and been sprinkled in his infancy, was asked, when he wished to join the Baptist church, if he had not been baptised. His answer was, "Vell, now, abust a leedle."

Only as a brother: "My teeth are all full of sand," said the fairest bather in the surf. "All right, hand them out," said an admirer, "and I'll rinse them out for you." And now she regards only as a brother.

Humility: A Scotch woman in humble life, was asked one day, on her way back from Church, whether she had understood the sermon, a stranger having preached. "Wud I had the persumption!" was her simple and contented answer.

In the ladies cabin of the Hoboken ferry boats the following notice has been posted: "The seats in this cabin are reserved for the ladies. Gentlemen will please not occupy them till the ladies are seated." That strikes us as reversing the proper position.

A pagan: A certain clerk in a Western village recently made the following comment on Pocahontas. Said he: "Pocahontas was a kind-hearted man." "Hold on!" cried his companion, Pocohontas was a woman." "She was, eh?" said he. "Well, that's just my luck. How am I expected to know. I never read the Bible."

He sat at the piano and she stood beside him, her hand lovingly lying on his shoulder. He was running over the accompaniment to "The Last Chord." "How I do love Sullivan's work; don't you, Julie, dear?" he asked, looking up in her eyes. "Yes, I do, Gus; didn't he just pound the life out of Ryan, though?" And then he kissed her.

Irene Ackerman, in the New York Mirror, adding some verses to the "tying-her-bonnet-under-her chin-she-tied-a-young-man's-heart-within" poem, says: "And many a time as she cooked or swept, or sewed or scrubbed, she bitterly wept, for the wages she got for her beauty and youth, was to waken at last to the sorrowful truth that love had flown and would never come back, since he pawed for rum her sealskin sacque."

Little Johnny Fizz'stop, aged six years, who is one of an Austin family of ten children, was taken out in a buggy for a ride, with his mother, a few days ago. As they drove past a small cottage of two rooms, Johnny called his mother's attention to it, who remarked that it was a very small house. "Yes," replied Johnny, meditatively, "it's small, but it would be plenty big enough for our family if it wasn't fer pa and the children."

A Hebrew vendor of ready-made clothing, who had his nose bitten off in a struggle with a burglar, was visited next day by a sympathizing Israelite. "It ish too pad, ishn't it?" said the mutilated merchant, extending his hand and looking the very picture of melancholy. "Pyshimminy it ish, Yacup," replied the visitor, sorrowfully contemplating the havoc that the burglar had made, "nobody would ever know you from a Shew."

A young farmer who had been reading a book which stated that "woman is the Sunday of man," thought he would compliment and please his wife by shouting to her one morning: "Daisy, you are my Sunday!" Daisy glared at him as though she imagined he was daft, and then quietly said: "Dan, I may be your Sunday, but I'm not going to give you any rest until you buy me a bonnet that's fit to wear to Church." Dan now keeps his quotations to himself, but he was compelled to get the head gear.

The Sensuous Wave of a Mule's Hoof.

H. T. White in Chicago Tribune.

"Good-by, papa."

The plump, white arms of Erica Brown were thrown about her father's neck, and the pretty face with its riant mouth and cunning dimples was pressed closely to the bronzed cheek of the farmer as he stood in the kitchen doorway a moment before going out to his daily toil.

"I am going to plow the south meadow this morning, my darlin," he said to the girl, "and when noon comes you must have my accounts as Treasurer of the Church all arranged, because the Building Committee will be here after dinner, and I am to turn over the money in my hands, so that the erection of the new Church in the little dell just beyond where we buried that mouse-colored heifer two years ago last spring can be commenced at once"—and, kissing his daughter again, Farmer Brown took a bit of hard tobacco and went away into the glad sunlight.

• • • • • • •

The petals of the June roses had fallen like a pink carpet along the edge of the woods, contrasting prettily with the vivid green of the grass and leaves. Above the hum of the insects and the twittering of the birds rose the sturdy voice of Farmer Brown, swearing at the off mule. "Get up, darn it!" he said. But the mule only waved his ears in a sensuous, languid fashion, and looked wistfully into the next meadow where the starry-eyed kine were grazing, and the old sorrel mare that had a splint on her near front leg was quaffing the incense of the new-born day. Picking up a short stick, the farmer advanced and struck the faithful mule a cruel blow just abaft his midship ribs. Stretching out his hind legs in a dreamy, listless way, the mule felt them touch something, and in a moment Farmer Brown was sailing in the far blue overhead.

The little church in the mossy dale is not completed yet, and the Building Committee are anxiously waiting for the Treasurer to come down.

AN UNWELCOME PRESENT.

How Mrs. General Lew Wallace Received the Sultan's Gift of a Circassian Beauty.

San Francisco Wasp.

"The Sultan of Turkey has presented General Lew Wallace, the American minister, with a beautiful Circassian girl."—Press dispatch.

This is all that the modest telegraph consented to say about the occurrence, but there is ever so much more to be told. The fact is that Mrs. Wallace was sitting at the front window of her Constantinople house, on the verge of going down to the bazaar for some embroidered stuffs to send home, when a cavalcade drew up before the door, a huge eunuch, arrayed in the Sultan's livery, knocked at the door and slam-slammed, and then two eunuchs a size smaller brought in and deposited upon the inside door mat a big-eyed, beautiful Circassian girl, whose lustrous orbs and sparkling jewels were but little obscured by the filmy gauze veiling that covered her from head to foot. Mrs. Wallace gazed at the girl in dumb amazement.

"What do you want?" she said.

The girl shook her head.

"Mustaby, Mustaby," cried Mrs. Wallace, sharply; "what does this mean?"

Mustaby came from the floor below, where he had been polishing some knives with a Bristol brick. He dropped knife and brick when he caught sight of the visitor.

"Ah, ah," he ejaculated with satisfaction, as he saw the imperial insignia. "It is a present. It is a magnificent present. His Highness has smiled upon my master, and has sent him his choicest slave."

"And what is his choicest slave going to do in this house? I should like know," continued Mrs. Wallace, with a vinegary gleam of sarcasm.

"She will bring my master's coffee to him when he awakens in the morning, and affectionately superintend his morning's ablutions."

"She will, will she?" remarked Mrs. Wallace as she gritted her teeth very hard. "She will affectionately superintend his morning's ablutions, will she?" and she stealthily fingered a bric-a-brac cimeter and glared at the offending present.

Then she walked straight up to the beauty on the door-mat, pointed her index finger out of the front door and remarked, "Go 'way!"

The present stared at her stupidly.

"Go 'way, I tell you. You're a shameless hussy to come intruding on a respectable family in this way."

The present did not look as though she had done anything particularly infamous, and showed no disposition to move.

Mrs. Wallace could contain herself no longer. She flew at the present, grabbed it by the shoulder, and was hustling it down the stairs when General Wallace came around the corner rather flushed from rapid walking. He took in the situation at a glance.

"Oh! Lewis," cried his wife, with accentuated horror, "did you ever hear of such a thing?"

Lewis did not look horrified, though he evidently was. He evidently had heard of such things, for there was a doubtful look on his face. Finally he said:

"I don't think, Maria, that I would put it out into the street. It's not to blame, you know."

There was a faint snap in Mrs. Wallace's eye, but she nodded and lured him on further.

"You see it's a present, and you can't give away or throw away a present, you know. If we could send it back saying we had no use for it, or that we had one already and couldn't he make it something else, it would be the best way. You have to consult custom and etiquette in these things you know, dear."

"Y-e-e-s," said Mrs W., with a sinister sweetness in her compliance.

"Besides," he continued, as he carelessly took hold of the present's hand and began stroking the present's brow in a gentle and fatherly way, "I don't really know if it would be safe to send it back at all. You see these foreign powers are touchy, and I don't know but if I was to send this present back and turn up my nose at it in such a way they might be mad enough to declare war on the United States right off and massacre us all."

"You would, would you?" remarked Mrs. Wallace, in a voice like the first rumblings of a rising typhoon. "Fraid to send it back, are you, you bald-headed old fraud! 'Fraid of international complications are you, you salacious old wretch! Now you can just understand this, sir, and right now. If that present doesn't go back to that old beast that sent it in less than ten minutes, I'll show you what kind of a Bulgarian atrocity you're married to. I'll show you," she hissed as she flew at the present and inaugurated a panic in dry goods and hair pins, and Circassion squeals and male protests, and finally, hysterics, as General Wallace called a camel and packed the girl off at hot speed.

Then he went in and caught it—caught it so hot that he remarked to the vice-consul that sooner than go through the like again he would see the whole continent bathed in blood and the American eagle bombarded until it hadn't a pin feather to its name.

Fresh Meat from the West.

[From the New York Sun.]

The high price of meat has led to a supply of enormous quantities of fresh meat from the West, which is now a peculiar feature of the New York market. The business naturally grew out of the operations of the great Western meat-packing houses, which have sought this opportunity to dispose of their choicest pieces at higher prices than could be got for canned meats. When the St. Louis Beef Canning Company and Libby, McNeil & Libby succeeded, after a long contest in the courts, in breaking the patents by which it was sought to maintain a monopoly in putting up meats in cans, there was a natural increase in the business, and, as the price of meats advanced, there were more choice pieces to be disposed of. Armour & Co., of Chicago, kill about 500 cattle a day. The St. Louis Beef Canning Company packed 200,000 animals last year, and kill 700 in a day. Libby, McNeil & Libby, of Chicago, also do an immense business, and these three firms are sending forward the bulk of the fresh meat that comes to New York. The supply is steady, and several firms in New York make a business of supplying retail customers with fresh meat killed in Chicago or St. Louis. Not only are choice tenderloins sold in this way, but even inferior cuts are sold at lower rates than meat killed in and near New York. It is admitted that the western meats are not of the very finest quality, such as is sold here at 50 to 75 cents a pound; but it is claimed that the meat is much better than that of cattle starved and thirsty that are brought to this city alive.

There has been complaint among the Western dealers that the New York butchers have formed a ring to keep out their meat. Mr. Le Fevre V. Styles, of the St. Louis Beef-Canning Company, said one day last week: "I had 1,000 pounds of nice beef tenderloins yesterday, nice enough for anybody, and I was glad to sell them at 16 cents a pound. I have no doubt that this meat is sold at retail for 25 or 30 cents a pound. The combination against Western meat was so great last Winter that they got the price down to 10 cents a pound. But we put ours in cold storage, and kept it until we got 18 cents a pound, which is a high price for us." The growth of the trade has led to the building of great refrigerators, for both storage and transportation, and the cold storage business in large cities is rapidly becoming immense. Mr. Styles says his firm is building a refrigerator that will cost $100,000. Another firm has immense refrigerators where they keep the Western meat ready for daily delivery. Although the railroad freight for fresh meat carried in refrigerator cars is double that for live cattle, the actual freight for the consumable meat is less. The prospects are that the keen competition of business men to secure profits from the present exorbitant prices will continue to supply the New York market with increasing quantities of Western meat.

A Michigan Spook.

Reed City Letter in the Detroit Post and Tribune.

Reed City, Mich., boasts of a real old-fashioned haunted-house sensation. An old house in the east part of the village was lately leased and occupied by a gentleman of this village. Soon after he occupied it the family began to be disturbed at nights by sounds as if some person was walking about the rooms. This annoyed them greatly, but there were no violent demonstrations until one night last week, when they were awakened by a great commotion in the house. The gentleman got up and attempted several times to light the lamp, but could not do it. He finally gave up the attempt, and concluded to try and make an examination in the dark. While groping around he would be seized apparently by a person who attempted to throw or push him over. He finally got hold of a poker and attempted to strike with it, but every time failed to hit anything material. He repeatedly attempted to light the lamp, but for some reason it would not light; and still the unseen force would seize and attempt to push him over, and it would take all of his strength to resist.

Finally there came a great clatter and noise, and every piece of furniture in the house seemed to rattle and dance around. By this time his wife could not stand it any longer, so they dressed as best they could in the dark, and started for one of the neighbors. As they went out of the door they heard the report as if three pistol-shots had been fired in the cellar. Calling up the neighbor the gentleman left his wife in the house, and the two men returned with a lantern. They searched the house and the cellar thoroughly but could find nothing that would explain the cause of the disturbance. The effect upon the man's wife was such that she would not live in the house, and they have moved into another dwelling.

The night after these disturbances a party of men sat up until morning. They had lights burning all over the house, and played an accordeon all night, and reported the next morning that they did not hear anything. A great many ridiculous stories are afloat in regard to this sensation, but the above were the only disturbances heard. We have this from the gentleman himself. He does not believe in "ghosts."

What the Physicians of the Future Must Study.

Prof. G. H. Perkins, in Popular Science Monthly for September.

Physiology especially has developed during the last fifty years, so that it has almost become a science by itself, but it still remains a part of the wider science of biology. Here again we see the ancient and modern physician. To-day, and still more in the near future, the physician must extend his studies beyond man, and the reason is plain. Man, with whom alone the physician formerly supposed himself concerned, is but an isolated being disconnected from the rest of nature. Nature tolerates no such isolation. No living being, even the simplest, exist, or can exist, independently of other things. It affects them and is affected by them, and what is true of the simplest is yet more true of the more complex, and most of all of man. Nature is one, and all her creatures are parts of the whole. For this reason man cannot be fully known merely as man, he must also be known as a part of the animal kingdom. No one can well understand human anatomy or physiology who knows nothing of that of the lower animals. Comparative anatomy and physiology have thrown much light upon many obscure problems to which the study of man gave rise. Therefore, I would most earnestly urge upon all medical men the study of biology. It may be replied that the courses are now crowded, but it is certain that the successful physicians of the future must know something of nature as a whole. Already many of our most important theories as to disease—the structure of organs, cell-growth, cell-life, and many more—have come to medicine from biology. In an address before the International Medical Congress held in London in August, 1881, Professor Huxley remarks that "the search for the explanation of diseased states in modified cell-life, the discovery of the important part played by parasitic organisms in the etiology of disease, the elucidation of the action of medicaments by the methods of experimental physiology, appear to me to be the greatest steps which have ever been made toward the establishment of medicine on a scientific basis. I need hardly say, they could not have been made except for the advance of normal biology. There can be no doubt that the future of pathology, of therapeutics, and therefore of practical medicine, depends on the extent to which those who occupy themselves with these subjects are trained in the methods and impregnated with the fundamental truths of biology. And I venture to suggest that the collective sagacity of this congress could occupy itself with no more important question than this: 'How is medical education to be arranged, so that, without entangling the student in those details of the systematist which are valueless to him, he may be enabled to obtain a first grasp of the great truths respecting animal and vegetable life without which, notwithstanding all the progress of scientific medicine, he will still find himself an empiric?'"

Her Name is Fagin.

London Truth.

Mlle. Feyghine, the rising star from the East, is an odd genius, a strange elf, a demicivilized creature, endowed with the most extraordinary artistic sensibilities, strikingly original, and yet imitative as a monkey. She is unique, and yet she is a mirror to reflect the ideas of others. Is she a Gypsy, a Jewess, or a Slave? Probably all three. Her intense vitality stood in the way of a boarding-school education. Her father, who is a man of wealth and in trade, despaired of getting her into proper form, an dallowed her to have her own way in nearly everything. She has a slender frame which is inured to hardship, for it was her fancy to make long journey's on horseback over the Steppes and through the forests of Russia. The ride of Dick Turpin would not have been long or fast enough for this Amazon when she was a miss in her teens. The discovery that she had power to charm and fascinate tamed her suddenly; but the wild savor which she acquired in her independent youth has not left her. It lends piquancy to her coquetries. The noise Sarah Bernhardt made in London and the United States was echoed in Russia. Mlle. Feyghine, who had for a couple of years frequented assiduously the Moscow theatres, took it into her head to go on the stage. Directly the wish was formed, she started for Brussels and to take lessons there at the Conservatoire. The great difficulty was her accent. When she had vanquished this obstacle she came to Paris and went straight to the Francais to ask M. Perrin to admit her to the theater. In the first interview he judged of her capacity, but advised a course of studies under a professor whom he recommended. She subsequently appeared in Alfred de Musset's comedy "Barberine," and met with indifferent success. The present Duc de Morny has barely attained his majority. The career of his father is best known to the latest generation by Alphonse Daudet's novel, "The Nabob."

General Spinner's Sea-Sight.

Florida Despatch.

General Spinner, the hero that used to sign the Treasury notes, sends the following descriptive letter of a fight among sea-monsters on the coast of Florida, on South Beach, below Mayport: "Early yesterday morning, as I went for my usual surf bath, accompanied by my daughter, Mrs. Schumacher, we witnessed what has probably seldom been seen. The ocean was unusually placid, but a strange commotion in the surf was noticed. On nearing the shore it was seen that a fierce battle was raging between two schools of fishes, one of sharks and the other of saw-fish. It was high tide, and the water was quite shallow, so that the caudal and dorsal fins of both these kinds of sea monsters were constantly seen above the water. The onslaught of each of the combatants, of which sixteen to twenty were in view, was fierce and terrible. A disabled saw-fish was stranded. I waded into him, and with the edge of a piece of floor board gave him the coup de grace. He measured nearly fifteen feet, and carried a saw three and a half feet long, with over fifty teeth on its margin. It was found that one of the sharks had bitten a piece out of his side equal to a foot square, through which his bowels protruded.

"At one time it looked as if another pair of the combatants would be stranded, for in their struggle they came so near the shore that they touched bottom all the time, but they finally managed to join their companions in deep water, and after fifteen minutes all the belligerents disappeared, to the great relief of those who cared no more for sea monsters. My daughter will carry the saw of the captured fish to her home as a memento an trophy of the great conflict and for and addition to her cabinet of ocean curiosities."

A Fashionable Parisienne's Bath-Room.

Correspondence New York World.

The bath-room is round, and the walls and ceiling are quilted everywhere with black satin, relieved by yellow buttons; there is no window either in the walls or ceiling. The light comes from pink lustres borne by nymphs in white marble. The sofa, low and broad, is in quilted satin. The pier-glass is framed with flying cupids. The bath, in black marble, shaped like a Roman car, is half buried in flowers. The gilt linen basket hangs over a brasier burning perfumes. The carpet is a black bear-skin. The bath-mixture is compounded (after the recipe of a learned chemist) of almond juice, benzoin, Constantinople rosewater, cocoanut milk and palm leaves. It should be as hot as possible, warm water having, like cold, the effect of closing the pores of the skin. The bath may last an hour, though most people would be glad to get out of this mixture as soon as possible, and after that another hour may probably be employed in polishing the feet and hands. But the whole time is not necessarily lost to the mind, for ladies may "meditate on combinations in toilets" while they are on the simmer.

What a woman should demand of a man in courtship, or after it, is first—respect for her as she is a woman; and next to that—to be respected by him above all other women.—Charles Lamb.

Farm and Workshop Notes.

Tobacco draws heavily on the soil, the principal demand by it being lime and potash.

The Western farmers are beginning to save all the female calves, sending only the bulls to market.

The leading Fairs of the West are to receive for exhibition seventy head of Oxforddown sheep from England.

Capital time now to underdrain any wet places in the meadows. Underdraining always pays if properly done.

Compost heaps are in order now, and in making them remember that potash, nitrogen and phosphoric acid are the great fertilizers.

Herbs for winter use should be gathered when the plants are in flower; just as the flowers begin to fade is considered to be the best time to harvest them.

The Boston Journal of Chemistry thinks glucose will be the sugar of the future. It can be made from corn and potatoes in climates where sugar cane will not grow nor the sugar beet be cultivated with profit.

It is nearly time for the legal slaughter of the best friends of the farmer to begin. As many as 20 000 quail were killed in Southern New Jersey alone last season, and the woodcock and woodpecker are not spared.

The following are the advantages of soiling: It saves land, fences, economizes food, produces more milk and beef, keeps stock in better condition and comfort, and increases the quantity and quality of the manure.

Nature quickly covers the soil and protects it from the extremes of heat and cold, and hence weeds fulfill an important office, for so great is the variety that they are adapted to every climate and under all conditions.

More sweet corn will be canned this year than ever before. There is a growing demand for it, which will be increased by the scarcity and high price of fruits. A factory in Wells, Me., expects to put up 600,000 cans this season.

To kill willows or locusts, cut the bark two feet above the ground, and pull it down to to the roots, leaving it hang to the tree. Do this as early in the dark of the moon in May as the bark will slip. They will never again end out a sprout.

A horse's head ought to be as free as his feet except that the head must be used as the guiding part. It would be just as sensible to tie and brace up his tail when he is to be backed as to fasten his head when he is going forward. A horse of any spirit always holds his head where it ought to be when he is in motion.

One of the worst things a poultryman can do is to use rotten eggs for nest eggs. They get broken sooner or later and foul the nest. As soon as this happens lice appear, and their entrance into the dirty nest means the overrunning of the entire poultry house in a very short time. Porcelain eggs are cheap, and the hen can not detect the difference.

It is estimated that in making 100 pounds of pork from corn we get $1.42 worth of manure. This, added to the price of the pork, as it should be, makes pig-feeding a profitable business at present prices of pork products. Much of the feed of a pig while growing may be less expensive material than corn. If fed on clover the expense is much less, and the manure is even more valuable.

A Texas farmer by turning his sheep in his wheat in the autumn, and allowing them to graze during the winter and spring when the soil was in condition, says: "The last piece of wheat I grazed will make twenty-five bushels to the acre, and it would have made more, but it was badly damaged by the worms. Now, I dont think my wheat was materially injured by grazing, and yet my whole lamb crop was raised on wheat."

A writer in the Prairie Farmer tried the experiment of flat and hill cultivation for vines. This year squashes, pumpkins, melons and other vegetables were planted, part in hills and part flat. He recommends the level cultivation as the best, as hot weather did greater damage in the hills. In ten days the difference was very marked. Although the flat cultivation was superior for a dry season, the hill system is preferable for a wet one.

Professor W. J. Beal, in the Farmers' Friend, claims that an acre of good clover will make 5,000 pounds of good hay, containing 282½ pounds of mineral matter or ash. In this ash will be 97½ pounds potash; 96 pounds lime, 34½ pounds magnesia and 28 pounds phosphoric acid, and the hay will contain 108 pounds combined nitrogen. These are the stores of wealth which an acre of red clover offers to succeeding crops when it is plowed under, and the scythe leaves in the fields as much materials as it removes, which is stored in the roots and stubbles. This is enough phosphoric acid for double an average crop of grain, nitrogen for four crops and potash for six crops. He says that with such figures before them it is no wonder that farmers are surprised at the large crops they can raise on a clover sod.

The Highest Railroad Bridge in the World.

The bridge of the Erie Railway across Kinzua creek, on the Bradford (Pa.) branch, was completed last Wednesday. It is the highest bridge in the world. The structure is 2,052 feet long between abutments, and 302 feet high from the surface of the creek to the base of the rail. It is composed of continuous lateral girder irons supported on twenty iron towers, formed by columns strongly connected together by bracing, so as to give the greatest amount of strength and stability to resist pressure from wind and storms. There are twenty clear spans of sixty-one and one of sixty-two feet in length. Due provision is made for expansion and contraction, as in the girders of the truss on the plates connecting the columns at the base of the towers and to the masonry. The towers are firmly anchored to the masonry piers by heavy iron rods. The floor system of the viaduct, which is twenty feet in width, consits of oak ties eight inches in with band twelve inches deep, laid on the girders eight inches apart, on which the rails rest. Every provision is made for safety by double timber guard rails and an inside steel guard rail. On each side, outside the guard rail, a sidewalk is laid, and protected by a hand rail. The weight of iron in the structure is 4,200 000 pounds.

There are some amusing features of the crusade being carried on in France against religion, notably in the matter of selecting books for the public libraries. For instance, an official censor struck out of a list "Robinson Crusoe," as being "too religious in its tendency."

If you feel drowsy, debilitated, have frequent headache, mouth tastes badly, poor appetite and tongue coated, you are suffering from torpid liver, or "biliousness," and nothing will cure you so speedily and permanently as to take SIMMONS LIVER REGULATOR OR MEDICINE.
The cheapest, Purest and Best Family Medicine in the World.
An EFFECTUAL SPECIFIC for all diseases of the Liver Stomach and Spleen.
Regulate the Liver and prevent Chills and Fever, Malarious Fevers, Bowel Complaints, Restlessness, Jaundice and Nausea.
SIMMONS LIVER REGULATOR

BAD BREATH!
Nothing is so unpleasant, nothing so common as bad breath, and in nearly every case it comes from the stomach, and can be so easily corrected if you will take Simmons Liver Regulator. Do not neglect so sure a remedy for this repulsive disorder. It will also improve your Appetite, Complexion, and General Health.

PILES!
How many suffer torture day after day, making life a burden and robbing existence of pleasure, owing to the secret suffering from Piles. Yet relief is ready to the hand of almost any one who will use systematically the remedy that has permanently cured thousands. SIMMONS' LIVER REGULATOR, is no drastic violent purge; but a gentle assistant to nature.

CONSTIPATION!
Should not be regarded as a trifling ailment—in fact nature demands the utmost regularity of the bowels, and any deviation from this demand paves the way often to serious danger. It is quite as necessary to remove impure accumulations from the bowels as it is to eat or sleep, and no health can be expected where a costive habit of body prevails.

SICK HEADACHE!
This distressing affliction occurs most frequently. The disturbance of the stomach, arising from the imperfectly digested contents, causes a severe pain in the head, accompanied with disagreeable nausea, and this constitutes what is popularly known as Sick Headache.

NERVOUS DEBILITY
BY YEARS OF USE!
A valuable Discovery and New Departure in Medical Science. A positively effective Remedy for the speedy and permanent Cure for organic weakness—the deplorable disease resulting from [illegible] or excesses in youth or at any time of life, by the only true way, viz: Direct Application, acting by Absorption, and exerting its specific influence on the Vesicles, Ducts, and Glands, that are impaired to perform their natural functions while this disease pervades the human organism. The use of the Pastille is attended with no pain or inconvenience, and does not interfere with the ordinary pursuits of life; it is quickly dissolved and soon absorbed, producing an immediate soothing and restorative effect upon the nervous organizations wrecked from vicious habits or excesses, stopping the drain from the system, restoring the mind to health and sound memory, removing the Dimness of Sight, Confusion of Ideas, Aversion to Society, etc., etc., and the appearance of premature old age usually accompanying this trouble, and restoring the vital forces, where they have been dormant for years. This mode of treatment has stood the test in very severe cases, and is now a pronounced success. [illegible] Full DIRECTIONS for using will accompany EACH BOX.
Send for Sealed Descriptive Pamphlets giving Anatomical Illustrations and Testimony, which will convince the most skeptical that they can be restored to perfect health, and the vital forces thoroughly re-established same as if never affected. Sold ONLY by

KING'S MAGIC TOOTH ACHE CURE.

Auburn Courier.

AUBURN, INDIANA, SEP. 28ht, 1882

One of Dorsey's Tricks.

One of the incidents of the closing hours of the presidential canvass of 1880 was the issue by Star Route Dorsey of millions of placards and cards to "boom" the tariff scare. Dorsey was then as now secretary of the republican national committee, and the whole machinery of the republican party as well as of the Federal government was used to put these cards in the hands of every workingman in the northern states. It will be in order for workingmen to recall these tricks. Here are some of the inscriptions on the cards Dorsey prepared and allowed to be circulated.

"Keep this in your mind and don't you forget it."

"Republican protection means plenty of work, with good wages and empty poor houses."

"Democratic free trade means closed work-shops, starvation wages, and crowded poor houses."

"The republican party will protect your employer so he can sell his goods and keep you steady at work with good wages."

"The democratic party will, by their free trade policy, empty your work-shops, break up your happy homes and fill your poor houses."

Referring to this subject, the Pittsburg Post says: "This is interesting reading, in view of the prevalence of strikes and labor disturbances of all kinds since the election of Garfield and Arthur. Some of the manufactures who contributed largely of their means to circulate these cards among their workingmen, knowing them to be unmitigated trash and falsehood, have since banded themselves together to promote the very thing they charged against as certain to follow Hancock's election—that it closed workshops, lowered wages and crowded poor houses. Some of them have even gone further, and imported cheap negro labor from the south and pauper labor from Europe to take the place of white workingmen, who were deluded by their appeals during the Garfield-Hancock campaign."

New Star Route Trial.

Judge Wylie has granted a new trial not only in the case of Brady, the two Dorseys, and Vaile, concerning whose guilt the jury disagreed, but for Miner and Rerdell as well, who were convicted under the indictment. The practical result of the late protracted trial, therefore, is the elimination of the deceased contractor, Peck, from the case, and the acquittal of the clerk, Turner. There remain six of the defendants to undergo a new trial, which is set down for the first Monday in December. If there was to be another trial of Brady, the Dorseys, and Vaile, it was manifestly only just that Miner and Rerdell should have an opportunity to take an even chance with them again, and the government did not oppose the motion of their counsel. The ground on which it was granted was the unreasonableness of the verdict and the dragging of the bribery business into the deliberation of the jury room by Foreman Dickson contrary to the instructions of the court.

That Oats Bill Again.

Senate Bill No. 78, known as the "Oats Bill," changed the standard weight of a bushel of oats in this state from thirty-two to thirty-three pounds. The vote in the house of representatives was sixty-five for the bill and ten against it. There were in the house thirty-eight farmers, and thirty-seven of them voted for the bill and one farmer only against it. Of the ten members voting against the bill, eight of them were lawyers, one, a farmer and one, an editor. Our senator, Mr. Macartney, voted for the bill. Our joint-representative, Mr. Iddings, voted for the bill; but Mr. Moody had the fairness to vote against this bill, being one of the ten who voted against the bill in the house.

THE Press certainly does not wish to be understood, as thinking that Dorsey is honest, merely because the juror who "stuck" is a democrat. For our part, we think a juror, who with the evidence before him, failed to convict as through paced a rascal as Dorsey, was as bad as any of the gang, and it don't make any difference what ticket he votes. Will the Press say as much for Dorsey? Then will it give its opinion as to the propriety of retaining such a half-convicted thief as secretary of the republican national committee? And then, will it give its opinion of President Arthur and other eminent republicans who at a public dinner, given in honor of this same public criminal, publicly praised him for his great services to the party, and especially as to his effective use of money in carrying the election in Indiana? Let us hear all about it.

WHILE we are having dry weather for the first time in nearly a year, the states farther east are suffering great damages from heavy rains. In New Jersey the rains are particularly severe. Sixteen of the thirty-two bridges in the city of Rahway, were carried away, and it is estimated that half a million would not replace the property destroyed in the three counties of Union, Middlesex and Somerset.

A MODEL INSTITUTION.

A BUSINESS HOUSE WORTHY OF NOTICE.

ARRIVAL OF NEW GOODS DAILY.

The Pride of Auburn and Vicinity.

Through an invitation from the genial proprietor of the immense dry goods, clothing and carpet house of Isaac Ochs, a COURIER representative was shown through his establishment, recently. The stock of is all that can possibly be crowded upon the shelves and counters, and the styles have been selected with the greatest care and most careful judgment. The outstrips anything we ever saw for styles, beauty and good quality of goods. Everything is complete in this line, and all kinds and grades of clothing are on exhibition, making the room look more like a county fair than a clothing house. In the way of

HATS AND CAPS

nothing has been left undone, and much care taken to secure good, durable headwear and of the latest styles. Their display of

BOOTS AND SHOES

is equal to any first-class establishment in this trade. The prices are astonishingly low, taking into consideration the beautiful styles and substantial goods. The is thoroughly loaded with silk handkerchiefs, neckties, shirts, collars, underwear, etc. These goods are extremely low, and all are invited to give them a fair inspection.

GENTS' FURNISHING GOODS DEPARTMENT

Mr. Ochs is certainly a model business man, and during his short stay here he has been a great benefit to our local trade. No farmer is turned away from this establishment with anything he wishes to sell, and it has been said that this firm has bought articles of the farmer that they could not dispose of at the price paid for, but it was an inducement for the plowman to call again, and in this shrewd business manner, Mr. Ochs has worked up one of the largest country trades of any merchant in Northern Indiana. Success stay with him, is the loudest wail of the COURIER.

SOME of our older readers will remember the celebrated "Diamond Wedding," 23 years ago, when Miss Francis Amelia Bartlet, a wealthy heiress in New York was married to an equally wealthy Cuban, Don Esteban de Oviedo. The wedding was so extremely brilliant, that the poet, E. C. Stedman celebrated it in the well known, half humorous poem. "The Diamond Wedding." The marriage seems to have been rather a happy one. Don Esteban however, died a few years ago, and the widow was lately married to a wealthy Mexican, Baron Glumer. They have been spending a part of the summer at Saratoga, and seem as happy as poor folks.

A RECENT number of the Fort Wayne News records the following funny incident: "A few days ago Hon. James G. Blaine and Captain Powars, of the Wabash, were fellow passengers on one of the Wabash express trains. Arriving at their journey's end, Capt. Powars was the first to disembark. A reception committee that had been waiting for the presidential aspirant mistook the Wabash man for the man from Maine and had started him up town behind a brass band, when the matter was explained, to the Captain's disgust, and before he had promised the postmastership to less than half of his new found friends."

THE New York state convention held at Syracuse last week, nominated Hon. Gover Cleveland, the present mayor of Buffalo, as its candidate for governor, and for lieutenant governor, David B. Hill, mayor of the city of Elmira. The democratic factions in the city of New York, including Tammany, Irving Hall, and the "County Democracy," were all admitted to the convention, each casting a part of the city's vote. They are all satisfied, and will all give the ticket a hearty support. This gives the democrats a good chance to redeem the state this fall.

THE Mishawaka Enterprise in speaking of the man Aldrich who died recently at that place, and who had his coffin and vault all ready for the important occasion, says: "Within the vault Aldrich is to have four large pictures hung. The pictures are lithographs of Indian and frontiersmen fights, and were special favorites of his. At first he proposed having a willow rocking chair placed on the inside, but finally abandoned that idea, as well as wearing a hat and having several articles of personal property, etc., buried with him.

THERE was a fatal railroad accident in New York City last week. Two trains collided in a tunnel of the Hudson River road. In this narrow place, both trains were badly crushed and nineteen passengers killed. Of course, many more were wounded.

A German servant girl in the employ of C. P. Egnew is seriously sick.

Butler enjoyed a business boom last Saturday.

Prof. W. A. Ogden, of Chicago, held a free concert in the M. E. church Tuesday night.

WONDER if Mr. Glasgow will explain to the Auburn people to-night, how the foreign manufacturer manages to pay the tariff on the other side of the water. He tried that at Garrett. It will now be in order to send for Baldwin.

THE Garrett Herald says: "B. D. Thomas has been appointed as a candidate for county commissioner to fill the vacancy on the democratic ticket caused by the death of Mr. Sheets. A good choice."

EX-STATE Senator, J. H. Winterbotham, of Michigan City, has been nominated for congress from his district, the 13th. He will give Mr. Calkins a close race.

—While at the Waterloo Fair, don't fail to see the splendid display of pianos and organs by F. B. Straw, in the Mechanics Hall.

Catarrh. For fifteen years I have been greatly annoyed with this disgusting disease, which caused severe pain in my head, continual dropping into my throat and unpleasant breath. My sense of smell was much impaired. By a thorough use of six months of Elys' Cream Balm I have entirely overcome these troubles. J. B. Case, St. Denis Hotel, Broadway and 11th street New York. 39-2w.

GOVERNOR Hendricks speaks in Fort Wayne, to-morrow, Sept. 29. Don't forget it.

MR. POWELL, the editor of the Garrett Herald, took a trip to Baltimore during the Oriole.

FORT Wayne has a steamer on the St. Joe river, and pleasure parties go on excursions right at home.

SECRETARY Folger, of the treasury was last Thursday nominated by the republicans for govenor of New York.

THE last week's Huntington Democrat was a boomer. The Huntington people evidently appreciate a good county paper.

THE Butler Review has unearthed a 'kicker' who threatens to bolt the ticket, and gives him a sound raking. Happily, "We have no occasion" here in Auburn.

THE portion of Decatur, Adams county, that was recently burned, will soon be rebuilt with a better class of business rooms. Some will be put up at once, and others will wait till spring as materials are scarce.

A million of pounds of buffalo meat were shipped from the plains last year, and the railways have carried 10,000,000 pounds of buffalo bones and 6,000,000 hides to eastern markets. And thus the buffalo are being annihilated and making room for the hundreds and thousands of tame cattle that are rapidly taking their places all over the great western and northern plains.

The democracy of Michigan comes down on the River and Harbor steal in a plank of their platform like this: "That the right of congress to make appropriations for the improvements of rivers and harbors should be restricted to such as are of national importance; that the people of Michigan cannot be bribed by a share of the theft to sanction the waste of $90,000,000 in two years; and we denounce, without distinction of party; all who voted in congress for the iniquitous River and Harbor bill."

Waterloo Fair.

People every where are getting ready to attend this popular fair, for it brings within the borders of our county, a show nearly as good as can be seen at a state fair, and a crowd nearly as large. Every profession and every kind of business will be represented as usual, and all who compete know from the past record of the society that they will received fair and courteous treatment of the hands of the managers. Entries can be made in advance, and all who have made up their minds to exhibit would do well to have their entries made at once. 2t.

—Remember that all railroads running into Waterloo, run at reduced rates during the fair, and goods exhibited at the fair are returned free of charge.

—The lawyers are pleased with the new judge, P. V. Hoffman. They say he is making things hum. That's what we need. The more it hums the better.

—John Robbins was in town last week, looking as jolly as ever. He says Judge Lowry, will have the largest vote, any candidate ever received in Allen county.

—As soon as our court gets through with Geo. Hazzard the people of Angola will have a little performance with him. The once slippery George is certainly lassoed.

—James Culbertson will also try the cement sidewalk. He has put one down in front of his new residence. He will move into the new house the last of this week.

—Miss Lora Walter, sister-in-law to W. L. Penfield, has gone to Angola, to assist in the Herald office. She is a good type setter, and Bro. Sheffer will find her a valuable assistant.

—Sherman Hollister again placed the boys of this office under obligations last week. It was a muskmelon this time, and a nice one, too. He keeps a choice lot on hand at present.

—Alvan Ash, of Waterloo, was in town Tuesday. He has chosen ministry as a profession and will preach the coming year in Wilmington and Concord townships, we understand.

—Mrs. Maxfield denies the entire matter published in last week's Courier. She assures us there was no stranger found in their house, and not a word of truth in the entire article.

—Mr. Rummel is in town nearly every day with a load of the various products of the poorfarm. He is proving a very efficient superintendent and is doing all he can to make the farm pay.

—Sherman Hollister took in a lot of the nicest peaches one day last week that has been put on the market here this year. But he had to pay well for them. They were raised near Pleasant Lake.

—Brocade satins for dolmans at McQuiston & Long's.

—The Normal school here closes this week, after a most successful term. The total attendance has been something over sixty, and teachers and pupils both express themselves well satisfied.

—Miss Jennie Cowan has again been chosen to instruct the pupils who attend the Junction school. It is very complimentary for a young teacher to retain the same school several successive terms.

—The "Joie De Vie" dance club has a hop at Ensley's hall to-night. One hundred and twenty-five invitations were sent out, and a good crowd is expected. Edgerly's orchestra has been engaged for the season.

—Another burglary is reported to have occurred at Spencerville Monday night. The safe in Bishop's store was broken open and what money it contained taken out. We understand the thieves got about four hundred dollars.

My daughter and myself, great sufferers from Catarrh, have been cured by Elys' Cream Balm. My sense of smell restored and health greatly improved. C. M. Stanley, dealer in boots in boots and shoes, Ithaca, N. Y. 39-2w.

—A vote for clerk among five gentlemen resulted in four for Husselman and one for Hartman. This comes near being a whitewash, but we will do justice to Mr. H. by saying, that there were three democrats among the balloters.

—Another set of the confidence men landed at the Junction this week and attempted to "work" the town. It is not known how well they succeeded. The Junction seems to be unfortunate in being so frequently cursed with these gentry.

—The demcrats of this county have got through lending a vote to elect republican office seekers. From the talk of the boys we are safe in remarking that this campaign will be one of the worst innings the republican party ever played in.

—Isaac Ochs sends out a big supplement this week and gives the people a talk through the county papers. He has rolled up his sleeves, and will spare no pains to sell off his monster stock of goods at bargains. Don't fail to read his extra this week.

—We intended to give Miss Sallie Baker a puff her on marriage last week, but somehow overlooked the opportunity. The Courier congratulates her, however, and wishes her a happy future —after waiting so long to find the "fellah" of her choice.

—J. J. Latson has our thanks for a nice lot of vegetables. Among them are two mammoth potatoes of new varities, the names of which we have forgotten. He is raising them to sell for seed. These specimens can be seen at the Courier office at any time.

—Ed. Freeman, of Jackson township, a notice of whose golden wedding appeared in last week's Courier, was in town last week, and called to see us. He bears his age well, and one would not suppose he had been married fifty years. He is nearly as lively as ever.

—The workmen have stopped labor on the Wabash watering tank, in rear of the cemetery. It is now supposed to furnish enough water for the engines at this place. A great amount of money and labor has been expended to secure this convenience for railroad men.

—Now let each man appoint himself a committee of one and work like a steam thresher for the victory of the democratic party. By an individual effort upon the part of every democratic voter we will elect the ticket by the largest majority ever known in the history of the county.

—Mart Sheets is home from his western trip. He has traveled extensively in Montana and Dakota, and is greatly pleased with the country. He came home in time to attend his father's funeral, having been telegraphed for when it became apparent that Mr. Sheets would not live.

—We call attention to the administrator's sale, in the Sheets estate, advertised in this paper. Those who wish fine stock should attend this sale. The stock offered including one fine full blooded Short Horn bull, and several pedigreed Merino sheep of the best quality, all of them under five years of age.

—E. J. McOscar, of Summit, goes this week to Philadelphia, where he will spend at least two years in the study of medicine. He will attend the Jefferson Medical College. Mr McOscar is an enterprising young man, and is bound to make life a success. We wish him a safe journey and abundant success.

—The Presbyterian social at Frank Baird's farm residence, east of town, was one of the most pleasant of the season. Everybody knows the host and hostess, and the latter made themselves, as they always do, agreeable to all. Free hacks took the guests out and back. The receipts were good, considering the distance from town.

Mental depression and all nervous diseases of whatever nature or cause, in old or young, male or female, cured by Dr. E. C. West's Nerve and Brain Treatment. Sold at F. E. Davenport's.

—For collars and collarettes go to McQuiston & Long's.

The New Wagon Shops.

We took a look over the new buildings that Snyder & Bro. are now erecting near the hub and spoke factory, and are surprised at the extent of the new enterprise. The new building is south of the factory and but a few feet from it. It extends south 180 feet, and at the south end an "L," or wing, runs to the west, and is 58 feet long. Both parts are of the same width—60 feet. The main part will be two stories high and the wing one story, the latter being intended for the blacksmithing part of the establishment. The main part will be for the general factory. A line shaft will extend from the engine in the factory along the entire length of the new part in the main building. We presume the lower floor will be occupied for the heavier work and the second floor for such work as can be more conveniently done there. The second floor in the hub and spoke factory will then be used for the bent work part of the business, and the lower floor in the old factory will be used as at present. Snyder & Bro. expect to have the new factory running by New Years, and will employ, at first, about seventy-five hands. Having their own machinery for the purpose, they do their own sawing, make their own hubs, spokes and bent work, and are consequently able to select for their customers the very best of stock. This will, from the first, place their business on the best possible basis. Quite a large amount of work is already sold, even before their building is up. So they will know to a certainty what they may expect in the way of patronage from the very start. It is to be hoped that our citizens, and the people in the country around us, will also appreciate the enterprise that has induced this firm to undertake a work so valuable to both town and country, and give them not only a liberal patronage, but do what is possible in the way of furnishing material at rates at which it can be manufactured. Industries of this kind are just what Auburn needs. There is capital enough here, enterprise enough and almost unlimited advantage in the numerous railroads centering here, and all we need is the disposition to take hold of it, and push the business in an intelligent manner. This is what they seem to be doing at the new establishment.

—Next week the fair comes off and the young man who has been economical in his everyday pursuits of life and saved up an X can have more fun than a family of monkeys in a millinery shop. With this amount of wealth he can entertain his girl one day very admirably, investing carefully in butter-scotch, red lemonade, candy kisses and having them both taken "a dozen times 'round the world" for a nickel in a box swing. He can save from spending his boodle too rapidly by, between treats, gazing upon the prize chickens, big pumpkins and the fast horses, and anyone with half an eye to business can make it pleasant for all girls in giving a complete discription of how those fowls, pumpkins and fast horses are reared to gain so much notoriety on the fair grounds.

—The Spencerville correspondent to the Republican writes, "that Charles Beugnot will be elected." That scribler must be a weak politician. Beugnot will probable come a little nearer than the other candidates, but the bulletin-board will show Lafe Miller three hundred votes ahead of him. The democratic party is in the best shape now that it has been for some time and nothing is wanted except a little life and vim upon the part of candidates, to elect every man on the ticket. The republican party has used up its best material and it will be some years before they dust the counter of a court house office.

—The school-house is progressing finely. The plastering is about done in the lower rooms, and when finished, the plasterers will move into the second story, and Messrs. Shearer and Wilson, the contractors, will go to work at once on the wood work. They are getting everything ready to make quick work of it. With this reliable firm to do the carpenter work, and Rainier & Co. as plasterers, there is no reason why our new building should not be a first-class job. It will be ready for occupation about the middle of October.

—Court week makes business lively for candidates. A voter coming into town now-a-days is as enthusiastically received as when he encounters a crowd of hackmen and express drivers as he gets out of the train at one of the great depots in Chicago. He finds himself right among friends. All ceremony is laid aside, and the honest voter and equally honest "votee" meet on equal terms and become sworn brothers. Here the curtain falls, and we hope these halcyon days will last, even after the ides of November.

—James Griswold met with a severe and dangerous accident last week. He was helping H. C. Shull load some corn, near the Junction, and was standing on the load, when the team started, and he was thrown violently to the ground. His face badly cut and bruised, and he was otherwise injured but it is hoped not seriously.

Married.—At the residence of the bride's parents, two miles north of Waterloo, by Rev. W. H. Daniels, on Sept. 21, 1882, Mr. Norman T. Jackman to Miss Laura A. Kennedy.

—Peter Young, the tailor, is having a fine trade at his new location. He is kept busy getting up suits out of his new goods. See his advertisement in this paper and you can judge for yourselves.

—Henry Yesbera is turning out some of the nicest suits for gentlemen ever seen in this part of the country. His goods are well selected, both as to appearance and durability, and his fits are perfect. Look at his work and get his prices. No trouble to show goods.

—Shearer & Wilson complain of persons who visit the new school building and carry away small pieces of boards, lath and such small things. Persons who do this are requested to stop it or else be ready to explain in what way it differs from stealing, except in the size of the board.

—In justice to Johnny Picker's wife we will state that she returned all the articles taken from the house when she left. Lou was a good girl and we may only look forward to a few months when she will greatly regret being influenced to leave husband and home by the wicked tongue of those who will eventually "shake" her, leaving a life of sorrow and hardships to block her path as time goes slowly by.

—By a recent letter from Miss Aggie Baxter, of Smithfield, we learn that she is at Indianapolis taking lessons in elocution and is greatly interested in her work. She has also had the privilege of attending the religious meetings of Rev. Geo. O. Barnes, the "Mountain Evangelist," and is highly pleased with his preaching. We understand she will return in time for the county institute, and teach in the county this winter.

—Business is brightening up everywhere, and especially do our merchants catch the inspiration of better times. They are buying extra large stocks, and are advertising them in a way that shows they are determined to do their full share of the fall business. Look over their advertisements in the Courier and you will learn what they are doing and what bargains they are offering. They mean business.

—There is a great demand for help to go into the country and cut up corn. Good wages are offered. Strange as it may seem, however, we have a few young men who seem to believe they they can carve a fortune out of a dry goods box with more certainty than cutting corn at a dollar and a quarter a day and board. Human nature displays some strange freaks at the age of sixteen to twenty—and sometimes at a more advanced age.

Mr. L. M. Russell, painter on the Pan Handle Railroad was cured of indigestion by Brown's Iron Bitters.

WATERLOO.

Entries for the fair are coming in daily. People are going to avoid the rush by coming in this week and getting their entry cards.

Horses are practicing on the track and we expect some fine trotting next week.

President Chamberlain, and the other officers of the fair, are working like "nailers" to have things in shape, so there shall be no hitch in the running of the fair.

Norman Jackman, of Franklin township, was married to Laura Kennedy last week. Laura will be remembered by the Courier Editor as one of our successful teachers. She will be missed in the school work this winter.

The clerks at Lowenstein & Rothschild's are kept busy tying up goods. And still they come.

Our people are busy getting things ready for the fair, or getting ready to take boarders, or work on the fair grounds. Anything in short, to keep things booming.

F. K. Blake has gone to Ft. Wayne, to study law. He will be in the law office of Judge Morris.

W. H. Shultz has gone to Elkhart county, where he intends to teach this winter.

S. B. Mottinger, of Summit, has gone to Grand Traverse, Mich., where he expects to work at the carpenter trade.

Oris Danks has bought out the stock of boots and shoes of O. T. Clark, and moved his own stock into the same room.

Rose Blair spent a few days at Angola, last week, her health having become sufficiently improved to allow her to leave home.

Wesley Jackman who was home a few days last week, reports his family well, in their new home at Danville. He intends to remain there while his children are attending the school. They speak highly of the normal school at that place.

F. B. Straw will have a splendid lot of pianos and organs on exhibition at the fair. Go and see them in Mechanics Hall.

Money for a Rainy Day.

"For six years my daughter was sick from kidney and other disorders. We have used our savings on doctors, when our dominie advised us try Parker's Ginger Tonic. Four bottles effected a cure, and as a dollar's worth has kept our family well over a year, we have been able to lay by money again for a rainy day."—A Poor Man's Wife. 4w.

—The following parties have purchased organs of F. B. Straw within a few weeks: Samuel Widney, Concord; Susanna Osborn, Jackson township; John Winslow, Auburn; J. E. Hanes, Smithfield; Solomon Burget, Concord; Mr. Osborn, Garrett, and Isaac Cobbler, Auburn.

THE New York Legislature will be asked at its next meeting to submit the question of prohibition to the voters of the State.

IT is strongly asserted that the Star Routers will be put on trial again before Judge Wylie, at the October term of his court.

THE Michigan University has another scandal on hand, involving the professional and personal honor of one of the professors.

A SHOE FACTORY at Hudson, N. Y., was destroyed, the other day, by a fire caused by burglars while robbing the safe. Loss, $65,000.

IT is said that a cavaly soldier of the garrison at Walla Walla, has invented a breech-loading carbine for which the Government has paid him $60,000.

A COMPANY has been organized in Chicago, with a capital of $6,000,000, for the purpose of shipping beef by refrigerator cars from Texas to New York.

AT a prohibition meeting in Kansas City, the other night, a mob of saloonatics drove the speaker from the platform, put out the light and dispersed the audience.

THE Utah Commission reports that 18,000 of the disqualified will not attempt to register. Leading Mormons desire the Commission to declare female suffrage illegal.

THE Interior Department at Washington will hereafter furnish the Indian police on the Western plains only with revolvers. No more of the nation's red wards will get breech-loading rifles.

THE net revenues of the Western Union Telegraph Company for the quarter ending September 30, partially estimated, are $2,250,000. The surplus, after deducting the dividend declared yesterday, is $2,587,620.

THE able-bodied Massachusetts parent who neglects to provide for his minor child is liable to fine or imprisonment for six months. The Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children is looking after the enforcement of the law.

A BOY aged 11 years, in prison at Chicago for shooting a girl only 8 years old, pleads that he was drunk at the time of the shooting, and that the pistol was loaded by other boys without his knowledge. What kind of a generation of men will such boys as these make?

MANSON MCMULLAN, Jos. Shehan and Jere Shehan are on trial in Chicago for stealing $500,000 worth of hogs from Phil. Armour's stock pens, since 1879. A man named Hardy, also a defendant, testified to driving off forty or fifty hogs every night and Sunday with Shehan.

The Crescent Mills and elevator burned at Denver, Col. The estimated loss is $225,000; fully insured. They were the largest in the State and full of grain. It is thought the fire originated from a spark from the lime-kiln across the street, which burned earlier in the morning.

A MASSACHUSETTS law makes the owner of a house liable for treble any loss that may be sustained by gambling therein with his consent. A saloon-keeper at Lowell has just been compelled to pay $1,800, the money going to a man who had only lost $600 in playing poker on the premises.

A FIRM in Cincinnati have just published a pamphlet from "The War of 1886 Between the United States and Great Britain." It is after the plan of the "Battle of Dorking," printed in England some years ago, and is understood to be from the pen of a distinguished Cincinnati journalist.

WASHINGTON must be a good place for mechanics. A contract has been made by the Government to pay $5,000 for the brick walls of an elevator to be put into the Department of Justice. The structure will be between ten and twelve feet square, and probably sixty feet high. Also, to pay $8,000 for putting a 12 by 16 inch tube into the Senate elevator—height 60 to 76 feet.

THE police of Chicago have captured a girl of fourteen who, within the past year, has stolen over $1,000 worth of goods from private residences. Sunday evening she took jewelry valued at $436 from a house on North Clark street, and secreted it at home. Her mother has spent seven years in the penitentiary and two in the county jail.

THE other day the Pope received from London a gift of 100,000 francs, the sender of which implored the Apostolic benediction. Several offerings of large sums have lately been made in this way from England and from America, and they have gone far to supplement the reduction in the amount of Peter's pence, which in other parts of the world have fallen off.

REV. W. H. SCOTT, President of the University of Ohio, is being tried by a Methodist tribunal at Athens, for denying the trinity, vicarious atonement, the divinity of Christ, total depravity, and the resurrection of the body. As to the latter charge, an attempt will be made to justify by similar views by Bishop Foster. President W. Q. Scott, of the Ohio University, was obliged to leave the University at Wooster on much the same grounds.

A UNITED States registered bond of the denomination of $5,000 was stolen from the office of the Register of the United States Treasury at Washington the other day. The secret service force has thus far failed to recover the bond or discover the thief. The robbery has been kept quiet in the hope that a clue would be found. The bond was one which was exchanged from a 3½ to 3 per cent., and is complete. Leading banks of the country have been notified of the theft.

THE Philadelphia Star calls attention to an important fact and factor of our crop production by saying that, without the tens of thousands of reapers and binders in use, it would not have been possible for the farmers of the country to have gathered one-half their harvest, and even with this giant power there has been a constant, and, in many cases, unanswered demand for laboring men. What would have been the result without labor-saving machinery?

A WASHINGTON special says: The severe and disastrous cyclone that visited the south and the Atlantic ports early this week, was foretold by the signal service several days in advance of its reaching any of the ports in this country. It is one of the most brilliant achievements of the service, and undoubtedly thousands of dollars' worth of property and many lives were saved by the warnings given. The history of the storm and of its advance, and of the action of the officer on duty at the signal office, is interesting.

A WASHINGTON special says: "Captain Mayne Reid, the novelist, who now has his home in Frogmore, England, had his claim for pension allowed, and the United States will hereafter pay to him fifteen dollars a month while he lives. He was a second lieutenant in the First New York volunteers, and went through the stirring scenes of the Mexican war, getting bullets at Chapultepec, and other impressions for future utilization in story books. His claim was filed about two years ago. He sets forth in his affidavits that he is quite poor, living on a small hired farm, and that the $15 a month will help out his meager income and make him comfortable. He is sixty-three years of age.

AN opinion of timely interest was recently rendered by Judge Lowell, of the United States Court in Massachusetts, with reference to silver quarters and half dollars with holes filled with other metals. Judge Lowell, holds that such coins are in effect counterfeit, and that whoever so mutilates them or knowingly passes them is guilty of counterfeiting. The reasoning by which he reaches this conclusion is that coins of these denominations are required to be of a certain weight and fineness and are not a legal tender if they fall below the fixed standard. "If such a coin," he says, "has had an appreciable amount of silver removed from it, we cannot say that it remains a good coin for its original value or even for proportione' value. If, then, the hole is pl[illegible] with base metal or with [illegible] stance other than silv[illegible] this [illegible] is, an act of counterfeiting, because it [illegible] making something appear to be good coin for its apparent value wh[illegible] was not so before.

Mrs. Davis, who eloped with her husband from Huntsville, Ala., some time ago, and who left him when she discovered he was a gambler, an opium eater, and a brute, shot him fatally Tuesday night at Chattanooga, Tenn., when he threatened to murder her if she would not return to him.

The steamer Asia, which left Collingwood, Ont., Wednesday evening last for French River and Sault Ste. Marie, was struck by a storm Thursday morning and wrecked, but two persons, out of a passenger list of more than one hundred, being saved.

Wm C. Griffith, a farmer living in Wheeler county, Neb., was found dead recently under the ruins of his sod house, which had caved in and killed him while asleep. Near him lay the bodies of his two sons, Lester and Will, who were also killed in the same manner. Griffith was last seen alive on Thursday, and it is more than probable that the accident occurred during the storm of Thursday night.

The new comet was watched by the Naval Observatory at Washington, and is supposed to have passed its perihelion. In a few days it will be very brilliant in the early morning. It is one of the extraordinary heavenly wonders of modern times. Dr. Lewis Swift, of the Warner Observatory, says it is not identical with any known comet.

William Wiley, 19 years old, son of Bishop Wiley, of the M. E. Church, and John Stratham, porter in the establishment of C. E. Coffin & Co., of Cincinnati, whose establishmen was partially destroyed by fire Thursday, were down in the cellar tightening the hoops of oil barrels, when an explosion occurred, and young Wiley was burned to death by the blazing fluid. A man at Marietta, on the Ohio river had an out line set in the river, on one of the links of which he found a bass. When he took the bass off the hook an eel was found attached to the hook which the bass had swallowed. After removing the eel he found a small bass in the eel's mouth, and in the small bass' mouth was the bait that had been on the hook. Such luck as this could come only to an Ohio man.

Engineer Melville has caused a great sensation at Philadelphia by deserting his wife and children upon the moment of his arrival. The wife's story of his gruff greeting and brutal departure is a pathetic one. Lieutenant Danenhower's attention having been called to notices in the press containing inuendoes of charges by him against Engineer Melville, he has issued a card stating he has made no accusations against any one, and that his relations with the Engineer have always been of friendly character.

According to a Chilian correspondent, native guerrillas burned and pillaged the city of Tarma and other places, committed frightful atrocities, and, among others, murdered a number of foreigners. The Chillian garrison at Concepcion was surrounded by a horde of Indians, who fired the building and butchered most of its occupants, including women and children of tender years. The town was afterward burned by Chilian soldiers in revenge, and a number of persons executed.

At the Christian church at Greensburg Sunday morning, John Wallingford, a son of the outgoing treasurer, read the report of his father, and then proceeded to read a series of charges against Elder Peale, the pastor. "Praise God, from whom all blessings flow," by the organ and choir, drowned him out. The Wallingfords hold a mortgage on the church property and will doubtless be heard elsewhere.

Lieut. Winship's Famous Duel.

Lieutenant Richard Winship was years ago well known in the United States Navy, and his famous duel with a Frenchman at Marseilles is a favorite reminisence of the service. Dick was then Second Lieutenant of the Scorpion stationed there at the time, and as usual kept the whole fleet and half the town on nettles through his endless practical jokes. The slang expression for Frenchmen in those days was "frog-eaters," and the wife of a French captain of militia having presented her lord with twins, Dick had the nerve to tender the happy father, at a public banquet, a stuffed frog holding on his knee a couple of smaller ones. Of course there was a challenge, and when the Captain's second appeared, Winship, as the challenged party, gravely insisted on the duel being fought in the dark, with pistols, one shot only being allowed to each man.

FROM THE WIRES.

London, September 16.—The Times in a leading article says: "If the lives of Arabi Pasha and his immediate followers are spared, these men must be put at once and for all out of the way of doing further harm. They cannot be permitted to retire to Constantinople to become the center of impalpable intrigues. To restore the authority of the Khedive, the army must be disbanded, and replaced by gen d'armies sufficient to maintain civil order. If the troops are needed to defend distant frontiers, it is sufficient to maintain them on the frontier and not keep them at Cairo.

Alexandria, September 16.—The Khedive has learned that the commander at Damietta refuses to surrender. He has 5,000 black troops.

Hassan Pasha Cherei, Arabi's minister of pious foundations, and Kiamil Pasha have been arrested in Alexandria. Mahmond Pasha Baroudi has been arrested near Cairo.

London, September 16.—Gladstone has asked the Archbishop of York to direct thanksgiving services to be held in the churches to-morrow, for England's success in Egypt.

Alexandria, September 16.—Kurshed Pasha, commanding at Aboukir, has sent in a message announcing his readiness to surrender.

Alexander, September 16.—Several prisoners brought in have been identified as participators in massacres. All Egyptian soldiers who were at Maliaha left that post and quit the army. Gen. Wood occupied Kafr-el-Dwar and Mallaha this afternoon. The naval brigade is re-embarked.

Alexander, September 10.—Abdelial Pasha, the commander at Damietta, has requested that an officer be sent to inform him of recent events. This is considered as foreshadowing the surrender of Damietta.

Cairo, September 19.—Abdelial has surrendered.

A large body of Egyptian infantry, with four batteries, supposed to be from Salihiyeh, appeared at Tantah to-day and surrendered to a battalion of Highlanders.

Alexandria, September 19.—From 10 o'clock Monday morning until late in the afternoon bodies of infantry, cavalry and artillery continued to pour in from Aboukir and surrender their arms. Many more are to come.

The ironcla is Minotaur, Sultan, Inconstant and Achilles, and the gunboats Falcon and Condor sailed eastward this morning, and are now anchored off Aboukir. The forts there will be occupied by sailors and marines.

London, September 19.—The Mark Lane Express, in a review of the grain trade the past week, says: "In Scotland, Ireland and northern counties of England harvesting is progressing satisfactorily, while in the earlier districts the harvest is virtually over. Barley is generally discolored. Trade has yielded to the pressure of abundant foreign supply. Red wheats are relatively lower than white. In foreign wheat sales are difficult beyond the merest retail transactions, the buyers awaiting rates which are not yet obtainable. In some cases on Friday 6d less was accepted for new wheat. The receipts of the week in London were 88,267 quarters. There were large arrivals of foreign flour, which sold generally at 6d lower. Maize was lower and weaker, and grinding barleys lower. The prices for oats was fairly maintained. Cargoes were inanimate. The only feature in American grain was an advance of 9d in red winter wheat. There were twenty-five arrivals. Fine cargoes were sold, ten withdrawn, and seventeen remain—sixteen being American. Sales of English wheat the past week, 49,242 quarters at 44s 5d, against 48,795 quarters at 51s 1d, the corresponding week last year.

Cairo, September 20—Abdellal Pasha, Commander of Damietta, has been shot by his own soldiers.

Abdellal summoned his black regiment, and said he expected them to fight to the last. He declared that Arabi had turned traitor and fled, but Kafr-el-Dwar was making a heroic resistance. The soldiers asked why they should risk their lives for Arabi and Abdellal. The later replied that they were not fighting for him, but for their religion, their country and their Caliph. They should be ready, he said, to die, as he was. The soldiers replied: "Then die," and shot him through the stomach.

WASHINGTON.

The Evening Post's Washington special says: "The District Attorney, acting upon the information of Foreman Dickson, will issue warrants for the arrest of Brewster, Cameron and Henry A. Bowen to answer the charge of attempting to bribe a juror. Mr. Merrick is busily engaged in getting his information into shape to prevent the District Attorney from acting, so we are evidently on the brink of a very unpleasant scandal, involving charge and counter charges of bribery and perjury.

A synopsis of Dickson's sworn statement in regard to the attempts at bribery which he has filed with the District Attorney is published this morning. It contains only one point in addition to what he set forth in yesterday's statement. Dickson says that Bowen in the course of the conversation, in which he urged the former to secure the conviction of Brady and Dorsey, asserted that after conviction the President would pardon the defendants, possibly within thirty days. To Dickson's inquiry on the point, Bowen answered that Bliss, Merrick and Kerr were entirely ignorant of this movement on the part of Attorney General Brewster.

In the Criminal Court, to-day, Mr. Henkle, counsel for Miner, in the Star Route trial, filed various affidavits upon which he based a motion for a new trial.

Mr. Merrick said: I find some motions on file for a new trial in the case of convicted defendants, accompanied by statements giving a variety reasons, and by some affidavits. Among the reasons is one, namely: that the verdict is itself unreasonable. As counsel for the government of the United States I am not disposed to put on file a consent to the granting of this motion, but as counsel for the United States, I feel it my duty not to oppose it. The government of the United States itself is not entirely satisfied, by any means, with the verdict. It is a verdict which subjects the masters to a retrial and convicts the servants and minions. The jury, presumably, found evidence of a conspiracy to defraud the United States and of an overt act, so as to create a completed crime under the statutes of the United States That having been found by the jury, prior to their determination of the conviction of guilty against Rerdell and Miner, there was left for them the sole inquiry as to who was in the conspiracy. It was apparent to all men that deeply guilty in point of morals and laws as Rerdell and Miner are, the crime they perpetrated was the scheme and device of the others. Now, sir, the Government of the United States cannot consistently with its dignity object by practical resistance to the motion made to set aside such a verdict, and bring to trial again both masters and servants, in order that full justice may be done. The Government of the United States seeks no victim. It seeks simply justice, and when a verdict apparently trifles with justice it cannot meet the approval of the Government of the United States.

Mr. Henkle then read the grounds upon which he based the motion for a new trial, and then read Forman Dickson's sworn statement, which has already been published.

The court stated that he had directed the jury not to converse on the subject of the alleged bribery. Whether or not the jury had trangressed the rule laid down by the court did not appear from Dickson's affidavit.

Henkle proceeded to argue that the verdict should not be set aside on the ground that the jury had been tampered with, and in conclusion said: "The court room was dotted all over with spotters, whose business it was to shadow jurors, counsel and witnesses, and some of the vilest men of this community were right here all through this trial, doing that very thing in the service of the government."

Mr. Merrick—In the service of the Government?

Mr. Henkle—Yes sir.

Mr. Merrick—Is there any affidavit of this sort on file?

Mr. Henkle—I have not any proof of this now, but I will furnish it when I get to investigate the matter.

Mr. Merrick—When we come to investigate the matter, we will reach the conclusion that this approach of Dickson was a "got up" thing on the defendants' side.

The court then said: "As to the misconduct of the jury, both side concede that discussion as the bribery matter took place in the room. In the circumstances of the case, considering the rather incoherent character of this verdict, I think it would be safe for the court to assume what is conceded by counsel on both sides to have taken place in the jury room, and I will award a new trial."

Tobriner, one of the jurors, happening to be in the court-room, was called to the witness stand, and testified to the reading of the statement by Dickson, after the retirment of the jury. He said the jury voted in the affirmative upon the question as to whether the paper should be read.

The court said: "What I wanted to know was whether the jury had violated the directions of the court. That verdict of guilty, then, as to Rerdell and Miner is set aside, not only on account of the misconduct of the jury, but I may say on account of general unreasonableness."

These two men seemed to be at the two ends of the line. It does not seem to my mind that they could have gone into a conspiracy without having had any of the others along with them, but the jury thought they could, and I would not have disturbed the verdict on that ground; but when I see that the verdict was made up by a jury that were discussing other matters that were in evidence, of course, my duty is plain to set the verdict aside. As to the acquittal of Peck who is dead, I hope he is acquitted everywhere. We were not trying him. As to Turner, of course, the verdict stands. The court grants a new trial, then, as to all except Turner and Peck.

Miner and Rerdell were then released on $10,000 bail, each, Vaile and Williamson becoming surety for the former, and A. C. Richards for the latter.

December 4 was fixed as the date for the new trial, and the court adjourned

A special cable from Berlin says: "The Baden and Alsatian papers contain detailed accounts of the frightful railway accident at Hugstetten, from which the following details are extracted: An extra train which left Munster in Alsace on Sunday morning was conveying many excursionists from that town and others, there being 600 from Colmar alone. In all there were from 1200 to 1,500 passengers on the train. The train was to return from Frieburg to Munster and Colmar at 10 minutes past 8 p. m., Baden time, but lost about five minutes, which the Baden driver wished to recover. Instead, therefore, of going at the speed allowed for the return journey, about fifty kilometers an hour, the train went from Freiburg to Augstetten at almost double that rate, which was more dangerous, as the twenty-six carriages full of people were served by only five brakemen, and as immediately after passing Freiburg the railway has considerable grade downwards.

In the center of the wreck is a horrible spectable of fearfully mangled corpses, which it has not yet been possible to remove from under the ruins. Some are headless, many without legs or arms, and a larger portion so fearfully mutilated as to be beyond recognition. The impression made by the whole is horrible. A large number of the victims belong to families of officials, especially, it is said, of customs officials. Single officials had bought from fifty to sixty tickets for their friends. A large number of high officials are also among the sufferers and mourners. A violent thunder-storm was raging during and after the accident, and rain fell in torrents. Flashes of lightning momentarily lighted up the ghastly scene, made more dreadful by the moanings of the wounded, and the crying of children for their parents and parents for their children. The number of the dead is seventy-one, and of the wounded three times as many.

The Use of Ammonia in Baking Powders

[From the Scientific American.]

The recent discoveries in science and chemistry are fast revolutionizing our daily domestic economies. Old methods are giving way to the light of modern investigation, and the habits and methods of our fathers and mothers are stepping down and out, to be succeeded by the new ideas, with marvellous rapidity. In no department of science, however, have more rapid strides been made than in its relation to the preparation and preservation of human food. Scientists, having discovered how to traverse space, furnish heat, and beat time itself, by the application of natural forces, and to do a hundred other things promotive of the comfort and happiness of human kind, are naturally turning their attention to the development of other agencies and powers that shall add to the years during which man may enjoy the blessings set before him.

Among the recent discoveries in this direction none is more important than the uses to which common ammonia can be properly put as a leavening agent, and which indicate that this familiar salt is hereafter to perform an active part in the preparation of our daily food.

The carbonate of ammonia is an exceedingly volatile substance. Place a small portion of it upon a knife and hold over a flame, and it will almost immediately be entirely developed into gas and pass on into the air. The gas thus formed is a simple composition of nitrogen and hydrogen. No residue is left from the ammonia. This gives it its superiority as a leavening powder over soda and cream of tartar when used alone, and has induced its use as a supplement to these articles. A small quantity of ammonia in the dough is effective in producing bread that will be lighter, sweeter and more wholesome than that risen by any other leavening agent. When it is acted upon by the heat of baking the leavening gas that raises the dough is liberated. In this act it uses itself up, as it were; the ammonia is entirely diffused, leaving no trace or residuum whatever. The light, fluffy, flaky appearance so desirable in biscuits, etc., and so sought after by professional cooks, is said to be imparted to them only by the use of this agent.

The bakers and baking-powder manufacturers producing the finest goods, have been quick to avail themselves of this useful discovery, and the handsomest and best bread and cake are now largely risen by the aid of ammonia, combined, of course, with other leavening material.

Ammonia is one of the best known products of the laboratory. If, as seems to be justly claimed for it, the application of its properties to the purposes of cooking results in giving us lighter and more wholesome bread, biscuit and cake, it will prove a boon to dyspeptic humanity, and will speedily force itself into general use in the new field to which science has assigned it.

Awaiting the Guillotine.

London Telegraph.

So soon as the sentence of death is passed the criminal is placed on double allowance. The ordinary prisoners have rations of meat and of wine only on Sundays and Thursdays; but the convict set apart for the guillotine has roast beef every day, and a "cinquieme" of wine both at breakfast and dinner. He may read, write and smoke as much as he likes. He has two wardens constantly in attendance upon him, and their orders are never to contradict him, and not to abstain from entering into cheerful conversation with him. The assassin Troppmann used to play cards with his jailers. Finally the condemned man has an hour's exercise every day in the "promenoir" attached to the prison infirmary. There are, it is true, a few draw backs to his physical enjoyments. Directly sentence is passed the prisoner is made to don the "camisole de force"—the strait jacket, and that dismal garment—if he be not respited—he never doffs until he makes his toilet for the scaffold. The camisole is a sack-like canvas vest, with the ends of the sleeves tied together to prevent the protrusion of the hands. Cords passing round the thighs and fastening at the shoulders attach closely to his body the arms of the prisoner. At meal time one sleeve of the camisole is loosened to allow the prisoner to eat with a wooden spoon the food that has been cut up for him. Again his hand is set free when he wishes to write. The murderer never knows when his day of doom is to come. Behind his meat, wine, tobacco and other comforts rises the great red spectre of the guillotine. The cords which bind his arms to his sides are as the hand of death, premonitorily clutching; and at any moment the governor of the prison, the almoner of the "greffier," may enter his cell and tell him that his execution is fixed to take place, not a week or a month hence, but that very day and within an hour two.

Smallpox Horror.

Memphis Special.

The smallpox continues to rage in the vicinity of Centennial Island, on the river, thirty miles above here. A man named Jack Green, with his wife and child, were ill for several days without attention, near St. Thomas postoffice, on the Arkansas shore, in the upper part of Crittenden county, Arkansas. The child died and was not buried by the parents, because the latter were too feeble to perform this duty. The woman died on the 6th inst., and the man two days later. None could be induced to bury the bodies. On Wednesday last, five days after Green died, a passer-by ventured into the cabin, and found a three-year-old child nearly starved lying between the festering corpses. This little one was taken out and cared for, and the people of the vicinity gathered about, saturated the premises with coal-oil, cast a flaming fagot into the den, and a few minutes later the half decomposed bodies were cremated, while only a pile of smouldering ashes remained to mark the spot. A miserable sufferer of the same neighborhood was set adrift in a small boat and floated to the city, where he managed to make his way ashore.

This morning, before dawn, an afflicted wretch, festering with pustules, was dumped, with his bedding, by unknown parties, near the roadside at the edge of our city, and wayfarers near sunrise observed him with horror. They also saw a healthy-looking child innocently playing near by on the dusty highway, evidently left there by the same unknown parties. The toddler was promptly cared for by the city authorities, and the sick man was conveyed to the pest-house.

Stabbing his Coat Collar.

[St. Louis Globe-Democrat.]

Some years ago a story came from Paris that a criminal condemned to death had been executed in a novel way and without bloodletting. The culprit was blindfolded and laid upon a marble slab, after being informed that he was to be bled to death. A needle was used with which to prick his arm, and as the point touched him drops of warm water were sprinkled so that they ran down his side, and to the condemned it appeared that he was bleeding to death. In a little while the experiment proved successful, and the man expired, such was the force of imagination. A case somewhat resembling this was brought to the notice of Police officer Jones the other day. As he passed the Vandalia building, he saw a man lying on his back in the entrance. The stranger's hands were crossed upon his breast, and his legs were close together. As Jones afterwards said, "He looked every inch a corpse." The face was bloodless. The eyes were closed as though in death. The handle of a jack-knife protruded from a point between the collar and the jagular vein. The blade was hidden. Jones jumped to the conclusion of suicide. He took hold of the knife and drew it out of its resting place. The blade was unsullied. Being roused, the man said that he had attempted suicide. Instead of wounding himself, he merely stabbed the collar of his coat. Then he felt that he was dying. Visions of father, mother and home passed through his mind, he said, only for a moment, and then he became unconscious. He was perhaps just entering the spirit land when Jones called him back.

A combination of Protoxide of Iron, Peruvian Bark and Phosphorus in a palatable form. The only preparation of iron that will not blacken the teeth, so characteristic of other iron preparations.
GENTLEMEN: I have used DR. HARTER'S IRON TONIC in my practice, and in an experience of twenty-five years in medicine, have never found anything to give the results that DR. HARTER'S IRON TONIC does. In many cases of Nervous Prostration, Female Diseases, Dyspepsia, and an impoverished condition of the blood, this peerless remedy has, in my hands, made some wonderful cures. Cases that have baffled some of our most eminent physicians have yielded to this great and incomparable remedy. I prescribe it in preference to any iron preparation made. In fact, such a compound as DR. HARTER'S IRON TONIC is a necessity in my practice. DR. ROBERT SAMUELS.
ST. LOUIS, MO., NOV. 28th, 1881. 2nd Wash. Avenue.
It gives color to the blood, natural healthful tone to the digestive organs and nervous system, making it applicable to General Debility, Loss of Appetite, Prostration of Vital Powers and Impotence.

Symmes's Theory.—The two most important features of John Cleves Symmes's theory are that all orbicular bodies in the universe partaking of a planetary nature are composed in a greater or less degree of spheres concentric, one within the other, and to some extent open at their poles; and that gravity is due to the pressure of an impalpable element composed of minute concentric spheres, existent throughout all space, elastic, and changing its molecules by any change of matter whatever throughout space. To this substance Captain Symmes attributes gravity, making it a pushing instead of a pulling force, as it is now generally held to be. But this later theory of gravitation he holds out to be essential to his theory of concentric circles, which circles would be formed upon the old theory of gravitation.

Captain Symmes published notes or explanations of his theory, which he called memoirs. Memoir No. 11, says: "With dividers describe a circle on a plane of matter of loose texture, and in the centre add a very small circle; then draw a line through the centre. It is evident (as matter gravitates in proportion to quantity and distance) that either half of the inner circle, being almost equally surrounded by matter, must be very little gravitated centre-wise; so being suspended, only a rotary motion is needed to throw it compactly toward the outer circle. This being admitted, it follows that half-way from the outer to the inner side of this circle of matter so thrown out, a like rarity, suspension, or balance of gravity should prevail, and hence a disposition to concentric circles; therefore it follows that successive similiar subdivision should gradually lessening in force of quantity. By applying this principle to the earth, I found the necessity of hollow, concentric spheres. A decision of school-men on these lines shall be followed by additional positions further explaning my new principles of hollow spheres, open at the poles, declared in a circular letter of the 10th of April, 1818.

"John Cleves Symmes, of Ohio, late Captain of Infantry."

This is the basis of Symmes's theory. This theory he maintained with great earnestness, courage and disinterestedness during a large part of his life, and were he living now, he would in all likelihood be doughtily contending for it still, accommodating his theory to the Nares expedition—which went where he declared irrefutable opticle proof could be had of the polar openings—and all other discoveries whatsoever.

Among other arguments that he brought to his support were the migrations of animals to and from the artic regions, atmospheric refraction, and the variation of the compass observed in high northern latitudes. He supposed that there must exist "mid-plane spaces" in each of the spheres, and he believed the interior of the inclosed spheres to be lighted by the direct and refracted rays of the sun. Each of these spheres he supposed to be widely open at the poles. The planes of these polar openings were said to be inclined to the plane of the ecliptic at an angle of about twelve degrees, so that the real axis of the earth, being perpendicular to the plane of the equator, would from an angle of twelve degrees passing through the sphere at right angles with the polar openings, and consequently the verge (or edge) of the polar openings must approach several degrees nearer to the earth's equator on one side than on the other.

Symmes believed that there were beneath our feet miles and miles of wonderous unclaimed domain; reindeer roamed its colder borders, fish swam in its seas, animals and trees and flowers of curious and unknown shape made its life a primal gladness; splendid visions of untold wonders, misty dreams of splendors unnamable, floated through his nightly and daily thoughts, and greater than all burned within him the ceaseless desire to become the discoverers of this unknown land. And the only thing needful was for the government to traverse the "icy circle," pierce the opening, and sail in and take possession—perchance to find man, to meet a mighty race of people, to come face to face with some stupendous revelation of nature, to explore some splendid barbarism, or disclose a civilization, as yet undreamed.—E. F. Madden, Harper's Magazine for October.

The Ohio Farmers Insurance company of which Mr. Swaygood is the agent is becoming popular on account of the promptness of its payment of losses.

Social Event.

The most brilliant social event of the season at Syracuse, Ind., occurred Thursday evening, Sept. 14, at the residence of Mr. & Mrs. Jos. Henderson, the event being the marriage of their daughter Alma to C. C. Kleindenst of Fort Wayne. The ceremony, which was according to the Methodist Episcopal ritual, was very beautiful and impressive. The bride and groom stood beneath an evergreen arch studded with stars that in "earth's firmament do shine," from the center of which was suspended the proverbial wedding bell formed of a rare and exquisite exotics, while Rev. Church, of Fort Wayne, propounded the important question, the answer to which made the "twa but ae." The number of guests was very large comprising nearly all of our best citizens, and many from Ligoner and Fort Wayne, whose presents were numerous, costly and appropriate. Among the number we might name the following as a mark of the esteem in which the bride is held: A Steinway piano and brooch set with brilliants, by groom to bride; a gentleman's chair by bride to groom; set china, by bride's parents; silver butter dish, Mr. & Mrs. J. Wayer; silver cake dish, Drs. Ihrig & Collar and Miss B. Kitson; china set Mr. & Mrs. J. S. Weaver; silver pickle castor, by Joe. Hendrickson and daughters Etta and Ella; a gold-lined silver pitcher by Misses Roberts, Hardesty and Aber; silver fruit dish, Misses Hayes, Muma, Fordyce and Patterson, of Ligonier; castor by Mess. Stoner and Stetler; silver vase, Mr. & Mrs. Eli Holloway; set of silver spoons, A. Green and wife; linen table spread, J. Alexander, & wife; white linen table spread, W. A. Mann and wife; toilet set, Miss Belle Champer Ligonier; silver butter-knife and sugar shell, Mr. & Mrs. J. R. Kitson; silver napkin ring, Sarah Brown; napkin ring, W. A. Strieby; album, Mess. Williams, Wheeler, Evans and Edgell, of Fort Wayne; napkin ring, H. R. DeBra; silver spoons, Mrs. Sickles; set of napkins, D. Miles and wife; chandelier, E. O. and R. J. Stansberry; chromo Fales, of Nappanee; pair of toilet towels, Catherine Bushong; worsted spread, G. M. Ray and wife; silver castor, Mr. & Mrs. Braden, of Ligonier; damask table spread, Mr. and Mrs J. A. Kindig.

After the ceremony a repast, which would right royally do honor to the banquet board of a baron, graced the spacious tables of the hostess, and the evident relish with which the guests disposed of the various viands declared in eloquent terms their just appreciation of the same.

Mrs Kleindenst takes with her the good will and warmest expression of esteem and hope for her future welfare, and the prayerful expressions of her associates, that her fair bark, that has been just launched upon seas calm and serene may continue to sail upon waters grand with the perpetual smile of spring.

37 Walker St., Baltimore, Dec. 1881.
For six years I have been a great sufferer from Blood Disease, Dyspepsia, and Constipation, and became so debilitated that I could not retain anything on my stomach, in fact, life had almost become a burden. Finally, when hope had almost left me, my husband seeing Brown's Iron Bitters advertised in the paper, induced me to give it a trial. I am now taking the third bottle and have not felt so well in six years as I do at the present time.
Mrs. L. F. Griffin.

Brown's Iron Bitters will have a better tonic effect upon any one who needs "bracing up," than any medicine made.

THE BEST REMEDY FOR
Diseases of the Throat and Lungs.

AYER'S CHERRY
PECTORAL.

In diseases of the pulmonary organs a safe and reliable remedy is invaluable. Ayer's Cherry Pectoral is such a remedy. It is a scientific combination of the medicinal principles and curative virtues of the finest drugs, chemically united, of such power as to insure the greatest possible efficiency, and uniformity of results. It strikes at the foundation of all pulmonary diseases, affording prompt relief and rapid cures, and is adapted to patients of any age or either sex. Being very palatable, the youngest children take it readily. In ordinary Coughs, Colds, Sore Throat, Bronchitis, Influenza, Clergyman's Sore Throat, Asthma, Croup, and Catarrh, the effects of Ayer's Cherry Pectoral are magical, and multitudes are annually preserved from serious illness by its timely and faithful use. It should be kept at hand in every household for the protection it affords in sudden attacks. In Whooping-cough and Consumption there is no other remedy so efficacious, soothing, and helpful.

Low prices are inducements to try some of the many mixtures or syrups, made of cheap and ineffective ingredients, now offered, which, as they contain no curative qualities, can afford only temporary relief, and are sure to disappoint the patient. Diseases of the throat and lungs demand active and effective treatment; and it is dangerous experimenting with unknown and cheap medicines, from the great liability that these diseases may, while so trifled with, become deeply seated or incurable. Use Ayer's Cherry Pectoral, and you may confidently expect the best results. It is of acknowledged curative power, and is as cheap as its careful preparation and fine ingredients will allow. Eminent physicians, knowing its composition, prescribe it. The test of half a century has proven its certainty to cure all pulmonary complaints not already beyond the reach of human aid.

Shakspeare has this to say about the Star Route trial:

> In the corrupted currents of the world,
> Offense's gilded hand may shove by justice;
> And oft 'tis seen, the wicket prize itself
> Buys out the law.

William does not mention Dorsey, Brady or Bill Dickson in this connection, but that was unnecessary. The passage explains itself.—Times-Star.

Major Calkins, republican member from the Laporte district gives the following reason for voting for appropriations for unknown rivers and harbors. "There may be appropriations for streams not found on our maps, yet the mouths of those streams may constitute important harbors in general use, which may stand in need of improvement and be entitled to national aid."

Last Saturday was an off day for R. S. Peterson and his family. Charley Miller broke a plow for him; Dora, one of his little girls, tore the top off his buggy it getting it out of the shed; a calf stepped on a pig's leg and broke it; A. W. McBollman broke his grindstone; and Johnny lost his watch in going to Monmouth—quite a chapter of accidents for one day.—Decatur Democrat.

In answer to several questions in regard to the Star Route trialf, we give the vote of the jury. The vote in the jury room on the principal parties stood: S. W. Dorsey—guilty, 9; not guilty, 3. J. W. Dorsey—guilty, 11; not guilty, 1. Brady—guilty, 10; not guilty, 2. The few who stood between the leading conspirators and their just deserts were immovable, and obstinately "hung" the jury.

A man in the dress of a farmer, driving a lazy horse attached to a ramshackle wagon, did a good business in "nice, honest country butter" in Providence. The housewives bought of him extensively, in order to be sure that they did not get oleomargerine. He has since been exposed as no farmer, but a shrewd agent for an oleomargerine factory. A grocer caught him filling his pots from the original packages of imitation butter.

Freight trains laden with tea from China are racing by different routes from San Francisco to Chicago. A train recently ran from the coast over the Southern Pacific and Atchison Topeka and Santa Fe roads, and reached Kansas City in six days and six hours. This, however, has been excelled by a tarin which went over the Union Pacific and Chicago, Burlington and Quincy roads, and made the whole distance to Chicago in six days and a fraction. The competition is an interesting one, and is no doubt of benefit to the tea trade.

L. F. Gardner has a hen. There's nothing strange in that. But some time ago, this hen resolved to set and persevering in this worthy resolution, she in the course of time hatched one chick. For two weeks she took care of her offspring, as a good mother should, but at the end of that time, seeming to think the number of her brood too small, she industriously set again, aided by the little chick, which in nestling under its mother's wing, helped to keep the eggs warm. This time she hatched eight chickens. And how comes the funny part of the story: When the last chicks were about four weeks old the old hen deserted them. Then the elder chick, seemingly ashamed of its graceless mother's cruelty, took upon itself the care of the younger ones, clucking to them and feeding them.—West Unity Eagle.

The Hon. Edward McPherson, clerk of the house of representatives in seven congresses, has written a review of the last congress, and in his review writes the following:

The extension of the national-banking system was made in spite of democrats opposition, not that such opposition was united, but it was general. The democrats who supported the principle of the bill, and were agreed as to its policy, were few in number. It is quite safe to say that a democratic congress would not have passed either the anti polygamy bill or the national-banking bill. On the Chinese question the Democracy were substantially a unit in favor of extreme legislation. With them was a large segment of the republicans. The bill as passed received a united democratic support with about one-half of that of the republicans.

Six Hands Round.

A DOZEN COW BOYS SETTLE THE OWNERSHIP OF A HERD OF CATTLE BY A BLOODY BATTLE.

ST. LOUIS, Sept. 22.—A special from Denver gives the particulars of a twelve-sided duel between cow-boys and is just received here.

George Howard, owner of a herd of three thousand cattle and John Kelly, owner of a herd of four thousand, were driving in company from Arizona. Northeast of Trinidad the two herds were to separate, Howard to take the old Santa Fe trail to Kansas City, and Kelly to drive north to Denver. On the route an accidental exchange was made and Howard insisted on having his stock out, but was unwilling to deliver Kelly's, and it was finally agreed to settle the matter by a battle between six picked men of each party. Accordingly twelve men ranged themselves on horseback, the two sides fifty feet apart, and at the signal from the employes the fight was to begin. At the first fire four men were instantly killed. Howard's party, with the exception of their employer fled to their camp. Kelly then rode up to Howard and proposed that they should fight it out. Howard declined, saying that he understood the matter to be settled according to the terms of the battle made beforehand. This settled the matter. An equitable exchange of cattle was then made; the dead men were then buried by men of their own herds, and those in charge separated for their different routes.

An applicant for a government office in India must pass an examination in more than half a dozen languages—Bengah, Hindi, Burmese, Tramil and Marathi—and at the same time all candidates are encouraged to learn some of the three classical languages of India—Sancrit, Arabic or Persian; and also one or more of the secondary vernaculars current in the various presidencies. So it isn't every greenhorn who can get an office in India.—Times-Star.

A traveler was leaning at night against a railing at the Harper's Ferry railroad station. A locomotive came along, and he sprang lightly over the rail to escape possible danger. He thought it was a meadow on the other side, but knew his mistake when he struck on a muddy stream feet below On being rescued he was asked his name. "I wouldn't tell you for a thousand dollars," he replied; "describe me simply as a fool."

A recent visitor to Winnipeg, on the Red River, discovered the ruins of the fort which belonged to a colony founded in 1811 by Lord Selkirk, a Scotch philanthropist. He came over with eighty families, and for several years they prospered, but the destruction of a wheat crop by grasshoppers made them poor again. Selkirk journeyed to Prairie du Chien in the dead of winter to get seed for the next year's planting. At this time there were 1,000 to 1,5000 persons in the colony. Conflicts as to the ownership of the land ensued between Selkirk and the Hudson Bay Company, and in 1825, bankrupt and disheartened, he returned to Scotland, some of the people accompanying him, and the rest scattering throughout Canada.

The Hon. W. R. Myers, a member of the house of representatives of the forty-sixth congress, has been nominated for the office of secretary of state of Indiana. We remember with pleasure the part taken Mr. Myers as a member of the select committee to investigate the pension office and the whole subject of the payment of pensions, bounty and back pay. Our readers are not likely to have forgotten with what perseverance he followed commissioner Bentley in all his twistings and turnings during the investigations, until the inefficiency of that official, and his tyrannical disregard of the rights of the soldier, were exposed. To Capt. Myers, perhaps more than any other man in the country, is due to the credit of the retirement of Bentley from the pension office. His military record is that of a true soldier, who rose from a private through all the grades to the rank of a captain. He is a man of generous nature and noble instincts, and has shown himself to be the practical friend of the soldier; and we do not doubt that his comrades in Indiana will remember him on election day.—Citizen Soldier.

A Four Hundred Miles Walk by Six Girls.

To-day the party of six girls who started about the first of the month to walk all over North Carolina arrived at Laurenburg, where their walk ends. They are all well and in good spirits, and, though much sunburned, are as comely a set of lady pedestrians as ever undertook a long tramp. They started in the neighborhood of Hendersonville nearly a month ago upon what was regarded by their friends as a foolish scheme to walk over North Carolina and see the principal points of interest in the state, and to pay special attention to the mountains. Three of the girls were at school when the project was first agreed upon, and the other three who agreed to join them were friends. They made all their arrangements for the proposed journey as quietly as possible, for they knew attempts would be made to dissuade them from the undertaking. Their friends were taken completely by surprise when they were told but a day or two before the commencement of the walk of the intention to tramp over the state without any escort. To the suggestions that going alone and with no one to protect them they would subject themselves to insult, they replied that they were willing to make the attempt, and they averred to-day that from first to last they have never received one rude word or rough jest from any one, their only grievances being that once or twice some persons of their sex attempted to prevent them from continuing their walk by characterizing such an undertaking as immodest and unladylike. One old lady offered to their chaperone if they persisted in their purpose, but the would be chaperone wanted to go in a buggy, and when she learned that they expected to tramp over mountains where there were no roads, she backed out, although they mischievously gave her an invitation to join. On the first week of their trip they suffered much from exhaustion, and the youngest and frailest of the party, Miss Murdock, had to stop and rest by reason of severely-blistered feet. It was feared that she would have to abandon the trip, but she pushed on No. 1, and after the eighth day she began to gain strength, and is now one of the healthiest of the fair tramps. Her weight when she started was but ninety-two pounds, and she turned the scales to-day at 103 pounds. All save two of the walkers fattened after the first week, while two who were inclined to obesity were pulled down twelve and eighteen pounds. Their record shows that they made 420 miles. They started out with the expectation of making between 500 and 600. Each walker wore a pair of red-leather walking-shoes, and wore short walking-dresses, and carried strong staffs in their hands and gunpacks upon their shoulders, in which were packed hammocks and other necessary articles. They also wore very broad-brimmed hats, which however, do not seem to have protected their complexions, for they are all burned brown. Two of the parties carried pistols to protect them from accidental excursions of wild-cats and bears. Much of the time they slept in open air in their hammocks under canvas coverlets, which were used to shield them from heavy dews and rain. One night, ten days ago, apprehending a severe storm, they encamped in a grave-yard and slept between the graves. Another night, in the mountains, they were thrown into consternation by the appearance of a bear, but the beast being as frightened as they were, fled without offering to molest them. In the mountains they were in great terror of rattle snakes, but did not encounter any of the reptiles. Along their route they were treated kindly, many of the hospitable farmers entertaining them, but they shunned notoriety and avoided all the towns and villages, frequently going some distance out of their way rather than meet crowds. A novel feature of their undertaking was the keeping of what they called their log-book. In this the record of their impressions and adventures are kept, each taking her turn. The book contains 1,249 closely written pages. Although frequently offered vehicles, they have always declined, saying that they started with the determination of walking. They spent three days in exploring the celebrated Bald mountains whose mysterious rumblings some years ago created so much excitement. They not only made the difficult ascent to the top, but went into one of the crevices, which they examined minutely, with the aim of discovering what caused the strange sounds in the interior. The novel trip of the six young ladies has been much talked about, but as they had avoided the crowded thoroughfares they were ignorant of the interest taken in them, and were much astonished and insulted when they learned that bets had been made by certain sporting men that they would not make four hundred miles in the month. The parties are modest and shun notoriety. They aver they end the trip now because three of their number will begin their school days early in September, but they assert their determination to walk over the unexplored portion of the state next summer. They leave to-morrow by rail for their homes, near Hendersonville.—Monroe, (N. C.) Cor. Chicago Times.

A Remarkable Line of Wrought Iron Water Pipe.

The Tombstone (Arizona Ter.) Republican describes, in a recent number, the new water works for supplying that city and the surrounding mines. The supply is from springs in the Huachuca mountains, twenty-five miles from the city. The main line, of that length, is of 7-inch lap-welded, rolled wrought iron pipe, in lengths of from 14 to 20 feet and laid about two feet below the surface. So perfect is said to be the work that in the whole line "not one defective joint was found, nor one collar broken." The pipe was made and the work executed under the direction of the Pennsylvania Tube Company of Pittsburgh.

The Women of Mormonism.

"The women of Mormonism, or the story of polygamy, as told by the victims themselves," is the title of a new book which will be eagerly read. It is edited by Mrs. Jennie Anderson Froiseth, of Salt Lake City, one of the foremost workers of the Anti-Polygamy cause. She gives very nearly in the words of the poor deluded victims the accounts of their dreadful miseries and sufferings, showing how the first wife has often been forced for the sake of bread and shelter for her children to consent to have her husband take another wife, even the woman she most hates. While for herself she might have preferred to plunge beneath the waters of the Jordan, yet for the sake of her children she has consented to see her husband bring another woman into her home to usurp her place in his affections.

Every woman should read it that she may learn the better to prize the blessings of her own home and be able to sympathize with these poor unfortunate sisters and do more for their relief.

Rev. Moses Smith, pastor of the Second Congregational church, Detroit, Mich., writes: "I read the manuscript pages with an interest which at times rose to astonishment and indignation. This book I am sure will be found to be the right thing, in the right place, at the right time and from the right source. Every pastor in the land may recommend the volume before he sees it, and a million copies ought to be sold in one year."

The book is finely illustrated. It is sold only by subscribtion and offers a rare opportunity for enterprising agents to make money. For particulars address the publisher, C. G. G. Paine, 91 Griswold street, Detroit, Mich.

A WRITER in an English magazine claims that the drunkenness of the present day is promoting civilization and the general forward progress of the human race, because it is ridding society of its most undesirable members. The [illegible] drunkards perish and the fit sober survive.

A GOOD deal of excitement exists in England in regard to the introduction of "Chinese cheap labor." A public meeting was held in London recently convened by the "Democratic Federation" — Socialistic organization — which called upon the Government to pass measures to prevent the importation of the Chinese into the United Kingdom.

JUDGE LAWRENCE, First Controller of the Treasury, claims that the credit of the United States is better than that of any other government in the world, and as a proof cites the fact that British consols, which are perpetual and pay 3 per cent. interest, are worth only 93 per cent., while our 3 per cents, which are liable to be called in within a few years, are worth a premium of 1 per cent.

IT is shown that the great iron-strike that has lasted 116 days, has cost the idle workmen $8,000,000 in the wages they would have otherwise have earned, has wept away the accumulated earnings for years, and brought hundreds of families to the verge of actual want. It has been on the part of the Amalgamated Association a blunder so monstrous as to amount to a crime.

IT seems, after all, that General Grant is going to Mexico along with Mr. Trescott, to negotiate a commercial treaty. An Eastern paper says the two men will set out about November 1, after danger from yellow fever is over, and it is believed in speculative circles that they will obtain "such concessions from the Government of Mexico as will open the mining sections of that country to American capital."

A CHURCH trial of an unusual nature is to take place soon at McKeesport, Pa. One well-known citizen, it appears, holds a promissory note given by another well-known citizen, but which obligation the latter neglects to meet. Both are members of the Methodist Church, and the holder of the note has preferred charges against the debtor under a clause of the discipline which renders liable to expulsion any member who can, but will not met his fiancial obligations. It is alleged that the maker is able to pay the note, but willfully refuses to do so, and the brother in the church demands his expulsion.

THE cholera epidemic in the Philippine Islands is still making fearful ravages, although the mortality is much less than it was a few weeks ago. At the beginning of this month the deaths in Manila alone averaged 300 daily, and during the last two weeks of August there were 4,550 deaths from the disease in the single Province of Yloilo. The deaths at present number about fifty daily in Manila, but reach the terrible total of nearly 200 in the surrounding country. Next to Cuba, the Philippines are the most valuable of the colonial possessions of Spain. They have a population of 6,000,000,000, and export chiefly to this country and Great Britain tropical produce reaching the yearly value of about $17,000,000.

Tom McCart, a white man about twenty-eight years old, employed on the railroad at Edwardsport as section hand, is in jail for outraging a twelve-year old colored girl. He has a wife and one child. Aaron Hill, a young man living near the same place, outraged a young lady named Sage, living about two miles further south. He was sent to jail to keep McCart company.

A burglar in attempting to enter the house of W. C. Hazleton, of Crawfordsville, awakened the family. A nervous little boy screamed "Fire," and Mrs. Hazleton jumped through a second story window carrying the sash and glass with her, alighting in the window of a neighbor's house and breaking that also. She was badly and painfully bruised and sustained a severe cut on the knee, though her injuries are not dangerous.

Jefferson Sea, of Missouri, appeared at Greensburg and got a writ of habeas corpus to obtain custody of Victoria Murphy, of Marion township, who he claims is his wife. He claims that he married her in Missouri in 1878, and lived with her two months. She says they were married for fun at a party, and she had forgotten all about it. He had no papers to show for it and the writ was dismissed. She is to be married here soon, and Sea says he will obtain evidence and prosecute her for bigamy.

A Georgia Corn-Shucking.

October Century.

The farmer who proposes to give a corn-shucking selects a level spot in his lot, conveniently near the crib, rakes away all trash, and sweeps the place clean with a brush broom. The corn is then pulled off the stalks, thrown into wagons, hauled to the lot, and thrown out on the spot selected, all in one pile. If it has been previously "norated" through the neighborhood that there is to be plenty to eat and drink at the corn-shucking, and if the night is auspicious, there will certainly be a crowd. Soon after dark the negroes begin to come in, and before long the place will be alive with them,—men, women, and children. After the crowd has gathered and been moderately warmed up, two "gin'r'ls" are chosen from among the most famous corn-shuckers on the ground, and these proceed to divide the shuckers into two parties, later comers reporting alternately to one side or the other, so as to keep the forces equally divided. The next step, which is one of great importance, is to divide the corn-pile. This is done by laying a fence-rail across the top of the corn-pile, so that the vertical plane, passing through the rail, will divide the pile into two equal portions. Laying the rail is of great importance, since upon this depends the accuracy of the division; it is accompanied with much argument, not to say wrangling. The position of the rail being determined, the two generals mount the corn-pile, and the work begins. The necessity for the "gin'r'ls" to occupy the most conspicuous position accessible, from which to cheer their followers, is one reason why they get in on top of the corn; but there is another, equally important, which is to keep the rail from being moved, it being no uncommon thing for one side to change the position of the rail, and thus throw an undue portion of the work upon their adversaries. The position of "gin'r'l" in a corn-shucker differs from that of the soldier, in that the former is in greater danger than any of his followers; for the chances that, should his side seem to be gaining, one of their opponents will knock the leader off the corn-pile, and thus cause a momentary panic, which is eagerly taken advantage of. This proceeding, however, is considered fair only in extreme cases, and not unfrequently leads to a general row. If it is possible, imagine a negro man standing up on a pile of corn, holding in his hand an ear of corn, and shouting the words of a song below, and you will have pictured the "corn gin'r'l." It is a prime requisite that he should be ready in his improvisations and have a good voice, so that he may lead in the corn-song. The chorus, or to use the language of the corn-shuckers, the "gin'r'ls give out," and the shuckers "drone." These songs are kept up continuously during the entire time the work is going on, and though extremely simple, yet, when sung by fifty pairs of lusty lungs, there are few things more stirring.

How Deeply Does the Earth Quake?

The recent earthquake at Virginia City was not noticed at all in the mining depths, but only by people on the surface. Their famous earthquake of some time ago, which shook down chimneys and fire-walls, cracked brick buildings and did other damage, was merely noticed by some of the miners working in the upper levels, but it did no damage, not even shaking down loose stones and earth. The station men in the various shafts felt it the strongest, and the deepest point where it was noticed was by the station-tender at the 900-foot level of the Imperial shaft—900 feet below the surface. He said it felt like a sudden faint throb or pulsation of the air, as though a blast had been let off at a distance above, below, or in some indefinite direction. In some of the mines the shock was not noticed at all, even by station-men. Commenting upon this peculiar fact at the time, the Gold Hill News remarked that the earthquake seemed to be an electrical disturbance, proceeding from the atmosphere, and not from the depths of the earth.

A Surgeon's Evidence

Bransby Cooper, the nephew of Sir Astley, used to tell a story, says Mr. Sergeant Ballantine in his experiences, of his uncle in connection with a murder committed at Rotherhithe by a man named Patch. The deceased had been shot, and, from the position he was in at the time, and the direction of the wound, Sir Astley, then Mr. Cooper, was satisfied that the shot was fired by a left handed man. Patch assured his council that such was not the case with him, but when called up to plead, held up his left hand. It may be necessary to mention for the information of some readers, that at that time a prisoner pleading was always told to hold up his hand. Patch was convicted and executed.

Reno at It Again.

[Philadelphia Press.]

Cape May furnishes a little sensation in the shape of a jealous lover, a discarded suitor, a challenge to mortal combat and a general effort at secrecy. Willian Howell, of Howell & Bros., the bankers on Third street, is said to be the challenged man, and Maj. Reno, known in connection with the Custer massacre, and since cashiered for conduct unbecoming an officer and a gentleman, is the challenger. The fair cause of war is Mrs. Waterman, of this city, who is said to be engaged to Mr. Howell. She is spending the summer at Cape May. While at the sea shore she was introduced, at the Columbia house, to Maj. Reno, who brought all his material charms to bear upon widow. She regarded him with favor, and he was often her escort. But Mr. Howell, hearing of his successful carpet campaign, informed Mrs. Waterman that Maj. Reno's record was not unblemished, and that his western escapades had caused his dismissal from the army. Thereupon Mrs. Waterman told the major what she had heard. The major's martial ire was aroused, and he at once sent the broker a demand for the satisfaction due a gentleman and a officer.

Mr. Howell was seen at his residence yesterday, and denied all knowledge of the affair. He had not received any challenge, he said, and he did not know Maj. Reno. He admitted, however, that "there was a Mrs. Waterman at Cape May during the summer." It is generally understood that the broker will not accept the ex-soldier's challenge.

St. Petersburg, September 28.—Lieutenant Stalepine, of the regiment of the Pretrajenski Guards, was killed yesterday in a duel, with pistols at fifteen paces, by Captain Prince Skakowskoi. Three officers and Count Solahub, son of the historial of the Turko-Russian war, lately deceased, were the witnesses. The meeting took place at Pargolow, a few miles from St. Petersburg. Three shots were to be fired. Skakowskoi fell at the first shot, slightly wounded in the side, but the ball which he fired in falling mortally wounded Stalepine. The cause of the duel was a long-standing enmity, which had lately broken out afresh.

NEW YORK.

A terrible accident occurred this morning in the Fourth avenue tunnel at Eighty-sixth Street Station. The New Haven train from Mount Vernon, while standing on the southbound side of the track in the tunnel, was run into by a Harlem local train. Two of the rear cars were demolished, and, with the engine of the Harlem train, lie in the tunnel.

As near as can be ascertained at present four persons were killed and nineteen badly injured. The names of the dead and injured thus far have not been ascertained.

It is claimed that the accident was the result of gross mismanagement. The locomotive on the main line of the Hudson River road broke its driving-wheel at One Hundred and Twenty-third street, and blocked the train. In consequence the New Haven train that arrived near, was switched on the southbound side track. The 7:53 o'clock train from Mount Vernon was fully thirty-five minutes late when it reached the Eighty-sixth street station. It had made frequent stops and backed in and out of the tunnel, as the engine exploded signal torpedoes on the track. It had hardly been a minute at Eighty-sixth street station when a rumble was heard behind it. In an instant a crash and the screams of a score of men and women were heard. The two rear cars of the six composing the New Haven train were telescoped and shattered.

William C. Rowson, the telegraph operator on the Harlem line at Ninety-eighth street, and Conductor Root and brakeman Robbins, of the wrecked New Haven train, have been arrested. Rowson is only 18 years, yet he holds the responsible position of managing all trains of the company that run through the tunnel between Eighty-sixth and Ninety-eighth streets, his station being the telegraph office at Ninety-eighth street. The New Haven company claims that Rowson should have detained the Harlem train until he received a signal from Eighty-sixth street that the Port Chester train had passed that station.

William Howe, one of the injured, died yesterday afternoon. He was 56 years old, and was formerly in the employ of A. T. Stewart & Co.

Alonzo Follet, a Wall street note broker, alleged to be short in his accounts, had not up till a late hour visited his office to-day. His absence filled the street with rumors of such a nature as to create a decided feeling of alarm among his customers, many of whom called and asked anxiously for him. To all inquiries, the response was given that his arrival was expected. His clerk, with hesitation, said he thought "Mr. Follet was in town." The amount of his shortage is now placed at not less than $1,000,000.

The Evening Post, referring to the unusual stringency in money, says: "It should be said that large lots of money were yesterday borrowed at fancy rates, which money was not used, that is to say no collaterals were put up, and the money was not taken, all that was done by the borrowers being to pay one day's interest for the money, and leave it in the hands of the lender. The same thing is being done to-day, and it puts in a clear light the fact that a good part of the present stringency is artificial."

The Post thinks there is good reason why the Treasury should act in the matter, and grant relief, and says there will be grounds for disappointment if Secretary Folger does not take this view of the subject.

Beginning to-morrow, the 27th, and until further notice, the Secretary of the Treasury will pay any called bonds, without rebate of interest, at the rate of $5,000,000 per week. The announcement of the forthcoming Treasury relief started the stock market up, and prices advanced ⅛@1⅛. It then began to be rumored that the Treasury would get no bonds to-morrow, and the rise halted, and prices declined a fraction. Money also declined to 8.

WASHINGTON.

Secretary Folger, said this morning that he really did not know when he would resign his office of Secretary of the Treasury, but it is generally thought he will tender his resignation to take effect after the New York election.

Intimate friends of Assistant Secretary John C. New state positively he will succeed to the Treasury portfolio. They claim that when New accepted the position as Assistant Secretary, he was informed that there was every probability that Folger would be the next Governor of New York, and in that event New should succeed him as the head of the Treasury Department.

Spencer, Iowa, dispatch:

On Sunday last, while a young son of Peter Walker, an old resident of Kossuth county, was herding cattle near his father's house, he was attacked by two young men wearing masks and terriby mutilated. Sheriff Haggard got on the trail and arrested two young men named Fry and Herrick, and had them lodged in the Kossuth county jail. Circumstances point to them as the guilty ones, as they have made threats against Walker and family, and the masks and clothing worn by them when the act was committed have been found and identified.

One gallon of the mixture will moisten every leaf on a large tree if skillfully applied. Professor A. J. Cook recommended the same remedy five or six years ago.

West Bay City, Mich., dispatch:

Thomas Rodgers, hitherto a respected citizens of this place, has just absconded in very bad reputation. A few years ago he left here and went to South Africa, where he met and married an estimable English lady of considerable property. He, by wily subterfuge, obtained possession of a large portion of her wealth and deserted her, returning to West Bay City. By lavish expenditure Rodgers finally ran through it all, a large portion of the diamonds, in which shape a part of the property was in, coming in the possession of a near relative of his. Then he began a series of letters to his deserted wife, professing repentance and begging her to forgive him and come to him. This she finally did, selling the remainder of her propery at the Cape of Good Hope. For a time all was well, but she foolishly gave him her money and another package of precious stones to take care of. He placed them in his relative's safe, and almost immediately his conduct changed, threatening her and claiming she was not his wife. This becoming unbearable, she had him arrested and placed under $500 bonds. When the case was called, it was found Rodgers had jumped his bonds and fled with $4,000 of his wife's property, leaving her deserted in a strange land.

A Courier-Journal Lancaster (Ky.) special says about 3:20 a. m., as the first of three special trains conveying Sells Brothers' show from Richmond was coming around the curve, 300 yards from Paint Lick, the fourth car from the engine, from some unknown cause, jumped the track and rolled down the embankment, followed by the balance of the train in its rear, consisting of fifteen cars.

The cars were loaded principally by the baggage of the company, tableaux, wagons, electric light machine, and a cage containing a tiger. Three men were instantly killed, three probably fatally wounded, and seven or eight wounded. Two of the killed were attaches of the circus, and the third, William Underwood, a boy from Mt. Vernon, Ky., who was stealing a ride on the train.

The cage containing the tiger was burst open, and the fierce animal let out, creating much consternation, everyone being afraid to go near it until daylight, when the door was opened and the tiger, which was crouching near by, crept back into his prison, and was secured.

The Courier-Journal's Lancaster, Ky., reporter sends the following special: "The Coroner's inquest held on the dead bodies of the victims of the wreck of Sells Bros.' circus train, near Point Lick yesterday, developes the following additional particulars: The train, which consisted of twenty-one cars, was coming down the grade from Moran Summit, and, there being only four brakes, it became unmanageable, and went at a terrific rate of speed. This either caused the track to spread or a draw-head pulled out and fell on the track, throwing the third car from the engine over the embankment, the others following. Seven cars were completely wrecked.

Engineer Foley testified that he was running with the engine reversed and sand pouring on the rails, and that the speed was thirty miles an hour. Other employes testified that the train was going at the rate of fifty or sixty miles an hour, and that the brakes were insufficient to hold the train on such a grade.

"It was shown, however, that several brakes had been removed by Sells in order to facilitate the loading of wagons on the cars. The cars were the property of the railroad company.

"The following is the verdict of the Coroners' jury: 'We, of the jury find that Ben Case, Jack Carter and Willis Underwood came to their death by the wreck of a train, caused by an unusual rate of speed.'

"Three men were instantly killed and two fatally injured, one other probably fatally, and eleven wounded otherwise. All were attaches of the circus except Underwood, a boy 18 years old, who lives in Mount Vernon, and was stealing a ride.

A heavy fall of coal occurred this morning in the Kingsland mine of the Maryland Coal Company, at Lonaconiny. Four miners, including the mine boss, Byers, are known to be under the coal. Atchison, Kan., dispatch:

The Western Hardware Company establishment closed this morning. W. W. Hetherington has been appointed Assignee. Liabilities have been estimated at $250,000. The assets consist of a large stock of hardware on hand, but the value cannot be told at present. The principal creditors are hardware manufacturers and dealers in Pittsburgh. The Hetherington National Bank was paying the hardware company's checks up to the hour of closing yesterday. But little excitement prevails here, the general expression being that they will effect an arrangement and resume.

Woodstock, Ont., dispatch:

An inquest last night on the remains of a young woman named Ellen Windergarden, alias Camp, who died under suspicious circumstances, resulted in the arrest of an old negro doctress named Munson, at whose house the woman died. The evidence went to show that for some years the house has been the resort of women seeking unlawful medical aid. Several deaths have taken place there.

Peoria, Illinois, dispatch.—Johathan Wolgamott, residing near Glassford, this county, was assaulted on Sunday morning by Enoch Noble and his son Edward, and so brutally beaten and kicked that he died this morning from the injuries received. The assault grew out of trouble in regard to a boundary between their respective farms. On learning of the death of their victim the murderers took to the woods. A posse of armed citizens took their trail and, this evening, succeeded in capturing the younger Noble, and would most assuredly have lynched him but for the presence of the Sheriff and the State's Attorney. The elder Noble is still at large, but his capture is certain.

Joliet, Illinois, dispatch.—Samuel Dickey, Sheriff of Unitah county, W. T., arrived at the State prison this morning with a gang of four cowboys, all convicted of stealing cattle, with the following sentences: J. Williams, eight years; Frank Smith, seven years, and Johnny Armitidge, a 14-year-old boy, sentenced for six years. The latter is a native of Salt Lake, Utah, and the youngest convict, with one exception, ever received at the penitentiary.

Fond du Lac, Wis., dispatch:

This city is greatly excited over a mysterious murder that occurred Saturday night at Barton, a little town a mile from West Bend. Jacob Kuntz, of Fond du Lac, in accordance with an agreement made with a man named Schmidt, of whom he desired to purchase some lumber, went to meet the latter at Barton, Saturday night, leaving on the midnight train from Fond du Lac. Kuntz was found in an unconscious condittion near the track at Barton early Sunday morning by Schmidt, who was looking for him. He was badly injured, it was supposed by jumping off the train, but he recovered consciousness a few hours later, and told of being assaulted by two men and robbed of $800, which he had in his possession. He died from the effects of his injuries at 6 o'clock Sunday morning.

The State of Panama principally, and adjoining States in Columbia, and the Republics of Costi Rica and Nicaragua, as far as heard from by the new cable in the Pacific, have been subjected since the 7th inst., to a series of earthquakes, which have differed as widely in intensity as they have in locality. In this city the first one was felt at about twenty minutes past 3 a. m. on the 7th, and was followed, about half an hour afterward, by a second one. Both these shocks were felt in Colon, and generally throughout the State; also in Carthagenia, in the State of Bolivia; in Rivas, Nicaragua, which is situated within eighteen miles of the Pacific, and in Greyton, the Atlantic port of the San Juan river in the same Republic, and a good hundred and fifty miles from the before-mentioned town.

Wheaton, Ill., dispatch:

In the Fairbanks burglary case today Mr. Fairbanks testified that Myers and another man, pretended to be horse-buyers, took dinner at his house on October 10, and were there over an hour. He swears positively that he recognized Myers as one of the men who entered the house the next night and robbed him of $10,000 in bonds, and $210 in currency and silver, and who bound and gagged himself, wife and two servant girls, and burned his feet to make him disclose where he kept his money. Mrs. Fairbanks swears to the same; also that Myers pounded her and that she raised his mask and told him she knew him. Amanda Humet testified that he was the man who ate dinner there and took part in the robbery.

Terre Haute, Ind., dispatch:

A man representing himself to be A. J. Thompson, an extensive grain buyer, has victimized the Prairie City and First National Banks here out of $2,600, by drawing money on the duplicate bills of lading, having first erased the word "duplicate" with oxalic acid. The money was drawn last Friday, and the fraud has just been discovered. Thompson's whereabouts is unknown. He is about 45 years old, has a flat nose, is of heavy build and dark complexion. Previous to his coming here he victimized the Worthington bank out of $1,900 on the same trick. There is no doubt that his operations in this line has been extensive, and that there are other sufferers.

An Earthquake Shock.

St. Louis, September 27.—A slight shock of earthquake was felt in this city and vicinity at 4:18 a. m. In the central part of the city the shock was first noticed by a rolling, even noise, followed directly by twelve distinct vibrations at intervals of one second. The first vibration was most a violent shock, and lasted about fifteen seconds.

Centralia, Ill., September 27.—Our citizens were aroused and started at half-past 4 o'clock this morning by a well-defined earthquake shock, which lasted several seconds. It seemed to come from the west, and was accompanied by a rumbling sound, and shook the houses very perceptibly, awaking nearly every one who was not awake before.

Baltimore, Md., September 27.—At Heathsville, Va., a mill-dam was carried away this morning by a flood, and the water swept down upon the house of a Mr. Bush, drowning his wife and five children.

DR. HARTER'S

A combination of Protoxide of Iron, Peruvian Bark and Phosphorus in a palatable form. The only preparation of iron that will not blacken the teeth, so characteristic of other iron preparations.

GENTLEMEN: I have used DR. HARTER'S IRON TONIC in my practice, and in an experience of twenty-five years in medicine, have never found anything to give the results that DR. HARTER'S IRON TONIC does. In many cases of Nervous Prostration, Female Diseases, Dyspepsia, and an impoverished condition of the blood, this peerless remedy has, in my hands, made some wonderful cures. Cases that have baffled some of our most eminent physicians have yielded to this great and incomparable remedy. I prescribe it in preference to any Iron preparation made. In fact, such a compound as DR. HARTER'S IRON TONIC is a necessity in my practice. DR. ROBERT SAMUELS,

ST. LOUIS, MO., NOV. 26th, 1881. 2301 Wash. Avenue.

It gives color to the blood, natural healthful tone to the digestive organs and nervous system, making it applicable to General Debility, Loss of Appetite, Prostration of Vital Powers and Impotence.

NOTICE that Mr. Moody's meetings are all held in the evening of the day for which he is advertised.

DID Glasgow forget to explain about the tariff being paid on the other side of the ocean, as he asserted at Garrett, or had some kind friend nudged his elbow?

THE states that voted for Garfield, had one saloon to every 250 people while the states that gave majorities for Hancock, had only one saloon for every 370 people. Which is the whisky party now?

A VERY plain shock of an earthquake was felt in central Illinois one morning last week. It was strong enough to shake the houses, and wake people out of their sleep at four o'clock in the morning.

THERE never was a time when the democrats of this county were so completely united and working so harmoniously as the present. There have been few or no differences to settle, no wounds to heal, and every man has his shoulder to the wheel. It begins to look as if we had learned a few lessons in the past ten years that are beginning to prove valuable to us.

THE salaries that are being assessed by Jay Hubbell, amount all told, to over thirty millions of dollars. Two per cent of this sum will give him a campaign fund of six hundred thousand dollars. Every one knows that money is not necessary to obtain an honest expression of the wishes of the people. It can have no other use, than to corrupt the ballot box. This is the republican plan to keep the ballot box pure.

LET every democrat stop this year to consider before he walks up to the polls with a ticket that has a pencil mark over one of the names. Vote straight. It don't pay to vote any other way. The other way is what has beaten so many good democratic candidates heretofore and given the county, in part, over to republicans. Why do we do it? Are not our men as good and capable as theirs? Certainly they are. No one doubts that. Then why vary a hair's breadth from the straight path? You have nothing to gain by such a course, and every thing to lose. Don't do it. When a man approaches you with a proposition, send him away empty handed. When he asks you to vote for one of his men, and agrees to vote for one of yours in return, bear in mind that you are generally cheated in a bargain of that kind. He will generally vote for your strong man who does not need the vote, and get you to vote for a man on his side, that has been chosen by his party leaders to "run in." He cheats you in both halves of the bargain. Give all such offers, a wide berth and stand by your own men.

W. C. GLASGOW, republican candidate for congress spoke to a good sized, attentive audience in the court room last Thursday evening. He is a fluent speaker, and sometimes a pleasing one, but is still in utter darkness as to most of the subjects he treats. It is likely he does not know that many of his assertions are false, and as many of his better-informed friends do not seem to feel sufficient interest in him to enlighten him on these subjects, he may continue to make a spectacle of himself during the entire campaign. A as rambler he is ahead. He went over his subjects like a swallow over a lake, he touched the surface with his wing, but didn't lap up a great amount of the water. Few men, can, like Glasgow, stand with one foot on the Alleghanies, and the other on the Rockies, and while cooling his burning brow in our northern lakes, gracefully kick the cap off the head of the goddess of Liberty as she stands on the shining sands of the Gulf of Mexico.

WE are gratified to notice that it is the will of the Democracy of DeKalb county to return our friend D. D. Moody to the next Legislature. This is wise judgment, and an indorsement worthily bestowed. Mr. Moody is a man of ability, and though a young man and a new member, he early took rank in the last Legislature among the first members in all that goes to make a useful legislator. Faithful at his post, vigilant, active and untiring, he acquired a reputation and influence both creditable to himself and constituents. Opportunity and close observation enable us to speak advisedly when we suggest that if the good people of DeKalb county want a faithful and efficient Repacsentative in the next Legislature they will make no mistake in the election of tried and worthy D. D. Moody.—Indianapolis Sentinel, Oct. 3.

IT is the same old trick. Republicans have generally had a "non-political" hobby that would make votes for them and for no one else. It has been so successful, they are keeping up the howl of "no politics" in the prohibition matter. But it is becoming apparent to all, that what the COURIER has always maintained is right. It is a scheme to catch scattering votes—to manufacture political capital. A lady lecturer, perhaps the same one that was here, at a recent lecture in Garrett, asked for a rising vote of "all who would vote against Moody should be be opposed to prohibition." No politics in that of course.

THE managers of the Ft. Wayne fair were well paid for their liberal use of printer's ink. They had a big crowd and no doubt made it a financial success. What they need is more real industrial displays. The county and city were but slightly represented. There was, it is true, quite a fair display of vegetables, but nothing to what Allen county could do. As for the floral hall, it was, as usual, mostly occupied by displays of dealers in various goods. This is good as far as it goes, but our neighbors will find that a little more of the home-made and home-raised will add greatly to their show.

SEVERAL of our exchanges have been trying to make people believe that Dr. Parker, of the Kendallville News, is sore because he was not nominated for representative. To show how little truth there is in the article we quote the Doctor's very words in the last News. He says: "The democratic ticket as nominated at Albion one week ago will be found it this week's paper. It is the ticket that we propose to support cordially. It is the out spoken result of the democratic party of this county, and we submit to its choice."

OUR old friend B. D. Thomas, of Garrett, has been placed upon the democratic ticket of DeKalb county for commissioner, in place of Sheets deceased. Mr. Thomas is one of the early settlers of Garrett, a true Democrat and and a capable man. DeKalb county will do well to elect him.—Kendallville News.

BUTLER CENTER.

The first speech of the campaign was made at this place last Monday evening by Hon. D. D. Moody, the democratic candidate for representative. A large and appreciative audience was present to greet him, who had formerly been a neighbor with them, and whose principles of right all endorse. The speaker made a very eloquent address, in which it was shown conclusively that the present protective tariff is expensive to the government, detrimental to the laborer and maintained wholly in the interests of manufacturing monopolies. Mr. Moody's position on the proposed prohibitory amendment met the approval of every one present. Many of the audience were men whose habits of temperance could not be questioned. Still they do not feel disposed to support a measure that deprives men of personal liberty, especially when such a measure is used wholly for political gain, by a party that dare not honestly discuss it before the people. Butler township will send in a rousing majority for Moody in November.

A TEMPERANCE DEMOCRAT.

THE Albion New Era calls up the anti-Lowry resolutions passed by the democrats of Lagrange last spring, and thinks the people of that county, will now have to eat crow. Going farther, it says: "And a large number in Noble and DeKalb counties have to sit down to crow too, if they support Lowry." A mistake Mr. Era, as to DeKalb. The democracy of this county, were never more unanimous in the support of a candidate for congress, when there was any struggle at all, than they are in their support of Judge Lowry. And they are still of the same opinion. DeKalb democracy will have their 'crow' just after the election.

A YOUNG man named Theime, son of one of the leading grocers in Ft. Wayne was run over by cars on the Muncie road last Thursday. He was a brakeman and was coupling the cars, when he fell under them. One car run over him crushing his left arm and breaking the other arm and his left leg. He was brought to Wayne on the evening train on the Muncie road. His left arm was amputated, and he is likely to recover.

WE have received the first numbers of the "Call" the new weekly published at Ft. Wayne. Each number contains a few illustrations, and it is a spicy, able paper. But it is getting to be a question as to how many more papers that thriving city can stand.

The most obstinate cases of Catarrh and Hay Fever are cured by the use of Elys' Cream Balm, the only agreeable remedy. Price 50 cents. 39-2w.

WHAT will friend Glasgow, and other friends of a high protective tariff say to following articles on the subject of the proposed tariff on woolen goods? They are both from republican papers, although a high tariff is a republican pet measure. The Chicago Tribune says: "The enormity of this vote is striking, even in this day of craze for increased taxation. The present tax on men's and women's woolen or worsted underclothes, including women's and children's stockings, is thirty-five cents on each dollar's worth, but these 130 representatives voted to increase this tax to eighty-five cents on the dollar. At present the women taking $2 to a store to buy hosiery has to take seventy cents additional to pay the tax on the goods; but if this bill for which these 130 representatives voted becomes a law, she will have to take with her $1.70 to pay the tax on $2 worth of hosiery.

There is not a pretense of any kind that the government needs any revenue from this tax; the treasury is so overflowing that the secretary is buying up the public bonds at the rate of $10,000,000 a month, and yet from pure wantoness of power these representatives deliberately vote to impose a tax of eighty-five cents on every dollar's worth of woolen hosiery and knit goods used by the people. We commend this to the attention of the people of Iowa, Illinois, Indiana, Michigan, Wisconsin and Minnesota, who have to elect representatives to congress this fall."

Upon the same subject the Cincinnati Gazette, another leading republican paper, said in its issue of July 12: "The duty which they intend to fix is equal to 85 per cent. They claim that they need it in order to be able to sustain their manufacture; therefore it follows that they add it all to the price of their goods. The same rate is levied on the packages and shipping expenses, and the dealer has to have a commission and profit on the duty the same as on any other cost, all of which makes it easily amount to 100 per cent., which is added to the price of home goods. Thus every farmer, laborer lumberer, every worker in iron, wood, wool, cotton, every man, woman and child who wears knit stockings, undershirts, drawers or any other knit goods must pay double price for them. One of the arguments for this was the duty on wool and woolens: but a large part of the knit goods are all cotton, and the American knit goods that profess wool are more than half cotton. Yet they claim 85 per cent. because of wool. But the value of the product of all knit goods for 1870 was only $37,010,729 not a fiftieth part of the farming industry alone which is taxed at so high a rate on its wear of these goods. The capital invested is not a twentieth part of that invested in the iron industry, all of whose laborers have to pay this bonus on these articles for themselves and families."

THE Reading Telephone has been enlarged to a six-column quarto, and its circulation greatly increased. Bro. Marvin gets up a good paper, and we are pleased to know that he is succeeding.

Local and Miscellaneous.

—Judge Lowry Monday evening.

—Quite a number of our people are at the Waterloo fair this week.

—Hacks are running from here to Waterloo every day of the fair.

—Ladies, don't forget Miss Woolsey when you want any shirring done.

—R. H. Weamer and family, of Butler, were visiting here over Sunday.

Mr. Snell is building him a new house in the south part of town, on Main street.

—Miss Minnie Werrbaugh, of Franklin, was in town last week visiting friends.

—At the teacher's examination last Saturday, over forty applicants were present.

—Kiblinger is spending a part of the week at the fair at Waterloo, as is also F. B. Straw.

—The "Jackson Division, L. S." will sell reduced rate tickets to Waterloo during the fair.

—Johnny Gossage has been at home for a few days taking a lay off, and giving the weary type a rest.

—Judge Lowry will speak in Garrett, Saturday evening, of this week. Give him a full turnout.

—Sam Weaver took his big jennet and her colt to Waterloo, but we have not heard as to the premium yet.

—News came to town last week of the death of Samuel Puffenberger. Cause of his death not learned.

Miss Emma Stahl is at home for a short time visiting her parents. She expects to return to Ohio before long.

—Let the good people of Waterloo and vicinity give a full house to Judge Lowry next Wednesday evening, October 11.

—Mrs. McNagny, of Columbia City, known to so many of our citizens, has gone to Fargo, Dakota, to join her husband.

—Jacob Dermott and wife of Concord, took the west bound train No. 2 Sunday, for a visit to friends at Bell Plain, Iowa.

Mrs. Mattie E. Johnson, Elkhart, was cured of weakness and a tendency to dropsy and heart troubles by Brown's Iron Bitters.

—Extra trains run on the Jackson road this week. Is goes north at 7:40 in the morning. Half fare on all trains to Waterloo.

—Ninety-nine tickets to Fort Wayne were sold for the forenoon train on the Jackson road last Thursday. Six were sold on the early freight.

—The Lake Shore road took formal possession of the Jackson road last week. The new name is "Jackson Division of the Lake Shore Road."

—Judge Lowry will speak in Butler next Tuesday evening, Oct. 10. Tell all your friends to come and hear the judge discuss the issues of the day.

Miss Zora Swarts of Waterloo, who has been canvassing for the book, "Progress of the Ages," made us a brief visit last week accompanied by her sister Angila.

—The Columbia City Post says that more than 200 tickets were sold at Auburn, for the noon train that brought visitors to the reunion of the 44th there last week.

Monday evening, Oct. 9, Judge Lowry will address the people of Auburn and vicinity. Come out and bring your friends, your wives and your sweethearts.

—Sam. Beck, of Waterloo, is now buying and shipping all the poultry he can get. He pays 7 cents a pound for chickens and ducks, and 40 to 50 cents apiece for geese.

—Will Ryan and Mr. Cass went to Tiffin Sunday evening on the B. & O. No. 1, to do the painting on the B. & O. elevator at that place. Auburn men are becoming popular in the Buckeye state.

—John Beugnot and lady, of Cecil, Ohio, have returned from a pleasant visit to Sunny France. Mrs. Beugnot had wretched health on the journey home, but is now quite well again.—Ft. Wayne News.

See announcements for speeches by Judge Lowry and Hon. D. D. Moody in this week's paper, and don't forget to mention them to such of your friends as are not so fortunate as to take the COURIER.

—Mr. and Mrs. Josiah Imhoff, of Waterloo, Mr. and Mrs. P. B. Nimmons and Mr. and Mrs. Maxwell, of Wilmington, were among those in attendance at the funeral of Mrs. Ezra Dickinson last Sunday.

—J. J. Becher, of Richland, was in town last week. The people in his neighborhood expect to build a new church on Mr. Brechbill's farm near there, next spring. It is intended to be free to all religious denominations.

My daughter and myself, great sufferers from Catarrh, have been cured by Elys' Cream Balm. My sense of smell restored and health greatly improved. C. M. Stanley, dealer in boots in boots and shoes, Ithica, N. Y. 39-2w.

W. D. Owen, editor Logansport Saturday Night says: "Brown's Iron Bitters is the most beneficial medicine I have ever taken."

—Morell Bros. are up to their ears in work at their foundry, and are scarcely able to keep up with their orders. It would surprise some of our citizens to know from what distance some of their work comes.

—The ladies' social connected with the M. E. church will be entertained by the ladies of the of the first section, at the lecture room next Wednesday afternoon and evening. Supper from half-past five to seven. All are cordially invited. SEC'Y.

—Our old friend Mr. Werrbaugh, of Franklin township, placed us under obligations for a nice lot of sweet potatoes last week. Some of them were real curiosities. Having grown near some tomotoes, the tubers have in some cases taken the shape of the tomatoes themselves.

—Morell Bros., Auburn's live foundry man, have put a new blower in D. McNabb's stave and heading factory at the junction. It is one of their own invention and works like a charm. It is intended to draw away the sawdust and shavings from the machine, which it does perfectly.

—Abright, the jeweler, has one of the finest stocks of goods in his line ever brought into the county. Husbands who are saving up their change to buy a present about the holidays, should call in and see his goods. He can put your gift in a safe place and keep it till you want it.

—H. L. Sheets will sell his thresher engine, separator, clover huller, horse power, and such other articles as go with these at the same time and place, as the sale of his father's personal property. Parties who wish a good engine and thresher at a fair price should attend the Sheets sale, Oct. 14.

—The following from the Perry township correspondence of the Fort Wayne Dispatch don't explain itself as well as we could wish: "It is reported that Julia Surfus will soon move to the city of Auburn and save the Auburn fellow so many trips out into the country." We wait for explanations.

—We have just received a communication from T. C. Mays, which will appear next week, as we know our readers will be glad to hear from him. He is still connected with the Sentinel-Star at Hot Springs, but is living out in the country two miles. He raised 900 bushels of corn this year. It was planted June 7, and is now husked and in the crib. That's what we call good time.

—List of unclaimed letters remaining in the Auburn postoffice for the week ending Oct. 3: Mrs. Mary Bell, Miss Millie Bickell, Charley Hackett, J. O. Henckard, Miss Sarah Erlston, Mr. Edward Eckright, Sames C. George, B. F. Meyers, J. A. Riley, Mrs. Jacob Row, M. Rowley, John Simonton, Mrs. Nettie Smith, Wm. F. Wyatt, Miss Mattie Wagoner.

G. W. GORDON, P. M.

—Samuel Pepple, one of our former teachers, is now in Mexico. After running and an engine for several years on the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe road, he went to the City of Mexico and is now working on a contract for building a railroad. He has under his charge several hundred Mexican laborers. Sam. says his friends ought to see him in his buckskin breeches and Mexican hat. We hope his business in the land of the Aztecs may be successful.

—W. H. Riley has been in town for several days canvassing for books. He is selling "Women of Mormondom," and the "Literary Encyclopedia." The latter is a work of rare interest, and contrins a short biograpy of nearly every American author and a few extracts from his best writings. It is a literary treat. Both are good works. Mr. R. wants agents to assist him. Applications can be made to him or to the publisher, C. G. G. Paine, 68 Seitz Block, Detroit, Mich.

—E. P. Dickinson, so long a typo in the office of the Waterloo Press, was called to Cleveland last week by a telegram from the mail department announcing his appointment as route agent on the Lake Shore road. Ned is a young man who has toiled hard for a livelihood and worked his way up through all the grades of a printing office until he has become a first-rate workman. We congratulate him on his good fortune and hope it may be a successful venture.

—Zimmerman & Co. have bought the old store building opposite the old Auburn hotel, and will move it to their shops in the west part of town, where it will become a part of their growing establishment. They have pushed the manufacture of church desks until it has extended into quite a large business. In addition to the seats in the seats in the M. E. church mentioned by us a week or two ago, they have just seated several other similar rooms, one being a church near Monroeville, east of Fort Wayne. They make a nice seat, and we can recommend them to those who need such work, as honest and reliable, as well as trusty workmen.

—Alfred Weirick, of Fairfield, will sell you goods as cheap and as good as you can get anywhere. tf.

OBITUARY.

DICKINSON—Mary was born near Marietta, Washington county, Ohio, March 8th 1810, died at her home in Auburn Ind., Sept. 28th, 1882, aged 72 years 6 months and 20 days.

August 10, 1826, she was united in marriage to Thomas Colwell, who died Sept. 7, 1844. Of the nine children of this union four sons and two daughters are still living. She was married to Ezra Dickinson, her now bereaved husband, July 7, 1878. For about forty years she had been a member of the Methodist Episcopal church. The church with all its interests and benevolent purposes had an exalted place in her esteem. All the means of grace were greatly valued by her, yet of late years the disabilities of age and disease prevented attendance upon the means of grace as often as she desired. Her testimonies always indicated that she was very clear in her experience of the power of Jesus to regenerate the heart and satisfy the craving of the spirit. The one theme upon which she loved to meditate and converse was that of salvation. During her illness, protracted through a number of weeks, she suffered greatly at times, but this served to increase rather than diminish her faith in Christ. Again and again she was raised to ecstasy of joy by a sense of saving and sustaining grace, and by the testimony of the Holy Ghost, that if her "earthly home of this tabernacle were dissolved she had a building of God, a house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens." Her death was sudden, giving no time to summon her friends about her and speak a parting word, but it found her ready, and was but the gate of heaven to her waiting soul. In all the relations of neighbor, wife and mother she was kind and faithful. To her family and friends she has bequeathed the consoling and ennobling example of the power and fullness and joy of salvation by faith in Jesus. Her funeral services, conducted by Rev. W. H. Daniel, were held at the M. E. church last Sabbath, and were attended by a large concourse of people. D.

Catholic Fair.

We call attention to the Catholic church fair, which will be held in the room just west of the postoffice, the week beginning Oct. 16. Its object is a worthy one, as the funds raised will be applied to assist the church. Our people should give it a liberal patronage, as they have made no calls for help for a number of years, and have not even held the customary mite societies or socials. Everything will be done to divest the meeting of anything like a sectarian or political character, and many new and pleasant features will be introduced. Among them will be the series of addresses by several of our prominent citizens during the fair. These will be given, one each evening, by the following gentlemen: D. D. Moody, D. Y. Husselman, W. H. Dills, E. D. Hartman, O. Z. Hubbell, and R. Wes McBride. This will be a new departure in meetings of this kind, and will go far to make the fair a success. Let all prepare to attend and give the society a liberal patronage.

88th Indiana.

This famous regiment will hold its first reunion in Auburn, Oct. 10, 1882. the regiment participated in the batties of Perrysville, Stone River, Chickamauga, Atlanta, Chattanooga, Bentonville, and many others, and were among those who went on the famous "March to the Sea." Charles Beugnot, Thomas H. Tomlinson, Gen. J. L. Blair, Capt. E. B. Cutter, Joseph Bainier, Geo DeLong, and Captain Silvers are among the members living in this county who are on the general committee of arrangements. Our people should do all in their power to make the meeting a pleasant one.

Old Settlers at the Fair.

It is now decided by the officers of the Northeastern Indiana fair, that all old settlers holding tickets for the fair, can use them on any day of the week, and that those who did not use their tickets last year can use them yet, so all who have not yet used these tickets will have them honored if presented at the gate. Old settlers who still wish to procure tickets can get them of John Batt, at Waterloo, or by applying to me. W. H. DILLS, Sec'y.

CORRESPONDENCE.

WATERLOO.

Mr. and Mrs. B. F. Kennedy spent Sunday of last week visiting Mrs. K's. parents, Mr. and Mrs. R. Ettinger, in Angola.

Miss Kate Kingley came home from Valparaiso last week. She has been attending school there during the summer, but will teach this winter.

Miss Maggie Bateson has a fine stock of new goods. Call and see them.

While you are at the fair, don't fail to see Miss Bateson's stock of millinery and fancy goods. All new and of the latest pattern.

E. P. Dickinson went to Cleveland last Friday, having learned that he had been appointed a mail agent on the Lake Shore road.

The Lake Shore officers were here last week and located the union depot. It will stand on the north side of the L. S. track. The freight-house will be on the opposite side where the "Y" now is. The "Y" will be changed and another made on the west side. The passenger house is to be completed in thirty days. The coal chute is to be removed from Butler to this place.

Mr. and Mrs. John Leas and son, D. L. Leas, went to Indianapolis last week to attend the fair.

Mr. and Mrs. C. C. Boyer, of Franklin, have a bran new baby.

Special trains are run on both roads during the fair. One special from each way on the Lake Shore.

MARRIED.—At the residence of the bride's father, Freeman Kelley, Sept. 28, by Rev. F. F. Christine, Mr. Robers A. Haverstock, of Franklin township, and Miss Amy R. Kelley, of Smithfield, both of DeKalb county, Ind.

The fair at Waterloo, opened on Monday with a large number of entries in nearly every department, and at last accounts was moving off finely. Many of the displays made were better than ever before. The entries in stock departments are good. In the way of machinery, there is an unusual amount on exhibition. J. A. Boozer is in charge of this department, as usual, and has the little knoll covered and alive with all sorts of implements. The mechanics hall itself is largely taken, up by other displays that have been crowded into it for want of room elsewhere. Mrs. Simon Dickinson has a large exhibit of flowers there. F. B. Straw, of Auburn, and other parties, have a fine display of organs and pianos. In Floral Hall, Fleming of Auburn, and others have the central pyramid ranked full of choice flowers. R. Wes McBride has as usual a large collection of fossils, stone implements minerals and other curious articles. Mr. Straub, of Huntertown, a young man only sixteen years of age has a nice lot of paintings of his own skillful work. J. & J. A. Shull & Co, have a fine display of millinery and fancy goods. Bassett & Maxson, are on hand with a splendid lot of jewelry and silverware. Miss Fannie Kellerman, of New Buffalo, Mich., has the usual fine display of dried and cut flowers most tastily arranged, and has added a new and pleasing feature by putting up the word "Waterloo" in large letters formed of choice everlasting flowers. It might be in order to add that Mrs. Chamberlain is in charge of Floral Hall, having Mrs. B. F. Kennedy for assistant. The children's department has been revived, and is well filled with neatly worked articles, mainly in needlework, prepared by the deft little fingers of young misses and boys. The agricultural department is good. The show of vegetables was never better, nearly all the productions of the soil being represented. Apples and other fruits are not as plenty as usual, but the display of canned fruit is excellent. H. D. Armstrong has a separate exhibit to show the agricultural productions of the great far west, especiall those of Nebraska and Colorado. His display is splendid, and many will be pleased to see that even apples can be raised in that prairie country, as he has some very fine ones in his collection. The usual number of tents, booths, candy stands and eating stands are to be found on the ground, so that the wants of the inner man are likely to be well cared for. Quite a number of trotting horses are present, and the indications are that the races will all, or nearly all fill. The St. John's Brass Band was on the grounds Tuesday and made good music. Quite a number of hacks are licensed and running into the grounds, including those from Auburn, and several of the Waterloo rigs. Among the latter, we see that John Koons has two, and is doing a good business.

BUTLER.

Another cheap excursion to Detroit from Columbia City, on the 12.

Mr. Garrison editor of the Record, is ill with the typhoid malaria.

Rev. Lilly of the U. B. church takes the place of Rev. Baldwin.

Jacob Fetters has his new barn nearly completed, near the old one recently burned.

Tim Kinsely's new dwelling is assuming shapely proportions. It will be one of the best in town.

George Boots is making some important improvments on his farm.

Rev. D. F. Kain was up to Waterloo this week a day or two looking over the display on the fair grounds.

SYRACUSE.

DIED, at her home here, on Sunday, October 1, 1882, of typhoid fever, Mrs. Mary Miles, wife of E. W. Miles. She was born April 8, 1831, and was consequently 51 years, 5 months, and 23 days old. Mrs. Miles was a lady well known here and greatly respected for her good qualities, and leaves a large circle of friends.

Frank Miles, who has been working some time in Chatham, Canada, is expected home in time to attend the funeral of his mother.

Joe Henderson is as jolly as ever, and the recent addition to his family don't seem to discourage him in the least.

Alvin Blair has tried his hand at decorative painting. He has touched up the interior of the pump house, and especially the engine, which looks as if it had just come out of a band box. He has ordered from Morrell Bros. in Auburn, some improvements for his handcar, which will add greatly to its running qualities.

Mr. Saulsbury, our gentlemanly agent here, expects to be ordered to Milford Junction in a short time, and we shall have a new man from La Paz in his place.

Mr. Costin came up from Garrett on the construction train Monday, and put a car load of steel rails on the side track for use near here. The new rails are now laid from Chicago to this place.

Dr. Ihrig and J. A. Kindig have bought the land that includes Conkling Hill, and will improve it next year, for the benefit of pleasure seekers.

D. A. Conkling, who formerly resided near Butler, DeKalb county, has returned from Iowa, where he has lately resided at Atlantic. He intends to make his home in Syracuse.

Mr. Colwell went to Auburn last week to attend the funeral of his mother, Mrs. Ezra Dickinson, and returned Monday morning.

Pete Finnegan is going to move to South Chicago, as his duties will keep him most of the time at that end of the road.

The B. & O. are getting some fine switch ties here now and taking them to South Chicago for use there.

The company have shipped quite an amount of ice here lately.

The B. & O. depot is newly painted and looks gay.

ST. JOE.

Doc McClaran and Wm. Leighty took in the Fort Wayne fair Friday last.

Elias has returned.

Two car loads of stock were shipped from here Saturday last.

Frank Seehler and Mary Widney were made one last Thursday.

J. D. Leighty's residence is about completed.

School commences November 20. C. H. Brown will teach the high classes while Mrs. Batt will have control of the little ones.

The B. & O. folks have commenced the foundation for a new bridge across the St. Joe, a much needed improvement.

Ed. Tiffany is happy, happy, happier, and all because its a boy of the usual weight.

Marion Dermott thinks he has one of the liveliest pieces of humanity that that corner can afford. Its a boy and turns the beam at 9 pounds.

Married October first by George W. Woodcox, at the residence of the bride's father, Mr. Ralph Cole, of Goshen, Ind., and Miss Laurinda Wineland, of St. Joe, Ind.

C. Keller, living one mile west of St. Joe had a lot of turkeys stolen a short time ago. Mr. Keller informs us that the fowls were of a peculiar breed, being of a bronze and blue color. If any one can give any information of such turkey being shipped from any station the same will be liberally paid, for it is thought that the parties who did the stealing are known, but a little more evidence is wanted. WHAT MIGHT HAVE BEEN.

IDA EATON.

O, have you weighed the value of a day,
But one of many on whose mighty tide
Our lives are swept out to the years that hide
The secrets that existence doth not tell,
Though for the treasure trove we labor well?

Are all your thoughts bestowed upon your toil?
Have you neglected, in your greed for gain,
To hearken unto Time's harmonic strain,
So rife with warning when your life may cease—
So charged with briefness of your fitful lease?

Ah! have you wondered as I wonder now—
If age shall ever leave upon your face
The symbol of his presence, that we trace
On snow, and falling lustre in the eye—
What past achievements one could then descry?

There might be days when Promise fleetly led
Our weary footsteps o'er the hills of care,
Pointing to lotus-lands, where treasures rare
Were ours for sweet possession, did we keep
Our fair resolve that effort should not sleep.

There might be deeds to mitigate regret
For vanished years when youth bequeathed us love,
And faith in creeds on earth and far above;
There might be helping words to those held dear,
Or harvest-fields with harvests dead and sere!

Aye, there might be! We make our own decree
In much of life's unfailing weal or wo;
We freight the moments as they come and go
With our endeavor, be it small or great,
And haply mourn the measures when too late.

O, let us not drift onward unto death,
Bequeathing to the earth a useless life,
But will the brain an heirship unto strife;
For purpose unto life is as the sun
Unto the day until his race is run.

COURSE OF TRUE LOVE.

Miss Majendie stares thoughtfully beneath her broad brimmed summer hat. She is sitting on the beach, and every little while she makes a sweeping little curve in the wet sand with her parasol, scarcely aware of the fact herself, she is thinking so deeply.

It is not at all Miss Majendie's usual custom to be sitting so quietly by herself, so let us take advantage of the occasion and find out what she is like.

In the first place, she is tall and graceful; we are quite sure of that, even though she is sitting on the ground. Just now you may declare her a very thoughtful and sober young lady, though you may change your mind, perhaps, half an hour from now.

The face is straight and fair, and delicately cut. The eyes are a deep wine-brown; the dark, fringed lids, have a way of drooping over them every few moments, which is very bewildering. The mouth is small and rose-red, half inclining to be always smiling, half inclined to take a haughty curve. Altogether, there is an air about Miss Cecilia Majendie which is bewitching.

At last Miss Majendie wakes to a realization of the fact that the bathers are leaving the beach, and that the dinner hour is drawing nigh.

As she rises to her feet, preparatory to sauntering toward the Arctic house, she finds that the spot on which she stands is surrounded with innumerable C's, which she had traced in the sand with her parasol.

Feeling half-vexed with herself, Cecilia deliberately steps on them to obliterate all signs of their having been there. The disinterested observer may think the letters were scrawled there because C is the initial letter of Cecilia's name; but the disinterested observer is apt to be very much mistaken.

If Carrol Whiting had seen those letters I think he would have been quite conceited enough to declare that C stood for Carrol and not Cecilia.

The Arctic house is certainly not a misnomer, for the dining-room of the hotel is deliciously cool and breezy, notwithstanding the sultriness of the day without.

There has been a new arrival—Miss Majendie can see that at a glance as she enters; for the guests of the Arctic have an expectant, wide-awake look generally absent in this dull summer resort, where the greatest sensations, always looked forward to with boundless joy, are weekly picnics or the arrivals of the mails.

Carrol Whiting, of all men, handsome, careless, distinguished as ever! Cecilia bites her rosebud underlip with vexation, and wonders what brought him here now, when he knows how much her aunt, Mrs. Carmichael, is set against him.

Carrol makes an involuntary step forward as she comes up; but she sweeps calmly by, without so much as looking at him.

She wishes to show him that she is very much displeased with him, indeed—to punish him for tagging after her here. Besides, Mrs. Carmichael is watching them intently, anything but pleased at seeing Carrol Whiting at the Arctic. Cecilia chats gaily with her neighbor, a vivacious little Frenchman, while Carrol glowers fiercely at them from the other side of the table, to the intense amusement of Cecilia's friends, who know, or think they know, all about this charming little romance from real life being played before them.

Mrs. Carmichael is highly delighted to think that Cis is commencing to show a little sense at last—that she has given that penniless upstart, Carrol Whiting, the cut direct. For Mrs. Carmichael is very rich, and Cecilia Majendie is sole heiress to the boundless Carmichael acres and endless bank account.

"The course of true love never did run smooth," it is said, and this truth poor Cecilia learns, when Mrs. Carmichael discovers her penchant for Carrol Whiting.

Mrs. Carmichael declares, with cold, cutting displeasure on her fair, aristocratic face, that she will cut Cis off with a shilling, if she marries Carrol Whiting. Then she dismisses the subject without further words, and takes her niece with her to the seaside.

I suppose if Cis Majendie had been the heroine of a novel she would have flown to her lover on the wings of love and married him on the spot, not bestowing one mercenary thought on the cool million of dollars she was leaving behind.

But I must be candid, however ashamed I feel of my heroine, and say she does nothing of the kind. Being a modern nineteenth century girl, she has a very sensible idea of the value of "filthy lucre."

She loves Carrol dearly, but she loves the good things of this life also! She means to keep her lover and she means to have the money, too, if that be possible.

After dinner Mrs. Carmichael retires to her room for her accustomed nap, and Cis goes out for a game of croquet. She knows that Carrol will follow her, but is apparently deeply absorbed in an interested contemplation of the stripes on her mallet when he comes up.

"Miss Majendie," he says, in a low voice, full of jealous pain and suppressed displeasure.

"Why, Mr. Whiting, is that really you," says Cis, lifting her exquisite vivant face, and flashing those bewildering eyes at him. "This is indeed a surprise!" in an abominably formal tone.

"And not an agreeable surprise, either it seems," says Carrol, furiously gnawing his blond mustache.

As if mentally debating the question, Cis gazes thoughtfully at the dainty boot, peeping from beneath the white flounces of her dress, but says nothing.

"Who is that impudent fellow over there staring at us?" says Carrol, irrelevantly, growing more furiously jealous every moment.

Cis looks at him suprisedly.

"That is Mr. Perry," she says, sweetly. "He is just too charming for anything. Very rich, too. Don't you think him handsome? Would you like an introduction?"

"No!" bursts forth Carrol to both these questions, conceiving on the spot a deadly hatred for the young man so favored by the gods. "He looks like a conceited prig, and I wouldn't know him for worlds! Cissy," less excitedly and very miserable! "you don't like him so very much do you?"

Cis deliberates, while Carrol stands before her like an anxious culprit, every moment expecting his death-warrant.

"Well—no," she says, slowly. "I never said I liked him very much, did I?" Then she laughs softly." Carrol Carrol what a silly goose you are?"

Carrol gazes at her rapturously, and looks as if she had paid him an unparalleled compliment.

"And now, please go away,' says Cis, cruelly dashing his sudden happiness. If aunty sees us together, I'm sure I don't know what'll happen. Besides, every, one is looking at us, thinking, no doubt, that you are a new specimen of the genus lunatic. Mr. Perry has heard every word you said. I'm positive."

"Mr. Perry be hanged!" muttered Carrol, striding disconsolately down toward the beach.

"Poor Carrol!" thinks Cis, tenderly, "I can't imagine what he finds to love in mercenary little me. How imprudent of him to come here! He may spoil all with his impetuous jealously. But I won't marry him, without aunty's consent!" closing the rosy red lips very decidedly.

Courage, Carrol! Mrs. Carmichael's consent is to come much sooner than you expect, and in a manner you do not dream of.

The very next day Carrol is strolling along the beach, feeling very ill-used indeed, and thinking it would be a great relief if he could only hate the mercenary girl he loves so much.

But, somehow, he has only loving thoughts of the girl who had stolen his heart, though the knowledge of how almost hopeless his love is, makes him very miserable.

Mrs Carmichael's party are bathing, and as Carrol watches Cis, he thinks she looks like a sea nymph.

Poor Carrol is very far gone indeed, and does not see any incongruity in a sea nymph wearing a baggy bathing suit.

Then something happens which might have ended in a sorrowful tragedy. Mrs. Carmichael ventures a trifle too far out alone, and is immediately thrown off her feet by the current.

She utters a low wail of terror, which seems to paralyze the rest of the party. Only Carrol has presence of mind enough to dash into the water and bring her out, almost unconscious, to the land.

Of course he is lionized and made much of at the Arctic. Though driven to desparation by their attentions, he declares again and again that it is only what any one of Mrs. Carmichael's party would have done the next moment if he had permitted them the opportunity.

But, though he hates to be praised, he is in the seventh heaven of delight when Cis takes him by the hand, with grateful tears in her dark lashes.

Of course you can guess the sequel. Mrs. Carmichael summons her niece and Carrol the next day, and declares that if Cis doesn't, within three months, marry the man who saved her life, not a penny of her money money shall she have.

And our mercenary little heroine tells Carrol that she can't bear to lose so much money because of the slight incumbrance he will be, and so—she marries him.

Dead-Letter Laws in Michigan

Detroit Free Press.

A curious hotel advertisement recalls two of the dead-letter laws on the Michigan statute books. They read as follows: "If any person who has arrived at the age of discretion, shall profanely curse or damn or swear by the name of God, Jesus Christ, or the Holy Ghost, he shall, on conviction thereof before any Justice of the Peace, be punished by a fine not exceeding $5 nor less than $1; but no such prosecution shall be sustained unless it shall be commenced within five days after the commission of such offense." "If any person shall willfully blaspheme the holy name of God by cursing or contumeliously reproaching God, he shall be punished by imprisoment in the county jail not more than six months, or by fine not exceeding $50." This would seem to be a warning that no guests can come to that hotel and swear without being fined and boarded at the county jail. This is not the only law on the statute book which is so habitually violated that many people will be surprised at its existence. "If any person shall keep or knowingly suffer to be kept in any house, building, yard, garden, or dependency therof by him actually used or occupied, any table for the purpose of playing at billiards for hire, gain, or reward, or shall for hire, gain or reward suffer any person to resort to the same for the purpose of playing at billiards, cards, or dice," every person offending shall forfeit $100 for every such offense. The same language is applied to the keeping of an alley for "the playing of ninepins or any other like game, whether to be played with one or more balls, or with nine or any number of pins, for hire, gain or reward." There is scarcely a town of any size in Michigan where this law is not violated, and the debt of the State might have been paid by the collection of the penalty for its violation. Another law declares that "it shall not be lawful for the driver of any carriage used for the conveyance of any passengers for hire to leave the horses attached thereto without making such horses fast, with a sufficient halter, rope, or chain, or without some suitable person to take the charge or guidance of them, so as to prevent their running." The penalty for this offense is $20. But who ever knew a hackman or an omnibus driver to tie his horses? There is a fine of $1,000 as a penalty for "any person who shall willfully or negligently set fire to any woods, prairie or grounds not his own property, or shall willfully or negligently set fire to any woods, prairie or grounds not his own property, or shall willfully or negligently permit any fire to pass from his own woods, prairies, or grounds to the injury or distruction of the property of any other person." Yet all the destructive forest fires of Michigan have been caused by a disobedience of this statute.

Rosa Bonheur's Last Great Work

Rosa Bonheur is nearly sixty years of age, and the only woman without royal blood flowing in her veins who is the possessor or chevalier of three orders, namely; the Legion of Honor, the Order of Leopold of Belgium, and Commander of the Royal Order of Isabella the Catholic of Spain. Her last picture, "The Lion at Home," was sold to a gentleman in Fice for $51,500. Vanderbilt offered $60,000 for it after its sale. It is now on exhibition at a gallery in London, and a correspondent of the Boston Herald says of it:

It represents a family group of lions painted life size. In the foreground there are three young cubs playing or sleeping in close proximity to the mother. They are as pretty as young kittens, and, in the graceful attitudes the artist has drawn them, look quite as harmless. The lioness is quietly resting, and, while apparently aware of the gambols her little family is indulging in, there is a suggestion in the eyes of some fear, that may become more than a passing anxiety, for her offspring. The lion is a noble specimen of his race, and has served before as the model of a picture now very well known—"An Old Monarch." The animals are [illegible] drawn, and with the tawny hides of their bodies showing with telling effect against a dark greenish background, appear startlingly life-like. The cacti and aloes that form a thicket in the background were transported from Nubia, and the reddish earth painted in the foreground was brought from Upper Egypt especially for Mlle. Bonheur. The lions, too, were captured expressly for this picture in Nubia, and cost Rosa Bonheur originally £800, and, during the year they were in her possession, they were maintained at the cost of a guinea, or a little more than $5 a day. It is said that, after they learned to know the artist, who went to visit them very often, and took the greatest pains to teach them to know her, she used to feed them and come very close to the bars of the cage, and finally they suffered her to feed them from her own hands."

A Ghastly Story.

The ghastly stories that are coming to light in consequence of the exposure of the methods of disposing of the bodies of paupers in the Philadelphia poor house seem almost incredible. The man who engaged in the nefarious business now seeing the light of day in the Philadelphia Press is Harrison Booth, for eighteen years an official in the institution. "About five years ago," says one of his subordinates who tells the story that Booth used to relate with great glee as indicative of his shrewdness, "an old woman died in the hospital, and as the runner could not find her friends, her body was taken to the University for dissection. A few days afterward the woman's husband, or some relative, hearing that she was dead, came to the office to reclaim the body. Booth swore and stuck to it that the body was buried. A fuss was kicked up, as is often the case, and he went to the University and could only find the head and a part of the trunk. She had been dissected. He put the relatives off, and brought the head back to the post-mortem room next to the greenhouse. How he grinned when he told us that he got from the pits an arm from one body, a leg from another, and patched up a corpse to suit the head. He laughed when he said that he had sewed the different parts together with the aid of adhesive plaster, and had stuck a broom-stick in the skull and passed it down the trunk to steady the head. The frill of the shroud was then pinned close up under the neck, and the job was complete. It lay straight in the coffin, and though the relations were not fully satisfied, Booth talked them into taking it away for burial. After he told this he said that he was 'a better doctor than any of the regulars, for I put bodies together, while the others can only cut people up.'"

A Husband's Christmas Present.

Harper's Drawer for October.

A gentleman sauntered into a large dry goods store in the city of L—a few days before Christmas, and remarked casually to the attentive clerk: "I want something for a Christmas present for my wife. What have you got?"

The clerk suggested various things, but the customer seemed not quite satisfied.

At last he asked, "Have you cotton cloth?"

"Certainly, sir."

"I need some new shirts. How much cloth does it take for a shirt?"

"About four yards."

"Well let's see. I want eight new shirts. Eight times four are thirty-two. I'll take thirty-two yards."

The gratitude of the wife at receiving as a Christmas present the cloth for eight new shirts for her husband can be better imagined than described.

SIGHTS IN BELGIUM.

The Hard Lot of the Women and the Dogs.

Correspondence of Cincinnati Commercial

And nobody in this region seems to work any but women and dogs. The "harvest hands," as they are called at home, were, with the fewest exceptions, women. They were working like oxen. In shape they are short and wide out. Centuries of carrying heavy burdens upon their heads and shoulders have stunted their height and broadened them out. This minute—5:30 in the morning—at Cologne, I hear the measured tramp of soldiers in the street outside. I look out. A squad of good-sized, well-formed young soldiers are passing with a Lieutenant. They hold their heads up in a spirited way, and march along limber and elastic. Immediately behind them follow three tawny, squatty women, carrying upon their heads loads which look awful. It is enough to crush their skulls in, one would think. The picture tells the whole story of life among the lower classes in this country. It is a barbarism as complete as reigns among the Indian savages of America, where the squaws do the drudgery and the men fight and hunt. Men in uniform fairly swarm. They waddle about the country railway stations in caps green, white, red, blue and black—fat, lazy-looking fellows—while out in the adjoining fields women lug and tug at the bundles of hay and grain, and bend their backs in the turnip-fields, plying heavy hoes, horny-handed and stiff, with weary, weather-beaten, seamed, stupid faces. It is not an agreeable sight, or an encouraging one for the future progress of one of the most civilized nations in the world. Everywhere are soldiers, soldiers, soldiers, marching, drilling, or standing sentinel. I told you of those we saw before 6 o'clock this morning. At 7 we went out to look at some sort of ancient rubbish, and a splendid cavalry company passed us, full a hundred strong. Horse and rider seemed all one piece, and the animals' feet seemed to move by clock-work, so perfectly trained were they. It was a fine sight. But the most magnificently disciplined standing army in the world is maintained at a cost which cannot fail to tell on those people in the years to come. The men are drawn off to fight, and the women do the men's work. At this day in Germany women blacksmiths are not very uncommon. What is to become of the refinements of social life, the sweet sacredness of home? But I felt sorrier, if possible, for the poor little dogs than even for the women. They have a dog's life indeed. They are not very big—no larger than the common despised "yellow dog" of America—yet two of them draw loads which seem heavy enough for a horse. The little things are harnessed underneath in a sort of long, heavy barrow upon wheels; this holds the load. A man or woman holds the handles of the thing, and the dogs trot along beneath. Their ribs stick out, ill-padded with flesh, as though they were not very well fed. Their panting sides, lolling tongues, and sorrowful, appealing eyes, would touch the heart of a stone. Everything hereabouts, too, seems done by sheer brute strength. There is no saving of labor, either by machinery, or by the application of common sense. In the field we saw no American agricultural machinery, as in England and Scotland. Where in America a load of baggage, trunks, valises and boxes, would be piled high upon a dray or great truck, and transferred at one gulp for short distances, here your porter takes it upon his head or arm, as the case may be, and lugs it off slowly and painfully, one piece at a time. We have had more fuss and trouble to keep from losing our baggage, coming from London to Cologne, than we should have had at home in going from New York to San Francisco and back again. Strange country this, where women and dogs do the hard work, and where they have no checks for baggage. Stockings are knit by hand instead of by machinery, and in Antwerp and Brussels the women are so industrious that they knit running along the streets going errands.

A Burmese Romance.

London Globe.

In the late King's time his favorite daughter was the Tsalin Princess, a girl of great beauty, and of a most amiable disposition. All foreign ladies used to go to her, and to her only; for, besides being the highest princess in the land, her kindness and affability made her the most universally loved member of the Royal family. When the late King died, her late charming mother's rival, Queen Allaynandau, having practically seized all power and authority, the Tsalin Princess was imprisoned, and so cruelly treated by order of the present Queen, herself daughter of Allaynandau, that she fell dangerously sick. Left without any care, and scarcely any food, death seemed to be the only deliverer on hand. But Providence watched over the princess. A high official, remotely related to her, and one of the foreign ladies who had been most kindly treated by her formerly, were most active in trying to find for her the means of escape; but the guards were too strict and too many. While her friends were "scheming and considering," one of her own female servants, living in her town, fell sick near her and suddenly died. Another female servant of hers, taking advantage of the isolation in which she and her mistress had been left within their wretched place of confinement, put the corpse into the Princess' bed, and the latter, dressed as a common palace slave, and in the hubbub caused by the news of her own death, quickly found her way out, and ultimately reached the house of her foreign friend, who, being rightly afraid to keep her in her own house, had her removed to a safe place outside of Mandalay.

The Princess meanwhile being pronounced dead, the body was removed and disposed of, but not before the toes on one side had been chopped off, to make it look like the Princess, having had the misfortune to be born with a club-foot. After nearly two years the Princess, who had entirely recovered her former good health, was taken away from her hiding place in a large, covered and perfectly closed Burmese cart. With the help of her foreign friend she put on a European dress, and having arrived at the river side, went straight on board of a steamer that was just leaving from Rangoon. But when the steamer reached Koonywa, some two days' journey below Mandalay, the down steamer had just arrived at the same place, and the news soon spread that, some petty official or other having lately absconded from Mandalay, orders had been received at the frontier to search closely every up steamer, on hearing which the Princess resuming her Burmese dress, and making her face up as best she could, landed and crossed the river in a small boat, she having made up her mind to try and reach the Shan country. After the weariest and most perilous journey, on foot all the time, she at last succeeded in reaching the State of a friendly Tsawbwa (chief), under whose hospitable roof she now resides, anxiously looking for Prince Nyoung Yan, who had been repeatedly invited over by a large number of Tsawbwas, anxious to fight under his banner and carry him triumphantly back to the "golden city."

The Vaulted Chamber.

Chambers Journal.

The following narrative has been well authenticated: Some years ago a Mr. Lewis, one of the best and noblest members of the Midlandshire hunt, was killed by his horse falling with him at a leap. He left a widow and daughter, a very lovely girl. Mr. Lewis' estate, however, passed to a male heir—a distant cousin—and Mrs Lewis and her daughter determined to take up their abode on the Continent.

After a short sojourn in Paris, they proceeded to Tours, traveling from preference by the posting road, until one evening the picturesque aspect of a little hamlet, overlooked by a fine old chateau, induced them to halt for the night. They were informed by the landlord of the rustic inn that the gray-walled mansion to the south was the property of Monsieur Gaspard, a widower, who desired to dispose of it, and who, meanwhile, resided about a league from the house. Next morning Mrs. Lewis and her daughter passed some hours in exploring the venerable mansion and roaming in its noble but neglected gardens, until they arrived at the conclusion that nothing could possibly please them better. A proposal was forthwith addressed to the proprietor. No difficulties ensued; and the ladies were soon installed in their new possession, as well as, it would seem, in the good graces of Monsieur Gaspard himself, for he paid them frequent visits, and speedily established himself on the footing of an intimate friend.

He was a man of handsome person, and also of more than ordinary talents, having, moreover, the art to turn them to advantage; and it was not very long before Monsieur Gaspard became the declared suitor of Ada Lewis.

One peculiarity he possessed, which soon attracted Mrs. Lewis's notice—a liability to sudden fits of gloom and abstraction, against which he manifestly strove in vain. These, however, it is true, were not of frequent occurence; and, with this single exception, all went as merrily as that marriage bell which, in about a fortnight, was to celebrate the union of the affianced pair. For M. Gaspard was an ardent lover, and gave his lady-love no peace until he had secured an early day. One night Ada, fatigued with a walk somewhat longer than common, withdrew early to her chamber—a lofty, spacious apartment, with furniture of oak and ebony, and having a large, old wardrobe directly facing the bed. She was awakened by sounds like the rustling of a silk dress, and, to her amazement, saw a young lady, richly attired in the fashion of a few years back, cross the room and disappear, as it seemed, into the closed wardrobe.

The vision passed so suddenly that the young lady had no difficulty in persuading herself that it was nothing more than a dream, or one of those impressions so real in appearance that so frequently visit us in the confines of sleep. When, however, on the next night a precisely similar incident recurred, and, still more, when the third night presented the same image, Miss Lewis's alarm and dismay were fully aroused. On this occasion she had taken her maid to sleep with her, and it was the loud scream of the latter that awakened her in time to notice the retreating figure.

Cautioning the servant to be silent concerning the matter, Miss Lewis communicated the circumstance to her mother. Workmen were sent for to examine and remove the wardrobe, when, at the back, was found a small door. This, being forced open, revealed a narrow flight of stairs, which conducted the searchers to a little vault-like chamber. In one corner lay a heap of moth-eaten clothes, and the other objects a nearer scrutinizing proved to be the remains of a human being, of which little more than the skeleton was left. A ring and a locket were also found; and these, at the police investigation which succeeded, tended to the identification of the remains as those of a beautiful girl of the village, who, five years before, had, as it was supposed, quitted her home with a young soldier who had been seen in the neighborhood.

Monsieur Gaspard was placed under surveillance; but even this cautious step sufficed. He acknowledged that he had wronged and murdered the girl, but under what precise circumstances was never revealed, except to his confessor. He was found guilty, but not executed, passing the remainder of his miserable life in the condition, worse than death, of a prisoner at the galleys, without hope of pardon.

Recently two burglars entered the house of John Niehaus, in Perry county, and in doing so awakened Mr. Niehaus and his daughter Elisabeth. Mr. Niehaus arose and stepping out into the hall was shot through the left breast and died in a few minutes. His daughter, frightened by the shot, started to run from the house, when two or three shots were fired at her, from all which she escaped. The murderers then fled. They had stolen $350 from a bureau drawer. Mr. Niehaus was a wealthy and highly respected farmer, and intense excitement prevails on account of his brutal murder.

Col. Robert G. Ingersoll was asked by a friend the other day: "Is it true, Colonel, that you really keep a considerable sum of money loose in an unlocked drawer of your desk at home, so that your children may help themselves without stint or solicitation?" "Certainly, sir," was the answer. "I believe that to be the best way for cultivating in them a sense of responsibility and honor."

FASHION NOTES.

Large fans of black ostrich feathers are still the rage. They have been dubbed the "Langtry" simply because she never carried one.

In bangles the latest thing is in bronze, with curious designs on the sides and all sorts of impossible things dangling therefrom.

Very many ladies are now afflicted with the "Elberon limp," which is said to be the newest and most fashionable walk of the period.

Quaint little smelling bottles are now seen dangling from the waist belt of the girl of the period, and now she can faint whenever opportunity offers.

Feathers are the trimming of the season. Ostrich feathers comes first of course, but they are rarely used alone, a great bird, or a fancy beast or the feathers of a Spanish cock being added.

The jet capote will be much worn during the fall, and will probably figure during the winter at the theaters, with either a cluster of red roses or some other bright flower on the sides, or else a coronal of blossoms across the front, veiled by jetted lace.

Elegant skirts for dressy wear are made of black satin de Lyon, with ruffles of the same alternating with those of black Spanish lace. With this skirt is a tunic of black satin de Lyon in pannier style, bordered with black Spanish lace ruffles, and above this a jersey jacket of plain black Lyons velvet, finished at the throat with a collarette of Spanish lace.

The polka-dotted fever has broken out among ribbons, the latest idea in these being great round spots of plush or satin on a ground of the same color in the new ottoman reps, which is the latest fancy for silks. Gros grain ribbons have naturally come back into prime favor, with the restorating of gros grain silks. The cords in these are larger than heretofore, however, and strongly suggest the all-fashionable reps.

The colors that are new this season show the faded shades that are supposed to be peculiar to tapestry, and it is the whim to call these new colors old; there is old rose, which is a faded pink; old green, which is a decided "greenery yallery," and the old Sevres blue. Ficelle shades are very popular, and are seen in great variety. These and other light gray-brown shades are seen in contrast with every color, and are particularly stylish with rifle green and golden brown. Telegraph blue is like the blue telegraph paper used in France, and it is also known as electric blue. Chandun or copper red is the most elegant shade of red, but there is also Sultan, poppy, garnet and wine colors. Reseda, the queen of mignonette, is again revived, as are all the steel and silver grays. Sfox is a new terra cotta color, and there are several shades of this brownish red shown. Among the popular blues are hussar, chasseur, sapphire, and the almost black midshipman.

Handkerchief pouches and bags continue in fashion. They add very much to the finish of toilet designs for any occasion, be it picnic, party, or ball. Very handsome ones are now sold, made of black velvet, embroidered in tiny gold buds and leaves, edged with gold lace, lined inside with gold-colored silk, and depending from the belt-clasp with a fine French gold chatelaine. These pouches are too expensive for ordinary purses, but there are innumerable varieties made in every shape and style, and sold at reasonable prices. Stylish modistes now send home their expensive costumes with a pouch accompanying the dress, made en suite with the toilet. Ingenious ladies, however, who cannot afford to compensate madame for her pretty devices, make their own mouchoir-bags, the latest adorning to these dainty trifles being, when silk or satin is used, a new kind of "mineral" decalomanie work, which, when skilfully done, can hardly be distinguished from hand-painting.

Murder By Burial.

"Topics of the time," in the October Century, contains a bold demand for reform in the manner in this country of conducting funerals, and also the following disquieting statement:

No scientific discoveries have been made in our generation of greater importance than those of M. Pasteur. As many of our readers are aware, they relate to the propagation of disease through living organisms, those known as bacilli and bacteria being most frequently connected with the morbid processes of disease. M. Pasteur finds that these microscopic forms of life exist especially in dead bodies; that they work their way up through the soil to the surface, are taken into the intestines of grazing cattle or are distributed by the winds, and so, it would seem probable, propagate a whole school of diseases—such as small-pox, scarlatina, typhoid and typhus, fevers, diphtheria, tubercular consumption, pneumonia erysipelas, etc., etc., and perhaps yellow fever. M. Pasteur mentions the splenic fever which prevails in France and other countries of Europe, and which annually destroys thousands of cattle and sheep. In one such case he discovered that an epidemic of this disease was followed after some years by its fresh outbreak among cattle that had been grazing in the fields where, previously, victims of the same disease had been buried under the pastures. The little bacteria had worked their way from the buried carcasses to the surface, and were found in swarms in the intestines of earth-worms gathered there.

It ought to be the business of scientific people to show the relation of these facts—if they can be accepted as facts—to our present method of disposing of the dead. If the breezes that blow from Greenwood, Mt. Auburn, and Laurel Hill, are laden with germs which propagate diseases that have already slain our kindred, then the most expensive feature of those cities of the dead is not their costly monuments. It is worth while to ask ourselves whether the disciples of cremation have not a truth on their side, and whether some amendment is not needed in the modes of burial.

ADIRONDACK MURRAY.

The Ex-Clergyman's Present Home Forty Miles from San Antonio, Texas.

Austin, Texas, Letter to the New York Sun

Ten years ago, if one had been called on to name the half-dozen preachers in America drawing large congregations and occupying a conspicuous place in the thought and talk of the day, the name of Rev. W. H. H. Murray might have been included in the list. Ignoring almost entirely the conventionalities that hedged about the cloth, he recreated mind and body in hunting and fishing, and, by means of his publications, invited the world to a seat beside his camp fire while he spun stories of his prowess with the rifle and skill with the rod. An ardent admirer of a good horse, he blended racing and religion in a manner that was criticised, and edited a paper in which matters appertaining to the turf and the temple were treated with so loose an attempt at impartiality that there seemed at times to be a leaning toward favoring the turf the most. Intensely active in mind and body, he found time to organize a company for the manufacture of a patent buckboard, which, in addition to its general usefulness, was to deduct some seconds from the record of whatever race horse might be hitched to it. With these various outlets for his superfluous energies he still continued in the ministry, and, each succeeding Sabbath increasing congregations flocked to the spacious hall in which the most aristocratic descendants of the Puritans met to worship God in their own manner.

After a time the buckboard enterprise needed more money to put it on a basis of enduring prosperity, and the hat was passed around for an increase of capital. No trouble was found in getting it, and everything went smoothly until one morning the pastor, author, editor and manufacturer was missing. Rev. Mr. Murray had not the courage to face the consequences of his mismanagement. Public opinion among the charitably disposed attributed to him honest intention, but poor financial ability. New England's loss proved the gain of the sunny South. For a short time after his disappearance Rev. Mr. Murray took up his residence in San Antonio, accompanied by one Captain Bursley, the Captain's second wife, and their daughter, who had been, and still acted as Murray's Private Secretary. The party, after a time, rented a dwelling on Garden street, in the southern part of the city, near Guenther's Mills.

Murray wrote occasionally glowing letters from Texas to a Boston newspaper. They were much quoted and admired by the San Antonians, who have a very kindly feeling for a stranger who eats their salt and says the salt is good. Rev. Mr. Murray's active nature soon found employment in a hay speculation with a Mr. Hoyle who lived next door to him in San Antonio. Whether this business venture resulted in profit or loss, it resembled the buckboard venture in one respect. Murray became indebted to Hoyle for a considerable sum, which indebtedness, it is alleged, he offered to secure by means of some horses which were coming to him from Boston. The horses he is said to have telegraphed for, stating that he could find ready sale for them in Texas. They were sent, but in charge of a groom who alone had authority to sell and take pay for them, and the security on the horses was not given. They remained some time in San Antonio, and one of the everyday sights of the city in the spring of 1881 was the ex preacher, who, in place of his former attire of clerical broadcloth, appeard in his shirt sleeves and a slouch hat, frequently without collar or suspender, with Miss Bursley by his side, taking an airing on Commerce street or the plazas behind one or more of the Boston horses.

Some time previous to this Captain Bursley committed suicide. He had gone to live in Mr. Hoyle's house, adjoining that of the Rev. Mr. Murray. Various [illegible] were [illegible] for the [illegible] next door and for the subsequent [illegible], nothing very definite was known. Both Mrs. and Miss Bursley were present at the time. A servant employed to assist in the housework of both Hoyle's and Murray's [illegible] that Captain Bursley did not come to breakfast. She went to the room, and, looking through the keyhole, saw him lying on a mattress with a pistol in his hand, apparently dead. She gave the alarm, and the Rev. Mr. Murray went for a physician. The Captain was found to be past help, and was buried the same day without an inquest. The only mention of the affair in the San Antonio papers was a local item in the Express, which announced:

"A man was reported to have committed suicide last night on Garden street. In the absence of anything definite it would be idle to give the neighborhood gossip as to the motive of the suicide."

Dr. Jones, the physician who was called to attend the Captain after the shooting, is said, in answer to a question, to have given "family trouble" as the cause, but if he did so he now maintains reticence on the subject. In the fall of 1881 Murray conceived a project for the shipment of Texas woods to Chicago and other Northern manufacturing centers. As the scheme embraced [illegible] over 1,000 miles of [illegible] better and cheaper [illegible], it may be assumed that no very signal success attended [illegible]. With his clear blue eyes looking into the eyes of a friend, [illegible] persuasive eloquence in the friend's ears, it was not impossible to make those who were approached think mountain cedar, with cracks growing nearly to the center of every log, a valuable wood, and the long miles between it and its destined market but as the journey of a day. He so thoroughly believed in this scheme that he built a mill on the Guadaloupe, about forty miles from San Antonio, and with Miss Bursley moved there with the intention of selling the products of this mill in distant cities, after supplying the local markets. The main products of this cedar brake thus far have been fence posts and railroad ties, a load of which he occasionally brings in and unloads with his own hands, and if, as sometimes happens, his forty-mile trip brings him in on Sunday, he swallows all prejudices and unloads and settles for them in as matter-of-fact a way as he formerly announced a text or a collection.

Recent reports regarding him stirred up his friends to an effort at vindication, and they called on him to lecture at San Antonio. The call was signed by a score or more of the best citizens of the place; but on the night of the lecture they were represented by only four or five not very enthusiastic or very prominent vindicators. The lecture was a renunciation of orthodoxy. In the middle of it he made a forcible and almost vehement appeal, not ostensibly for himself, but a not-to-be-misunderstood appeal to be taken by the hand. For some minutes after beginning he did not look at his audience squarely, and one who had seen him often before, remarked that his style had lost much of its old vigor, though his athletic form retained all its symmetry.

Two of Brigham's Sons.

Salt Lake City Correspondence of the St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

Within the space of five minutes yesterday I was introduced to two of the sons of the late Brigham Young, named respectively, Brigham and Willard. The former is the issue of the first and legal marriage of Brigham Young to Mary Ann Angel, who survived her husband and lies buried by his side in a new-made grave. She died at 80, neglected and almost forgotten by the people whom her husband had made prosperous. There was a streak of decency in old Brigham, even in his last days, for he willed it that his wife should be buried by his side. His eldest son and namesake has but little of his father's appearance, and none of his first father's brains. Standing in his presence, one cannot help thinking of the old Latin proverb: "Stat magni nominis umbra"—"he stands the shadow of a mighty name." The name of Brigham Young was, indeed, mighty in its day and generation, and it represented a personal force and power as a leader and an organizer such as have been owned by few men of modern times. Brigham, Jr., has the name and the chief vice of the old man, but no more. He is Brigham Young, and he is a polygamist, dividing his parental and marital love by four. When introduced to him, I said that I had come West to see how "the bad people included in the Edmunds bill were getting along." "Well," said he, trying to straighten himself into the proportions of the old man, "if the United States tries to take our rights they'll find that we are very bad people. We don't intend to be trampled on. My idea is to go right ahead and do what we believe to be right, and take all the consequences." The gentleman became so demonstrative that I felt called upon to assure him that I was not a commissioner of either peace or war. "But," said I, "if Uncle Sam makes up his mind to trample on Utah he'll put on a big pair of shoes and stamp the whole thing out mighty quick." Brigham, Jr., then recited the woes of Utah and soon disappeared with a friend.

"Here's another of Brigham's boys," said Mr. Hooper, as a fine-looking young fellow of about 30 approached and shook hands with him. "This," said he, "is Lieutenant Young—Willard Young of West Point." The acquaintance was a pleasent one to make. Lieutenant Young is a graduate of the Engineer Corps at West Point, and now a teacher there. He is one of the polygamous sons of "the old man," and has married within a week the daughter of Mr. Hooper. Whatever his views may be on the subject, he is not likely to "go into polygamy" during the lifetime of his mother-in-law. His father-in-law will vouch for that. He was at West Point when his father's estate was being settled up, and when the litigation began his agents wrote to him to know what they should do. He replied that he didn't care about quarreling over the matter; that he had a profession that would give him a living, and that he would take what the others didn't want. So a lot of railroad stock, supposed to be nearly worthless, was assigned to him. He took it, and the development of the Territory has since made him one of the richest of the old man's heirs.

A Camp Of Chinese Laborers.

October Century.

Camping and traveling in the forest was a delightful experience, spite of rain and fatigue; but no one of our party was sorry one morning to be met on the river's bank by an engineer, who brought a package of letters, and the information that the camps of the Chinese graders on the railroad were just across the river, that there was a wagon-road to the end of the track, and that he had a skiff and two rowers to set us across the turbulent current. We had traversed the whole distance (six hundred miles) between the ends of the railroad, which are advancing to meet next year on the summit of the Rocky Mountains. The news that we should see a locomotive that very day was received with enthusiasm. It meant beds, baths, clean clothes, newspapers, telegrams, napkins, silver forks, and a hundred other things never noticed or appreciated until out of reach. We rearranged our luggage, bestowed our bedding upon the half-breed Indian, the Kentucky negro, and the white lad, who jointly managed the pack-train, got over the river, and were soon driving through the camps of three thousand Chinese laborers. It was Sunday, and work on the grade was suspended. The canvas town swarmed with men. Some were having their heads shaved, others were combing and winding their pig-tails; others, stripped, to their waist, were enjoying a sponge bath. One man was on his knees going through some religious ceremony over a chicken before dissecting it for the pot. There were Chinese stores, Chinese restaurants, and Chinese gaming tents. For fifteen miles the woods were literally full of Mongolians. Not a feature of their Asiatic life do they abandon, save that, from the necessity of working in mud and dust, they wear American boots. Their basket hats, blue blouses, and loose trousers are supplied by Chinese merchants, and a large portion of their food—their rice and dried fish, and all their sweetmeats and dainties—comes across the Pacific. The road was lined with Chinamen driving fat hogs to the camps to be slaughtered for the Sunday dinner, or carrying bundles and boxes, and boards for tentflooring, suspended to bamboo poles, balanced on the shoulders in the exact style of the pictures on the tea-chests.

The Chinese laborers on the railroad earn one dollar and sixteen cents a day, and are hired by gangs of forty from agents of the Six Companies in San Francisco. The usual estimate of the effectiveness of their labor is that three Chinamen are equal to two white men; but the superintendent of construction on the railroad asserts that he prefers the Chinese, man for man, to such white labor as can be had on the Pacific coast.

The railroad operations have caused to grow up at Cabinet Landing, a grotesque and hideous town of tents and shanties clinging to the hill-side, among the pines,—a town subsisting on the wants and weaknesses of the working men, and flaunting in their faces facilities for all the coarses forms of vice. Across the river from this pandemonium of frontier dirt, drunkenness, and debauchery, is another transient railroad town, where the engineers and overseers live, with their wives and children, in clean tents, prettily embowered with evergreens.

Young Mr. Gould's Theater Box

Boston Herald.

Jay Gould owns the Grand Opera House, and his son, George, is to be associated with Mr. Abbey in the management. Young Mr. Gould means to make the business enjoyable, at all events. The right-hand lower box, as you face the stage, is transformed into a sanctum for him. It has been isolated by shutting off the passage to the next box above, which is now entered from the gallery. A door is cut through the wall of the building into what formerly was a yard, but is now built up to contain a parlor, a dining-room and a reception room, all beautifully frescoed, and to be gorgeously furnished. These apartments are accessible by a back way from Twenty-fourth street, so that Mr. Gould and his friends can get in and out without mixing with the audience, though they will be in danger of encountering the performers. It is understood that the dinners will not be prepared on the premises, but will be sent in from a restaurant. The box opens also on a passage leading to the stage, back of which is the largest green room in the country. In the festive days of Jim Fiske this apartment was gaily peopled by the women of opera bouffe, who assembled there when not actually employed in the performances, and made a brave show with their beauty and costumes. The hall, big enough to hold 200 persons, has since been devoted chiefly to the storage of scenery and properties, until it was cleared and painted by order of Mr. Gould, who will have it carpeted, decorated and furnished dazzlingly. He evidently believes in a revival of the green room, whatever may be his ideas about the rest of the drama.

The Weather Seers.

Philadelphia Record.

The three weather prophets, Couch, Tice and Vennor, took a more than ordinarily careful squint at the August horoscope of the weather, and their predictions for the month, in view of the actual state of things meteorologically, are somewhat amusing reading now. Mr. Vennor contented himself by saying the month would be excessively wet and stormy, with a great deal of rain up to the 20th. It is clear that the Middle Atlantic States must have been an exception if Mr. Vennor was right, for in this section rain fell only on the 2d, 3d and 7th days up to the 20th, and on but three days afterward. But two of these six days furnished rain in any considerable quantity,—the second and the twenty-seventh. Professor Tice furnished specific predictions for each day of the month, and he also made an egregious failure in presaging the August weather of this portion of the Republic. Out of the thirty-one days he hits four correctly in saying that they will be clear and pleasant. Two additional guesses are sufficiently close to be placed to the Professor's credit, giving him six successful predictions out of the thirty-one. Mr. Couch took the pleasanter view of the month, and his guesses have been successful in eleven cases out of thirty-one. In nearly all the cases in which these gentlemen failed their conjectures were diametrically opposite to the facts. There is no doubt, indeed, that any citizen of ordinary intelligence, might have approached as near to the truth.

Kissing the foot of the Pope.

From Belgravia.

In Theophile Gautier's "Constantinople of To-day" there is an account of the ceremony of kissing the Sultan's toe, an honor which is reserved for the vizier, ministers and certain privileged pashas. This act of homage is performed with the utmost solemnity, and is marked by every sign of respect worthy of so important an occasion. Referring to the custom of kissing the Pope's toe, Mathew of Westminster thus explains its origin: Formerly, it was usual to kiss the hand of His Holiness, but toward the close of the eighth century a certain woman, when making an offering to the Pope, not only kissed his hand, but committed the terrible outrage of squeezing it. The Pope, seeing the danger to which he was thus exposed, cut off his hand, and by this means escaped the contamination to which he had been rendered liable. Since that time the precaution has been taken of kissing the Pope's toe instead of his hand, lest any one should doubt the accuracy of this account, the historian argues that the hand, which had been cut off 500 or 600 years before, still exists at Rome—a standing miracle, since it was preserved in its original state, free from corruption. When the ceremony of kissing the Pope's toe takes place, he wears on the occasion a slipper with a cross. We may note here that kissing the foot is a common Oriental sign of respect, and is said to have been introduced into the West by the later Roman emperors, whose court ceremonies were mixed with so many customs.

Rev. Mr. Goss, a Baptist preacher, who is well known in Harrison county, where he has frequently held meetings, was assassinated in Kentucky on Tuesday morning, by unknown parties, who fired a double-barrelled shotgun loaded with slugs, killing him instantly. His denunciation of drunkenness and rowdyism was distasteful.

Religious Intelligence.

Of all "the seven Churches of Asia," Smyrna alone is still living.

The Patagonians now have the Gospel of Luke in their own language.

For every 200 of the inhabitants of Iceland there is a Lutheran pastor.

It is estimated that the Bible has been translated into 286 languages and dialects.

Boston people want all Church services on Sunday morning to begin at 11 o'clock.

The anti-bang crusade started by a Canadian Bishop, has carrried terror into feminine ranks.

A preacher in Providence, R. I., sustains himself by his profession of wood-engraving. He refuses salary or emolument.

The Protestant Episcopal Bishop of Liverpool, England, thinks Churches would be better filled "if the right kind of clergymen were nominated."

The Protestant Episcopal Church in Massachusetts proposes to introduce the free pew system in all the church edifices throughout the State.

The Episcopal Clergymen's Insurance League in the last thirteen years has paid $316,000 to the widows and orphans of deceased clergymen, and of this sum $15,552 was paid during the past year.

The Methodist Episcopal ministers of Kentucky have pledged themselves to work vigorously to defeat evey candidate for public office who attempts to gain nomination or election by the use of money or liquor.

"There is nothing in the Scriptures," says the Central Baptist, "that can be claimed as a foundation for the preaching of funeral sermons or the wearing of mourning apparel by Christians. What justification is there for these customs?"

In one of the Churches, while the thermometer was in the nineties, and the whole congregation felt as though they were being cooked, the minister rose to deliver his sermon. At the announcement of his text, a broad smile illuminated the faces of his hearers. They couldn't help it. It was: "And Peter stood by the fire and warmed himself."

Trinity Church, New York, is the wealthiest religious corporation in the United States, its property being now worth $50,000,000. Seven Churches are maintained and eighteen others are indirectly aided by it, while its outside benefactions are $2,000,000 annually. Its charter dates back to grants made by William and Mary, in 1644. Its rector is Dr. Morgan Dix, son of the late distinguished General, and some fifteen assistant ministers aid him in serving the diocese-like parish. The rector has a salary of $15,000, and several of the assistant ministers receive $10,000 each.

"War! war!!" is the usual head-line of the placards of the Salvation Army in England. The plan of attack is then described as follows: "Monday, at 7:45—Salvation charge. Tuesday—Great exhibition of hallelujah classes. Wednesday—Fire and brimstone. Thursday—Roll-call; soldiers to deliver up their cartridges. Friday, at 7:30—Baptism of fire. Saturday, at 7:45—Rejoicing over victories won all over the shop meeting. Sunday, at 7 a. m.—Knee drill; ammunition supplied to soldiers by Quartermaster-General; 11 a. m.—Tremendous free-and-easy; 6:30 p. m.—Great charge on the devil; 9 p. m.—Hallelujah galop."

In his autobiography, Rev. Peter Cartwright gives this characteristic description of early evangelistic work: "A Methodist preacher in those days, when he felt that God had called him to preach, instead of hunting up a college or biblical institute, hunted up a hardy pony of a horse and some traveling apparatus, and with his library always at hand—namely, Bible, hymn-book and discipline—he started; and with a text that never wore out nor grew stale, he cried: 'Behold the Lamb of God that taketh away the sin of the world.' In this way he went through storms of wind, hail, snow and rain; climbed hills and mountains, plunged through swamps, slept with his saddle blanket for a bed, his saddle or saddle-bags for his pillow, and his old big coat or blanket (if he had any) for a covering.

It is no gain to build up a Church or Sunday-school out of material drawn from some other Church or Sunday-school. It may be easier to secure recruits from some other regiment of the Lord than from the devil's ranks, but it is not gain to the Lord's army. Yet sometimes it seems as if Churches were more intent upon rivaling other Churches in efforts to draw paying members, and members from other Churches than in saving the lost. The minister or zealous Church member has reached a very high state of grace who can truthfully say, "It gives me no pleasure to see my Church or Sunday-school built up at the expense of another Church or Sunday-school." And this foraging upon other Churches is not all across denominational lines, but carried on largely within those lines. "The world" is fair game for any Church, but do not hunt in one another's flocks.

The Brooklyn Bridge.

New York Special.

The World devotes two pages to the history of the expenditures already made on the Brooklyn bridge. It says the building of the structure was conceived in iniquity and begun in fraud and has been continued in corruption. The World gives what it calls overwhelming proofs of the system of jobbery and official corruption that has prevailed. It says that Boss Tweed conceived the plan in 1861; that a $7,000,000 estimate has been swollen to $22,000,000, and only one-fifth of the bridge expenditures is accounted for in the materials. The World says in an editorial in regard to its story that what it shows is that the books and accounts of the bridge company are full of forgeries, misrepresentations and errors in calculation, and that they are confused and mixed in a manner which, in books of private concern, would excite suspicion and provoke legal inquiry. What it shows is from first to last that every important transaction connected with the outlay of money upon this great public work has been more or less tainted with suspicion. Consider the significance of the evidence which shows how Chief Engineer Roebling bought steel of the Roebling works, how President Murphy paid large fees for searching titles to Mr. Murphy, as also how Vice-President Kingsley not only bought granite to the extent of $1,000,000 from companies developed out of other companies founded by Kingsley, the dealer in the stone, but also bought sand and machinery from one of his own business partners.

If you feel drowsy, debilitated, have frequent headache, mouth tastes badly, poor appetite and tongue coated, you are suffering from torpid liver, or "biliousness," and nothing will cure you so speedily and permanently as to take SIMMONS LIVER REGULATOR OR MEDICINE.

SIMMONS LIVER REGULATOR

The cheapest, Purest and Best Family Medicine in the World.

AN EFFECTUAL SPECIFIC for all diseases of the Liver Stomach and Spleen.

Regulate the Liver and prevent Chills and Fever, Malarious Fevers, Bowel Complaints, Restlessness, Jaundice and Nausea.

BAD BREATH!

Nothing is so unpleasant, nothing so common as bad breath, and in nearly every case it comes from the stomach, and can be so easily corrected if you will take Simmons' Liver Regulator. Do not neglect so sure a remedy for this repulsive disorder. It will also improve your Appetite, Complexion, and General Health.

PILES!

How many suffer torture day after day, making life a burden and robbing existence of all pleasure, owing to the secret suffering from Piles. Yet relief is ready to the hand of almost any one who will use systematically the remedy that has permanently cured thousands. SIMMONS' LIVER REGULATOR, is no drastic violent purge; but a gentle assistant to nature.

CONSTIPATION!

Should not be regarded as a trifling ailment—in fact nature demands the utmost regularity of the bowels, and any deviation from this demand paves the way often to serious danger. It is quite as necessary to remove impure accumulations from the bowels as it is to eat or sleep, and no health can be expected where a costive habit of body prevails.

SICK HEADACHE!

This distressing affliction occurs most frequently. The disturbance of the stomach arising from the imperfectly digested contents, causes a severe pain in the head, accompanied with disagreeable nausea, and this constitutes what is popularly known as Sick Headache.

PROVED A SUCCESS

THE PASTILLE. Prof. Harris' Radical Cure. Trade Mark

FOR NERVOUS DEBILITY

BY YEARS OF USE

A valuable Discovery and New Departure in Medical Science. A positively effective Remedy for the speedy and permanent Cure for organic weakness—the deplorable disease resulting from indiscreet practices or excesses in youth or at any time of life—by the only true way, viz: Direct Application acting by Absorption, and exerting its specific influence on the Vesicles, Ducts, and Glands, that are unable to perform their natural functions while this disease pervades the human organism. The use of the Pastille is attended with no pain or inconvenience, and does not interfere with the ordinary pursuits of life; it is quickly dissolved and soon absorbed, producing an immediate soothing and restorative effect upon the nervous organizations wrecked from vicious habits or excesses, stopping the drain from the system, restoring the mind to health and sound memory, removing the Dimness of Sight, Confusion of Ideas, Aversion to Society, etc., etc., and the appearance of premature old age usually accompanying this trouble, and restoring the vital forces, where they have been dormant for years. This mode of treatment has stood the test in very severe cases, and is now a pronounced success. Drugs are too much prescribed in this trouble, and, as many can bear witness to, with but little if any permanent good. There is no nonsense about this Preparation. Practical observation enables us to positively guarantee that it will give satisfaction. It has been in general use for several years and we have thousands of testimonials from patients, as to its value, and it is now conceded to be the most rational means yet discovered for reaching and curing this very prevalent trouble, that is well known to be the cause of untold misery to so many, and upon whom quacks prey with their useless nostrums and big fees. The Remedy is put up in neat boxes, of three sizes. No. 1, (enough to last a month,) $3; No. 2, (sufficient to effect a permanent cure, unless in severe cases,) $5; No. 3, (lasting over three months, will restore those in the worst condition,) $7. Sent by mail, in plain wrappers. Full DIRECTIONS for using will accompany EACH BOX.

Send for Sealed Descriptive Pamphlets giving Anatomical Illustrations and Testimony, which will convince the most skeptical that they can be restored to perfect health, and the vital forces thoroughly re-established same as if never affected. Sold ONLY by

Unsolicited testimony to the Efficacy of Prof. Harris' Pastilles, taken from Letters received from Patrons:

Indiana, April 11, '79.—The Remedy is working perfectly. Had epilepsy from weakness, for 8 years past.

Iowa, Oct. 10th, '79.—I am almost surprised at your Pastilles. They have worked like a charm on me. I am just twice as much of a man as I was before taking. I was on the verge of the grave, I thought, and there was no cure for me, but now I am in good hopes for a cure.

West Virginia, Aug. 22, 1879.—I received your medicine and I believe it has saved me, for which I am very thankful. Inclosed find $5. Please send me another box (No. 2) for a friend. You have done a great thing for me. I will send you all the orders I can.

From a Physician and Surgeon.

Missouri, June 21.—Please forward me another box of the Pastilles. The patient on whom I have used most of one box, in addition to a sample box, is fast recovering, and I think another will set him all right.

From a Druggist.

Maryland, Sept. 2, '79.—Last January we got a box of your Remedy for one of our customers, and it has made a perfect cure of him. We have another customer now [illegible]

KING'S MAGIC TOOTH ACHE CURE.

The Test of True Love.

"Welcome home, Pansy."

Dapplevace was at its prettiest this sweet June day as it nestled cozily among the hills that towered above it on every side. Down in the shady glen where the village church stood, almost hidden by the cypress trees whose great boughs of green were swept caressingly against the sides of the modest structure, Pansy Perkins was standing, and as Ethelbert Pettingill spoke in the words with which this chapter opens, her face lighted up with a radiant 2x4 smile that was beautiful in its sad expanse of territory.

"Come to me, Pansy," he said.

It was Ethelbert's voice, tender, gentle, that spoke, yet with something in its tones that made the girl pause in her excited, feverish walk up and down, and she pressed her hands to her throbbing temples, looking at him with large, bright, pathetic eyes. But he stretched out his hand and she came to him. He pressed his arms around her waist and held her to his breast a moment in silence.

Presently Pansy spoke. "It is very hot, is it not, darling?" she said.

"Yes," replied Ethelbert, "and it is getting late, and we should be going home"—but as he spoke the girl looked up at him with those handsome dark eyes that had witched so many men. "Do you love me?" she said.

"Passionately, my angel," was the reply in tremendious tones.

"And will you buy me some ice-cream?" she continued.

Ethelbert felt his heart throbbing against his suspender, and for an instant he could not reply. But the momentary agitation was soon over, and he spoke out in clear, mellow tones. "I will do it with pleasure," he said

The peachy cheek of the girl was laid close to his now, and the velvety lips kissed him tenderly back of the left ear. And then, turning her head slightly, Pansy whispered to herself: "I have not lost my grip"—Chicago Tribune.

Barnum's Trick of Ledgerdemain at Sea.

On the recent voyage of the city of Rome to Liverpool, P. T. Barnum was a passenger. At a concert given on the ship he was the presiding genius. He opened the evening with numerous anecdotes of his earlier days. Among others he told how he once bought a magnificent coach dog, for which he paid $50; said he was beautifully marked, but unfortunately he was caught in a heavy shower the day after he bought him, when presto, he was changed, into an ordinary cur, the spots having been ingeniously painted upon him. He went to the man from whom he had purchased him. He acknowledged the sale, but said his clerk had forgotton to send the umbrella which always went with the dog, as he could not stand the rain. He closed the entertainment by giving specimens of legerdemain. His greatest trick, he said, had never been equaled in this country or any other. So I will give it. He broke a soda cracker into three pieces, asked some of the audience to mark them, so they could be readily identified. Then he asked for three hats, and placed a piece under each hat. Then, once more asking gentlemen if they were sure they would recognize the pieces again, he deliberately ate each piece. "Now, ladies and gentlemen, the most wonderful part of the feat appears. I will place all three pieces of cracker under one hat if you will choose which hat it shall be." The hat was immediately chosen. Mr. Barnum instantly placed it on his head, and said: "The three pieces of cracker are all under the hat." No one could gainsay it, so he closed 'mid shouts of laughter.—Louisville Couried-Journal.

Malaria or Onion Creek.

"How are colored voters coming on out on Onion Creek?" asked an Austin candidate of a darkey with a load of hay.

"Dar's a heap sickness out dar among colored folks."

"What is it, malaria?"

"I reckon dat's de name ob de stuff. Hit am sumfin what he got from de druggery shop."

"What stuff are you talking about?"

"De stuff a white man out dar puts in his watermillions to keep de colored folks from mistakin' em for dar own watermillions."—Texas Siftings.

He Wanted a Piece Big Enough to Cover the Clip.

In response to an inquiry for court-plaster, the other day, a druggish handed out a piece about six inches square and asked the boy if that would do.

"I dunno," was the doubtful reply.

"Who is it for?"

"For father."

"Didn't he say how large a piece?"

"No; but I know that isn't large enough. Ma hit him with the whole side of the washboard at once and that won't begin to cover the clip."

STRENGTH

to vigorously push a business, strength to study a profession, strength to regulate a household, strength to do a day's labor without physical pain. All this represents what is wanted, in the often heard expression, "Oh! I wish I had the strength!" If you are broken down, have not energy, or feel as if life was hardly worth living, you can be relieved and restored to robust health and strength by taking BROWN'S IRON BITTERS, which is a true tonic—a medicine universally recommended for all wasting diseases.

301 N. Fremont St., Baltimore

During the war I was injured in the stomach by a piece of a shell, and have suffered from it ever since. About four years ago it brought on paralysis, which kept me in bed six months, and the best doctors in the city said I could not live. I suffered fearfully from indigestion, and for over two years could not eat solid food and for a large portion of the time was unable to retain even liquid nourishment. I tried Brown's Iron Bitters and now after taking two bottles I am able to get up and go around and am rapidly improving.

G. DECKER.

BROWN'S IRON BITTERS is a complete and sure remedy for Indigestion, Dyspepsia, Malaria, Weakness and all diseases requiring a true, reliable, non-alcoholic tonic. It enriches the blood, gives new life to the muscles and tone to the nerves.

Ayer's
Sarsaparilla

Is a compound of the virtues of sarsaparilla, stillingia, mandrake, yellow dock, with the iodide of potash and iron, all powerful blood-making, blood-cleansing, and life-sustaining elements. It is the purest, safest, and most effectual alterative available to the public. The sciences of medicine and chemistry have never produced a remedy so potent to cure all diseases resulting from impure blood. It cures Scrofula and all scrofulous diseases, Erysipelas, Rose, or St. Anthony's Fire, Pimples and Face-grubs, Pustules, Blotches, Boils, Tumors, Tetter, Humors, Salt Rheum, Scald-head, Ring-worm, Ulcers, Sores, Rheumatism, Mercurial Disease, Neuralgia, Female Weaknesses and Irregularities, Jaundice, Affections of the Liver, Dyspepsia, Emaciation, and General Debility.

By its searching and cleansing qualities it purges out the foul corruptions which contaminate the blood and cause derangement and decay. It stimulates the vital functions, restores and preserves health, and infuses new life and vigor throughout the whole system. No sufferer from any disease of the blood need despair who will give AYER'S SARSAPARILLA a fair trial.

It is folly to experiment with the numerous low-priced mixtures, without medicinal virtues, offered as blood-purifiers, while disease becomes more firmly seated. AYER'S SARSAPARILLA is a medicine of such concentrated curative power, that it is by far the best, cheapest, and most reliable blood-purifier known. Physicians know its composition, and prescribe it. It has been widely used for forty years, and has won the unqualified confidence of millions whom it has benefited.

HOT SPRINGS, ARKANSAS, SEPT. 29, 82.

DEAR COURIER:—I observe, through the columns of the COURIER, that you are making preparations for another political contest in old DeKalb, and the fact that many of my warm personal friends are on the ticket makes me feel a great deal of interest in the result. Some of these men I know so intimately that I trust it will not be taken as an interference, if I, an outsider say a word in their behalf. I wish to say for Mr. J. W. Boyle, that he is one of the truest men I ever knew,—true in his friendship, true in principles, and true in whatever he assures, and no democrat can afford to vote against him. Then there is my friend Moody, I know from personal observation that he labored dilligently for the good of his constituents, and did all his power to deserve the confidence reposed in him while in Indianapolis. He worked day and night, in his seat during the day, and in the committee room at night,—instead of bumming around the streets as some did. He will do to trust, and you ought to be proud of him. Then there is Miller a man in whom friendship never wavers. As true and square as they can make them. And don't forget Tom Tomlinson. He was a soldier, and I don't know you could show your appreciation, of the hardships and trials he passed through, better than by giving him a rousing majority. In Dan Husselman you have one who never gives up, even under discouragement, and has always stood firm and reliable in the party. He needs the office and will prove efficient. Capt. Butt should have every vote in the party, in fact the republicans can hardly afford to vote against him, for he is a splendid capable gentleman. I see that J. J. VanAuken is on for surveyor. Well I can't say anything that will help him much, for he is a wheel-horse any where, has a good record, and the best surveyor the county ever had. It will be a walk over with him. Elect Latson by all means. The county cannot afford to lose his services as long as he can chew tobacco and peddle tickets. No dissensions should creep into the party. Some of your readers will have an indistinct recollection of a certain individual, who bore the weight of such things some time ago, and his observation is to the effect that the more republicans you elect, the more power they wield to down the entire party. Now, I know it is not my "put in," but I still have an interest in the old party there, and I want to learn next November that every democrat did his duty. I know that the democracy can win if that delusive practice of personal preference is ignored politically. No man has a right to your vote unless he represents your sentiments. Don't forget that while you are hedging around and quietly voting for somebody else.

You doubtless remember a difficulty I had with an editor here about a year ago, well, the fellow was killed on our streets about a week ago, in a quarrel he had with several parties. He had been shot at several times before, and at last met a violent death.

Our elections are over with the usual majorities. I find some of the papers are trying to manufacture bull-dozing stories about it, but I never saw a more peaceable election in all my life. The Negroes have got tired of the republican party, because it has never done any thing for them, and hence stories are gotten up to counteract this state of things, and if possible to gain in the north where they expect to misrepresent without stint.

Yours, T. C. MAYS.

Amending the Constitution.

The Sentinel has repeatedly placed before its readers the issue of amending the constitution, shorn of every sophism and subterfuge. It has sought to present the issue without artifice, or the evasion of any fact or principle properly entering into the discussion. The sentinel stands squarely on the platform adopted by the democratic party its state convention. The platform declares unequivocally against prohibition. This it does upon principle. It does not believe that prohibitory amendments to the constitution or prohibitory legislation are right in principle or beneficial in results, and it has the boldness to say so. The democratic party detests prevarication. It despises duplicity. In these things it is diametrically the opposite of the republican party. The democratic party is bold; the republican party is cowardly, pusillanimous, white-livered and poltroonish. It is impossible to obtain from the republican party a direct declaration for or against prohibition. The democratic party demands, with special emphasis, if the constitution is to be amended that it shall be done by "constitutional methods," and every citizen of Indiana is deeply and vitally interested in that declaration. The democratic party asserts that when a proposition is made to change the constitution, the fundamental law of the state, the people have the right to oppose such a proceeding at "every stage of its progress," and that as often as the constitution provides, the question shall be submitted to a vote of the people at a general election. Here we have explicit declarations of the gravest importance, and these are the declarations which the republican party oppose. In this connection, it may be well to introduce the Indianapolis Journal as a witness, to show that in the near past the paper occupied substantially, the democratic position upon the question of constitutional methods for amending the constitution. In its issue of April 18, 1881, the Journal said:

"There is great objection on the part of many of our citizens and best lawyers to this method of amending the constitution, they preferring that a convention should be called, and a new instrument framed by a body of men specially elected for that purpose. There is much force in some of the arguments advanced in favor of the convention, but one matter is certain that the present method affords the people a greater opportunity to express their opinions on such propositions as are now submitted, than they would have if made by convention. They have two more chances to manifest their preference on this question, first, in the election of members to the next assembly, and then at the final direct vote on each separate amendment: Whereas, new constitutions are ordinarily submitted as a whole, or, at the most, in two or three divisions, in which several subjects are joined, and to vote against an objectional clause involves the defeat of all, or some that the voter might approve."

It will be observed that in the foregoing the Journal is clearly of the opinion that the amendment issue is now squarely before the people "in the election of members to the next assembly," which affords them a "chance to manifest their preference on this question," and if that does not settle the question, then "at the final direct vote." These are the "constitutional methods" which the democratic party now advocates, and which the Journal has abandoned and opposes. It would be difficult to show up the republican party in a more reprehensive light. It is a square back down—a sneaking, cowardly retreat On the 18th of April, 1881, the Journal boldly asserted that the people had "two more chances to manifest their preference on the question" of prohibition, now it asserts with impudent jugglery that the people have but one more chance, and that "every republican senator and representative in the next general assembly will vote to agree to the pending constitutional amendments, in order that they may be submitted to a direct vote of the people" regardless of the will of the people, regardless of the "preference" of the people "on this question." The democratic party maintains, that on the 18th of April, 1881, the Journal held, in so far as we have quoted its utterances, to correct democratic doctrine, which it has not abandoned. The Journal says that "democratic candidates, taking the cue from the state platform, they attempt to evade or dodge a direct answer, yet when they are driven to a close corner the answer is in harmony with the party platform—they are opposed to the prohibition amendment 'at every stage of its progress'—but if they are unable to kill it in the legislature and it is agreed to by a majority of the members, then they favor submission at a general election. This is the democratic ground." The democratic party adopts the Journal's declaration, that after the republican legislature had forced the prohibition issues upon the state, "They have two more chances to manifest their preference on this question; first, in the election of members to the next assembly," and if that does not suffice, then "at the final direct vote." That is the democratic position as far as it goes. It is a constitutional method. It is giving the people an opportunity to express their will concerning a matter of great importance at any stage of its progress. It affords us pleasure to expose the mean duplicity of the Journal, and we leave it to wiggle out of its dilemma the best way it can.—Indianapolis Sentinel.

Arkansas and Magazine Mountain.

We extract the following letter from the Flora (Illinois) Journal of June 10. It was written to a friend in that city by Mr. L. J. Ross, of this place, and gives the author's opinion of our country.

I received your last letter just as we were starting for a visit to Magazine mountain. We returned yesterday. Magazine is in township 6 N., range 25 west, Logan county, Arkansas. It is the highest mountain in the state. Its elevation is 3,172,12 feet. It consequently overlooks a vast expanse of country. It towers way above everything else betwen the Alleghanies and Rockies. The mountain is huge in its dimensions. It is flat on top; at the west end it is a half mile across, but widens towards the east. The soil is first-class, mainly a dark rich loam, supporting a heavy growth of timber, and upon the sides and benches the growth of timber in quality and size is truly wonderful. You may go to the richest bottom land in the world and you will not find a better soil, a more luxuriant growth or denser foliage The climate is simply delightful. The inhabitants are never sick, and if people come upon the mountain sick they soon get well or are greatly improved in health. The water is purer than "the driven snow" before it falls upon mother earth. It is cold and clear as crystal. The inhabitants of this destined-to-be-the-most-famous-mountain are literally dwellers above and in the clouds. As you stand upon the western summit looking westward and north, the eye follows the great Arkansas river for a hundred miles as it winds and stretches away towards the setting sun. The great Arkansas valley, dotted over with thriving villages, beautiful farms, broad green prairies, high mountains, lovely vales, is spread out before you, the grandest of panoramic views, which are only bounded by your range of vision, furnishing a feast for the eye that the gods are wont to look upon, but one that is denied to the great majority of mortals. You have traveled and seen sights, but never did you behold such a grand and sublime scene as was presented to our view last Sunday evening, as we stood upon the edge of one of the rocky cliffs of Magazine, looking downward and out, a thousand feet below, upon dense masses of heavy moving clouds, listening to the rolling thunder, watching the play of forked lightning around and within the clouds, and saw the heavy falling rain as the storm clouds swept over the beautiful valley far below us. A gentle breeze is nearly always in motion upon the mountain, but no storm ever sweeps the summit of Magazine, for his mighty crest towers far above the storm's wild career. Being unused to descriptive writings, and at a loss for words, I can but give you a faint idea of the beauty and magnificence of the scenery and views obtained at various places on the top of the mountain. You must come and see for yourself, and I promise you will be well rewarded for your trouble by the improvement of your health and the great pleasure you will experience. You will not only become acquainted with Magazine—one of the great natural wonders of the world—but you will see other mountains and other valleys—you will see Arkansas clothed in richest verdure, her people industrious, prosperous and happy—happy is the conscious knowledge that Arkansas is making her triumphal march with grand strides towards the front rank of states.

The Little Rock and Fort Smith Railway Company own all, or nearly all, the land. They have had a city laid off in blocks and squares with broad streets and alleys, also parks. The material is being put upon the ground now for a large hotel. City lots are being sold, or soon will be. A number of people already have small houses to live in during the hot season. The hotel is expected to be ready to receive guests by the middle of July. The springs are numerous and the waters are different in degrees of coldness and other properties.—Charlston, (Ark.) Vindicator.

Most truly yours,
L. J. ROSS.

A Timely Book.

There is no subject so prominent before the American people at the present time as that of Mormonism. It is the topic of the hour. The newspapers and magazines are filled with it, the ministers preach about it and it is the topic of private conversation. The last article of the late Dr Bacon was "The Utah Problem" and was left unfinished with the question "What are you going to do about it." Most people think they know all about it, but even the best informed after perusing the pages of the new book, "The women of Mormonism" have to confess to feelings of astonishment at the iniquities there portrayed, and to admit that the half had not been told.

Miss Francis E. Willard, in the introduction to the book, says: "I have read its pages with thoughts too deep for tears. Some sulphur-shrouded planet may have a vocabulary fiendish enough to fitly characterize what they reveal, but mere English is only the vocabulary, of a prating parrot in presence of such pathos and such woe."

"The women of Mormonism, or the story of polygamy as told by the victims themselves," is an authentic work. It is edited by a lady in Salt Lake City, Utah, who has long been one of the leaders of the Anti-Polygamy cause. She relates the stories of the "victims" almost in their own words. The persons who made the statements, many of whom are still in the Mormon church and see no way out, were willing to make private affidavits to the truthfulness of their accounts.

This work is to make a great stir in the country; every one who hears of it wants to read it. It is sold only by subscription so as to have it circulated as widely as possible. To places where no agents can be secured the work will be sent by mail on receipt of the price $2.

The enterprising agent who secures choice territory will be fortunate. We understand the publisher desires good agents in this county. Full particulars can be obtained by addressing C. G. G. Paine, Detroit, Mich.

EX-GOVERNOR RAMSEY, of the Utah Commission, states that the leading polygamists offered to to make no attempt to vote, and have kept their word. The Mormons can carry the election by a large majority, and will probably nominate Mayor Kane, of Salt Lake, for delegate in Congress. The effect of the Edmunds law will be the eradication from politics of all the able and wealthy men of the Mormon Church.

THE fortune of four leading Western railroad men were estimated eighteen years ago as follows: Stanford, $40,000; Crocker, $25,000; Huntington, $100,000; Hopkins, $100,000; total, $265,000. They are now stintingly recorded as follows: Stanford, $80,000,000; Crocker, $40,000,000; Huntington, $50,000,000; Hopkins' estate, $30,000,000; total, $200,000. These gentlemen formed a syndicate to build a railroad to California and made immense personal fortunes from the venture.

IT has been thirty years since any new route by rail for passengers has been opened from New York city to the great lakes. This autumn and winter will add two more, the Lehigh Valley's regular express lines, and the Delaware and Lackawanna's Buffalo extension, both being on the eve of going into operation. The New York, West Shore and Buffalo Railroad will opened next year, making a sixth line from New York to Lake Erie, all nearly of the same length and making approximately the same time.

Many teachers are writing to the state superintendent of public instruction asking if their licenses are good beyond the term for which they were issued, provided the teachers were given charge of a school before the expiration of the license. A case in point was recently decided by the Jefferson circuit court, which held that the teacher was entitled to pay for a new year, although he had secured charge of the school only a few days befor his license of a year previous had expired. This case is now pending an appeal in the Supreme Court, and the superintendent advises teachers and superintendents to be on the safe side by consenting to a new examination wherever there is doubt.

In answer to a letter written to Attorney General Baldwin, the following opinion has been given by him:

James L. Allen, Covington, Ind.—Dear Sir:

All ballots cast at a general or special election must be "of a uniform width of three inches." This feature of the act of 1881 was never a part of the law of this State previous to the adoption of the present general election law. I call your attention especially to this clause, so that no mistake will be made, and you should regard it as an unpardonable offense for any printer to print a ticket on any wider or narrower paper than three inches in width. While this provision may be, as the lawyers say, "directory," still there is no excuse for blunders in printing ballots or tickets. The ballots "shall be written or printed on plain, white paper." This clause is copied from section 23 of the act of March 11, 1867 (1 R. S., 1876, p. 429), and requires no explanation. The statute also says that the ballots shall be "without any distinguishing mark or other embellishment thereon, except the name of the candidates and the office for which they are voted for." (R. S. 1881, section 4701.) This is a literal copy of the act of March 11th, above cited. Under that act it was decided by the Supreme Court that the words "Republican ticket" or "Democratic ticket," or the like, on the inside of the ballot does not authorize its rejection; that such marks are "distinguishing marks" (Unchner vs. State 29 Ind., 308; Stanley vs. Mauley, 35 Ind., 273; Millholland vs. Bryant, 29 Ind., 363.) I regard these decisions as a correct exposition of the present statute. The act of March 11, 1867, especially permitted the voter to write his name on the back of his ballot. The present law makes no reference to such a provision. Whether or not a ballot. The present law makes no reference to such a provision. Whether or not a ballot with the name of the person who cast it written on its back would be an illegal ballot, I do not pretend to say, but I advise that all voter, refrain from such a practice, as it tends to litigation and uncertainty. Such a writing comes very near the inhibition, without any distinguishing marks, and the better way is not to show it, as it oes no good, and may do great harm.

A Substitute for Black Walnut.

(Toronto Globe.)

Black birch, which is rapidly coming into favor, is a close-grained and very handsome wood, and can be easily stained to resemble walnut exactly. It is just as easy to work, and is suitable for nearly, if not all, the purposes to which black walnut is at present applied. Birch is much the same color as cherry, but the latter wood is now very scarce, and consequently dear. It is a difficult thing to obtain cherry at $50 per 1,000 feet, while birch wood can be had at any saw-mill at $1 per 1,000 feet. When properly stained it is almost impossible to distinguish the difference between it and walnut, as it is susceptible of a beautiful polish equal to any wood now used in the manufacture of furniture. In the forest throughout Ontario birch grows in abundance, especially if the land is not too boggy. There is a great difference in the wood of different sections. Where the land is high and dry the wood is firm and clear; but if the land is low and wet the wood has a tendency to be soft and often of a bluish color. In all the northern regions it can be found in great abundance, and as the tree grows to such great size little trouble is experienced in procuring it in large quantities.

It Was the Lemon.

Puck.

A man recently fell down on Warren street. He was a large individual and took up lots of the sidewalk, and a bystander thought it the proper time to be funny.

"How did you come to fall?" he inquired. "On a bit of lemon—"

"Yes, sir; on a bit of lemon," replied the corpulent one.

"But I see no lemon," said the funny man.

"Well, who said you could?" savagely roared the large individual as he got up and dusted himself off with his handkerchief. "Can any one see the lemon in half-a-dozen cocktails, say?"

The Girl Who Loved a Hotel Clerk.

Burlington Hawkeye.

Down at Long Branch last week a beautiful girl fell in love with a hotel clerk and married him. We are glad of it. Heaven be praised, no man is utterly friendless. At last there has been found somebody who loves a hotel clerk. But then, poor girl, may be that was the only way she could be sure of getting a room this side of the roof.

"No, boss, de jury am all right, but now I wants you to challenge de Jedge. I has been convicted under him seberal times already, and maybe he is beginnin' to hab prejudice agin me."

FROM THE WIRES.

NEW YORK.

The recent disaster in the Harlem railway tunnel in this city continues to be a topic [illegible] the press. The Herald says [illegible] hundred and ninety-two [illegible] trains depart and arrive at the Grand Central depot between 5 o'clock in the morning and 12 o'clock at [illegible] of the trains pass through the tunnel, and from the knowledged [illegible] the movement of trains, as brought to light through the recent accident, it seems almost miraculous that there have not been many more such disasters. The danger of running trains close together even in daylight on ordinary tracks, has often made itself apparent; but the danger attendant upon the running of trains close together in a dark, smoky tunnel, where engineers cannot [illegible] far ahead as their locomotive smoke-stacks, has never been fully appreciated by the traveling public."

The tides at Long Branch and all along shore have not been so high for forty years as they have been recently. Great damage has been done along the New Jersey coast from Seabright to Monmouth Beach, while in the vicinity of Long Branch the bulkheads were erected after the storm of 1880 at a great cost have been converted into a mass of mere wreckage. Valuable lawns have been flooded, pleasure gardens invaded and villas threatened with destruction. At Highlands station the beach has been cut out and the tracks of the New Jersey Southern Railroad lie covered with sand hills which have stopped all traffic. At Bay View and Seaside the waters have invaded lands for miles and destroyed thousands of dollars' worth of property. At Herbertstown and Summit the bridges have been lifted up from their supports and will probably be entirely swept away. Between Morgan's and South Amboy the waters have risen to within an inch of the long trestle railway bridge. At Swan Creek the docks and embankments have been washed away.

At a meeting of Brooklyn and New York milk dealers, held Thursday night, it was resolved to raise the price of milk in both cities to ten cents per quart, and to not less than seven by wholesale quantities. The resolution goes into effect Sunday, October 1.

Secretary Folger declined to be interviewed Monday, but a gentleman who had been admitted to his room stated that he certainly would accept the nomination for Governor, and added: "He will write a letter of acceptance, announcing his personal platform, properly stigmatizing the deception practiced in the State Committee, and go before the electors upon the record he has made in public life."

The total number of immigrants landed at Castle Garden, New York city, last week was 7,855. The steamship Cimbria, from Hamburg, Saturday, brought 462 steerage passengers; the City of Richmond, from Liverpool, 574, and the Germanic, from Liverpool, 678.

WASHINGTON.

The coinage of the various mints during September amounted to $8,009,252, of which 2,300,100 were standard dollars.

The accumulation of business in the Pension Bureau is something enormous. Many of the original claimants have died since filing their claims, and the difficulty of obtaining evidence on which to establish certain classes of cases has been greatly aggravated by the lapse of time. This is especially the case with dependent "father and mother claims," where the soldier filed his evidence and has since died." It is comparatively easy to obtain evidence in most of claims for pensions. All classes of pensioners have to be suspended for additional evidence of some kind. As every examiner is necessarily both judge and jury in the cases before him, subject to pension laws and rules of the Pension Office, great care is being exercised to get him started off right. There have been about 600 clerks appointed in the Pension Office within a month, most of the new appointees being assigned to duty as examiners. The new system of special agents is said to be working well, and in time will prove the most satisfactory branch of the pension service.

The annual reports of General Benet and Commodore Sicard, chiefs respectively of the Army and Navy Ordinance Bureaus, will both speak in very high terms of the system of steel wire winding in the construction of heavy ordinance. There is no reason why we can not make in this country as good guns as Armstrong, Whitworth, or Krupp, and, when once our Government enables the work to begin, our manufacturers will, in all probability, outstrip all the factories of Europe in the strength, lightness and cheapness of their heavy ordinance.

Artillery officers on light duty in the West and South will be pleased to hear that the War Department has devised a regulation saber for their use, which will hereafter be made and sold to them at the National Armory. The new saber is not so long as the cavalry saber, and weighs only about thirty-five ounces against the fifty ounces of that weapon. It has a well-rounded and sharply-blade, and is altogether a very handsome saber, with a character of its own. The first suggestion of it came from Lieutenant Alexander A. Schenck, of the Second Artillery, nephew of General Robert C. Schenck, of Ohio.

Brewster Cameron was in his office at the Department of Justice Wednesday morning. When questioned as to the time when he would make a report relative to the alleged attempt to bribe Dickson, the foreman of the Star Route jury, Cameron declined to make any statement, saying the matter was now undergoing investigation by the Attorney General, and he did not think it proper to say anything at this time.

The influence of the Administration in favor of the coalition and independent movements in Virginia and North Carolina, continues to be vigorously used. Senator Mahone is busily engaged in making changes, and his attention is now directed to the postmasters in his State. Removals and appointments follow upon his recommendation, as heretofore, and there is but little doubt of the loyalty of those whom he permits to remain in office.

Henry Clay Fisk, clerk of the Pacific Railroad Committee of the House of Representatives, has been missing since June 16. He was last seen at the Belmont, 141 [illegible] New York. His wife and two daughters are anxiously awaiting information as to his whereabouts. It is feared that he has met with foul play, or has temporarily lost his reason. His mother and brother died in the Utica Insane Asylum. He was a colonel in the Union service during the war. He was about five feet six inches tall, had brown hair, tinged with gray, a full brown beard and mustache, and brown eyes.

Secretary Teller reverses the decision of his predecessor concerning the Turtle Mountain Indian lands in Dakota, near Devils Lake, and directs that they be restored to the mass of public lands and thrown open to settlers.

The indications regarding the tobacco crop of the country are more favorably now than they were a month or more ago. The reports from Connecticut and other New England tobacco sections, and likewise from the tobacco regions of Pennsylvania were not favorable. Now, however, it is learned that the Virginia and North Carolina crops are likely to be very valuable and the "North Carolina bright tobacco" is reported the finest crop ever grown in the State.

Great regret is felt here over the failure of the effort to reach Lieutenant Greeley at his signal station at Lady Franklin Bay. He has been there nearly a year already, and the record of observations made during that time would not only be very valuable in itself, but is desired to be used in connection with those from the other stations in the International circumpolar chain. There are twelve of these stations which have been opened by the various nations, on the seventy-first parallel, or as nearly so as possible. Two of them are occupied by the United States, two by Russia, one by England and Canada, and one each by Germany, Austria, Holland, Sweden, Norway, Finland and Denmark.

Assistant Postmaster-General Hatton has issued an order that all letter-carriers while on duty must wear their full uniform, under penalties of suspension and loss of pay.

Cairo, September 30.—A grand review of British troops was held Saturday in the square before Abidin Palace, in the center of the city, where troops assembled after marching through the streets. The Khedive and his Minister and a large number of notables were present. The streets were crowded with natives. The Indian contingent and naval brigade were warmly applauded in the march past, which commenced at 4 o'clock and finished at 5:30. The strength of the force evidently made a great impression upon the Egyptians.

Athens, October 2.—The Government, in anticipation of the possible renewal of complications with Turkey, in regard to the frontier, has ordered the Greek troops on the Thessalian border to be reinforced.

Pressburg, October 2.—Six hundred Jewish families have left the city on account of the riots.

London, October 2.—It has been decided to bring a number of non-commissioned officers of the India regiments from Egypt to England so that the Queen may present them with war medals.

Dublin, October 2.—A fire, which broke out last night in the castle and military barracks at Enniskillen, in the County Feamanaugh, has been extinguished.

Manitowoc, Wis., dispatch.

The excitement caused by the horrible crime of Retock, the uxoricide, has been sustained and increased by the strange controversies precipitated by the deed. It seems that half the population of the township, almost, are claiming the $200 reward offered for his arrest. Rival Justices held two inquests over the body of the murdered wife. There were two hearses and coffins at the funeral. At one time a row was imminent, which promised to result in cutting the poor woman's body in twain in order that the remains might occupy two coffins and be carried to the grave in both hearses to the two graves that had been prepared. Retock was arrested and rearrested on several warrants issued by the two Justices, one after the other. It is also said that two rival lynching parties are being organized to make sure that the criminal does not escape through the petty quarrels of the proper administrators of the law.

A Detroit dispatch says:

Blanche Fontainbleau, for many years a well-known trapeze performer, died in this city Sunday, at the hospital, of cancer of the stomach. Her real name was Adeline Ward, and she was born in London, England. The deceased was compelled to give up her last engagement several weeks since at Hot Springs, Ark., and started for New York, but was compelled to stop here, where her illness took a fatal turn. Her expenses were paid out of the dramatic fund. She leaves two daughters, aged 16 and 9, who will be given a home by Manager White.

At a meeting of the Keeley Motor Company, the Trustee appointed by the Court stated positively that the motor would be completed and patents applied for by December.

The Western and Atlantic passenger train, at Atlanta, Ga., Monday morning, struck Alice Simmons and her son, aged 6 years, killing her instantly and knocking her boy a distance of fifty feet. The boy cannot recover.

Woodstock, Ont., dispatch:

An inquest last night on the remains of a young woman named Ellen Windergarden, alias Camp, who died under suspicious circumstances, resulted in the arrest of an old negro doctress named Munson, at whose house the woman died. The evidence went to show that for some years the house has been the resort of women seeking unlawful medical aid. Several deaths have taken place there.

Philadelphia dispatch:

The police have arrested W. G. Whittaker, residing in Paschalville, near the city limits, charged with poisoning his wife, Jennie, aged 44, and his children, Mayson age 24, Mary aged 19, Eve 15, Sarah 20, Bertha 8, and Willie 2 years. A boarder named Wayson Cooper, 19 years, old, was also poisoned. Some of the sufferers are in a critical condition. It is alleged Whittaker placed arsenic in the bucket of water with which the tea was made.

John H. Parke, the almshouse contractor arrested Thursday, was this morning held in $5,000 bail, and was sent to prison in default of the same.

The jury in the star route prosecutions in the United States District Court reported Friday that they had been unable to agree upon a verdict.

Typhoid fever has been prevalent to an unusual extent in Boston. Since June 1, over 300 cases have been reported, most of them within the last two months. The number of deaths in the same time has been sixty-six, so large a proportion as to indicate that all cases of the disease have not been reported. There are now in the City Hospital sixty-three cases of typhoid. Since August 1 there has been reported from the hospital 114 cases of the disease.

A shocking catastrophe took place at Lemont, Ill., Friday night, resulting in the death of two Poles, named John Schelenski and Anton Kosawba. These two men boarded at the house of Martin Borrowick, situated on Polish hill. They visited some saloons, and by all accounts imbibed rather freely. About 10 o'clock they retired to bed. It is supposed they were smoking cigars when they reached the house, and that cigar stumps were dropped upon the bedding, which thus started the fire. Between 11:30 and 12 o'clok, Borrowick and wife were awakened by the cries of their little boy, who occupied the bed with his parents. It was none too soon, for the flames had reached to the bed. Close beside was a small window which was quickly knocked out by Borrowick, who threw his little boy out, himself and wife escaping through the same little aperture. Separated from this sleeping-room of the boarders, Schilenki and Kosawba. The former of these was awakened by cries of the Borrowick family and succeeded in getting out of the house, but he went back immediately for his trunk and succumbed to the combined effects of smoke and flames. Both of the men were terribly burned. Nothing but bones were left. The cry of fire attracted a very large crowd, but they were unable to render any assistance. Only one man had been drinking. He was not at all drunk. The other was to be married Saturday. His trunk contained his clothes and his summer earnings.

The Picayune's Vicksburg special says that a fire broke out on the steamer R. E. Lee, while on her trip to this city, about thirty miles below here, resulting in the total destruction of the boat, with terrible loss of life. The following is a list of persons known to have been lost:

Cabin passengers—Mr. Pointer, Maysville, Ky.; Mrs. McClellan, New Orleans; Miss Adams, music teacher, on her way to Baton Rouge; an infant of Mrs. Searle, of Vicksburg, and two colored women. Also the following: Frank Jones, firemen; Ophelia Jones and Marthr Webb, second and third chambermaids; Thomas Fisher, Joe Murrel, Scott Cox, Thomas Collins and Irwin Duncan, cabin boys; Samuel Brown, roustabout; Kardo, carpenter; all the cooks and help except the pastry cook.

The books of the boat and the United States mail were lost, together with the cargo of 600 bales of cotton.

The storm on the Jersey coast increased in intensity since midnight Friday, the gale continuing from the northeast. At high tide a terrific sea was coming over the Long Branch ocean tide, while the crests of the waves touching the floor of the pier twenty feet above the ordinary tide, while the crests of the waves overtopped the railings twelve feet higher and the foam was driven by the wind clear across Ocean avenue, and against the hotels and cottages. This tride is the highest ever known here. Fifty thousand dollars would not replace Long Branch bluff as it was. The losses are confined to ocean front property east of Ocean avenue. Great damage has been done along the New Jersey coast from Seabright to Monmouth Beach.

It seems certain now that George Harris, whom Sheriff Littleton spirited off to the State penitentiary at Fort Madison to save him from a mob, is the slugger who assaulted Henry Scribner, John James and Hans Kastberg, killing the first named, and leaving the others cripples and imbecils for life. Yesterday a young boy named Ricketts, who caught a glimpse of the man who was assaulting Kastburg in his saloon, went to Fort Madison, and picked Harris out as the criminal from among 300 convicts. Harris will be lynched if he is brought back here.

Circumstances show that Scribner, who was killed, had had dealings with Harris, that Haaris knew that Scribner had frequently made large collections of rent, and that at the time of the assault he had quite a sum in his coat pocket.

A Cincinnati dispatch:

Twelve thousand dollars worth of diamonds and valuable jewelry were stolen at the Exposition building shortly after the doors were opened this morning, from the exhibit of C. Oskamp. The diamonds were insecurely kept in a show-case, fastened with two small padlocks, and the owners had no one in charge to guard the property. A visitor to the Exposition saw two men go to the case and open it with such apparent ease as to give the impression that they were the owners. After selecting all they wanted, they quietly walked away. Ten minutes afterwards the theft was discovered.

Cholera in Mexico.

There is evidence of cholera or cholera morbus in the State of Chiapas. There was twenty-eight deaths in Uxtla, a city with a population of over 5,000, in one day. The Government has taken measures to prevent the spread of the epidemic. Quarantine has been established. There is great alarm in the infected region.

Ohio has certainly gone Democratic by a handsome majority, and also elected a majority of Congressmen. Hill, of Defiance, is elected.

THE Garrett Herald of last week in speaking of Mr. Meese, republican candidate for recorder says: "He bears evidence of being a faithful soldier in the late war, as he left a leg on the battle field in defending our country." We call attention to this error and have no doubt the Herald will make the proper corrections. The facts are Mr. Meese lost his leg some time before the war, when he was a mere lad, by the kick of a horse. He was never in the army at all, as he was, of course incapable of performing active service.

JUDGE LOWRY addressed a full house in the court room, Tuesday evening, and was listened to with the closest attention. His remarks were all in a friendly tone of reasoning, and carried with them the force of sound argument. The Judge is not a high-flyer in any sense of the word, but addressed himself entirely to the reasoning faculties of his hearers. He evidently believes it to be the duty of a member of Congress to lay aside party bias to a sufficient extent to do his constituents and his country justice, whether party is served or not. And such a member is just what this district needs—one who has studied the history and institutions of our country and made himself familiar with the wants of the people.

THE Spencerville correspondent of the Republican got off the following rich and original note last week: "The COURIER ought to have put Miller's majority at 329 instead of 300. It is the lucky number, but then probably a little of that popular beverage, the democratic platform, kind of dazed his brain." The editor of this paper is well known as a temperance man, both in belief and in practice, and the author of the above 'sawed' has no doubt drank barrels of whisky where the editor of the COURIER has not tasted a drop. Yet with that spirit of hypocrisy so peculiar to republicans he hides his own short comings in such self glorification as this. As to the "329" we are willing to put Miller down for a majority of that size, and even larger, but it might be well to say to the gentleman, that democrats are showing no disposition to remind the people of the "329" matter, or of any of the other charges, which republicans a few years ago, brought up against the now dead president.

Death of Hon. Peter Heller.

The venerable Peter Heller, one of the earliest settlers in Allen county and widely known by reason of his extensive travels and former prominence in business and political circles, died last Wednesday evening at the residence of his daughter, Mrs. Christian Offi. For several years past Mr. Heller's mental faculties have so waned that his reason was dethroned and he was filled with the wildest and most peculiar vagaries. At one time he owned two hundred acres of land in Eel River township on the Goshen road. He surveyed the road leading from Fort Wayne to Auburn, and the intersection of the two highways has always been known as Heller's Corners. A postoffice was subsequently established there, and Mr. Heller was one of its first postmasters.—Ft. Wayne News.

THE inspiration for young men to become republicans comes naturally with the love of country and the history of the parties recorded for the past thirty years.—[Auburn Republican.

Yes, the "inspiration" must come from some unseen record. The young man would not naturally take to the republican party if he were led to study the history of Grant's administration with its whisky ring frauds; its Boss Shepard doings. The Credit Mobelier, the seating of a fraudlent president in 76; the combination of monopilies under republican greed for office to sap the country of its life-blood; the political quarrels for office which prompted Guitean, a Stalwart of the Stalwarts to murder the president of the United States, and a trial which cost more than one million dollars; a pack of Star Route theives, one of whom is the secretary of the national republican committee, who have already cost the government more than $300,000. The monopolists protected and the laboring man taxed to sustain $90,000,000 appropriations. The young man must certainly feel inspired when he realizes that he has been duped by the republican tactics of deception and false pretentions.—Lagrange Democrat.

A VERY nice little account of the "Morey letter" is going the rounds of the papers. It is claimed that John I. Davenport, of New York, has found the real author, a man named Hadley, who had been a republican, but was at that time employed by the democrats. After telling how long he practiced to make a fac simile of Garfield's handwriting, the account goes on to tell how he got the right kind of paper. "Stationery stores were ransacked to find paper similar to that used at Mentor, and then Hadley wrote the famous forgery. An envelope was prepared to correspond with that which Hadley received from Mentor, and put through a process to make it look soiled and worn."

One little fact shows that this story is a crude invention. The Morey forger used the ordinary stationery of the house of representatives. Both the paper and the envelope bore the words "House of Representatives, Washington, D. C." The real author did not want "paper similar to that used at Mentor," or an envelope like those Garfield used during the campaign; for the Morey letter purported to have been written by Garfield while in the house of representatives.

THE Garrett Herald departs from its usual fairness this week, to make a point against Mr. Houser, the marshal of that place, for requiring Mason Long's troupe to pay a license of $2.00 for selling his book on the street. One of its correspondents goes off into spasms of righteous indignation over the matter, making it appear that the marshal collected the license because Long was making a temperance speech. This was not the case, Mr. Houser, as just stated, collected the fee for the privilege of selling articles on the street, as he always has done. He was directed to do this by the town council and could not have shirked his duty had he desired to do so. It is well known that he has generally collected these fees and no one has a right to abuse him for it.

THE Press, last week, is inclined to take a very fair view of the star route cases, with the exception of the little matter about Dorsey. The question we cared most for, was: 'How can the party of great moral ideas, keep at the head of its national committee a man like Dorsey, who has been for a long time under arrest, and on trial for crime, and who is, as the Press admits, guilty of the charges brought against him?' In short, how does a half-convicted thief suit as secretary of the national committee?

OUR Republican exchanges still feel bad over the fact that John Lowry is called on to speak at soldiers' reunions. If he voted the Republican ticket it would be all right, no matter what side he took during the rebellion. They would receive him with open arms, and say never a word about that little war matter, as they have already taken to their bosoms and forgiven the rebel Longstreet, and the guerilla Mosby. Both these worthies now hold fat federal offices.

To Educate the Indian.

White's institute, a few miles south of this city, is about to be brought into prominence by the fact that a proposition has been made by the government to convert the property into an Indian school. As discussing the proposition is to take into the school from the Indian agencies some thirty or more pupils, for whom the government will pay a liberal tuition, to be educated under the auspices of the society of Friends for duties of teachers at the government agencies in different portions of the west. Embraced in this property is seven hundred acres of valuable land on which are erected substantial brick buildings which will amply accommodate the number of pupils it is proposed to instruct.—Wabash Plain Dealer.

EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE.

H. C. Holloway, M. V. B. Spencer, Ed. Harter, Ira Walsh.

Extensive improvements have been made the past year.—Plain Dealer.

THE ladies of this place intend having a lunch party next Tuesday evening, at A. Yesbra's store room at the east end of town, the proceeds of which are to be used to help purchase an organ for the M. E. Church. Each lady who attends takes a box which must contain a lunch for two persons, and her name written on a card or a piece of paper. Each gentleman present buys a box and takes supper with the lady whose name he finds in his box.—West Unity Eagle.

"BOTH Auburn and Butler maintain temperance societies. One reason why Waterloo does not, is that it does not need such an organization as badly as our neighbors."—Press.

And perhaps a still better reason is to be found in the continued and every-day presence at Waterloo of that great temperance advocate and reformer, C. K. Baxter.

A NEW drama brought out in London, contains drunkenness, a wedding, a forgery, a murder, a railway collision, a financial panic, a riot, the wrecking of a bark, starvation and arson. The author evidently thought he had introduced all the crimes in the catalogue, but he forgot the River and Harbor bill.—LaGrange Standard.

WE see by a Cleveland paper that the Canada Southern railroad is to be extended from Fayette to Chicago. If the report is true, we believe the road could be taken away from the old road bed, three miles north of town, and have the road built by way of West Unity.—West Unity Eagle.

THE title of a recent Sunday school lesson was: "The Rich Young Man," and the golden text was "One thing thou lackest." A teacher in the primary class asked a little tot to repeat the two, and looking earnestly into the young lady's face, the child said: "One thing thou lackest—a rich young man."

FRANK JAMES has surrendered himself to the authorities in Missouri. He gave himself up of his own accord, as he had become disheartened at being deserted by his former gang, and thought he would have a better showing by giving himself up voluntarily.

THE Elkhart Monitor says a wagon with the following verse painted on the cover, went through that town last week:

> "Fargo, Dakota, farewell!
> Forever adieu;
> I'll emigrate to hell,
> But never to you."

AFTER Ben Harrison's temperance speech in Dayton, Ohio, last week, he and some friends repaired to a neighboring saloon and whiled away a few hours very pleasantly. A wicked democrat would be suspected of taking a drink.

WHAT has become of the rebel war debt? Isn't it about time that Republican orators began to talk the matter up? And where, oh, where is the Solid South? The great moral party is certainly straying from its landmarks.

IT might be well to remind Republican orators who are telling the people how the tariff helps the farmer, that wheat has never touched $2.50 per bushel since 1854, when there was a low tariff—a tariff for revenue, only.

THE old canal bed in Ft. Wayne is nearly all filled up, and the new railroad buildings will stand where once the "raging canal" bore its burden of the internal commerce of the north end of the state.

DELAWARE, last week, went, democratic by a small majority.

SLEEPING cars were first used in 1858.

OBITUARY.

Julia Cahow, whose maiden name was Chidsey, was born at Pompey Hill, Onondaga county, New York, July 9th, 1814. In the year 1835, she emigrated with her mother and three younger brothers and one older sister to Medina county, Ohio. In the year 1837, she was united in marriage to Mathew B. Hamilton and removed with her husband to DeKalb county, Indiana, Jan., 1843. In May of the same year, her husband was drowned in the St. Joe river, near Orangeville; thus leaving her a widow with two small children. She removed to Ohio, and in 1846 she was united in marriage to Eden Hamilton, with whom she had lived but three years, when she was once more bereaved of her husband. In 1854, she was again bound in the union of marriage to Wm. Cahow. To this union was born one son. In 1877, death again deprived her of her companion this being the third union thus separated. She united with the Disciple church in 1852 and remained a faithful christain until death. The bible was her constant study in which she found great enjoyment. Of a family of eleven children but one brother survives her. She was loved and respected by all who knew her. She leaves a family of three sons to mourn her death which occurred Oct. 8, 1882, aged 68 years, 2 months and 29 days.

To my Friends and Patrons.

Having decided to remain at home and continue the agency business of real estate, fire, life and steamship insurance and collections, in connection with that of notary public, I shall be pleased to meet all of you at any time at my office. I shall pay particular attention to the buying and selling of real estate, and if you want to buy or sell I can be of service to you. I represent only the best insurance companies both in fire and life, and shall be pleased to place your insurance where, in case of loss, every cent will be paid.

Respectfully yours,
THOS. H. SPROTT.

Be sure, before buying, to examine the Name Plate to be found on the rear of every Buggy manufactured by us, for NONE ARE GENUINE unless they bear the name

Columbus Buggy Company,
COLUMBUS OHIO.

Many inferior goods are offered as Columbus Buggies, and care should be used to distinguish between "Columbus Buggies" and Columbus Buggy Co's. Buggies.

TESTIMONIALS.

GENTLEMEN: Your buggies have given me entire satisfaction, both in style and durability. I have used them for the past three years. Your recent improvements on road wagons I consider the best in the market.

JAMES H. RAMBURG.
Frederick Maryland.

DEAR SIRS: We have used buggies of your make that have been in use three years, and no buggy we have that cost twice the amount has given better satisfaction.

JAMES H. ALEXANDER.
Johnstown Pa.

GENTLEMEN: We have used the Columbus Buggy Company's work for the last five years and can conscientiously recommend it as strictly first class as to style, material, workmanship and durability. Your buggies have given better satisfaction than any other make of vehicles we had in use for the last ten years.

PALMER & WHITTAKER.
Red Oak Iowa.

GENTLEMEN: It gives me pleasure to state that I have been selling your buggies and carriages for four years, and can safely recommend them to any one in want of a buggy or carriage. Yours Truly, J. L. GRIBBLE.
Macomb, Illinois.

GENTLEMEN: With over fifteen years experience in building buggies, wagons, &c., I do not hesitate in saying your buggies and carriages are strictly first-class in workmanship, material and proportions, filling a long-felt want for a reliable article that can be sold at a price lower than any ordinary manufacturer can produce and sell the same quality of work at. Yours, etc. I. S. KRICK, Communipaw Pa.

GENTLEMEN: I have used your Brewster side bar buggies for four years, together with buggies that cost me $300 and $400, and your buggies were the first that went out, on account of being side-bar. They have not cost me to for repairs, and those I have sold of your make have given good satisfaction. I think that you make the cheapest and best road wagons that are made in the United States for the money. Respectfully, F. H. HAMLIN, Lawrence Kansas.

DEAR SIRS: We have been using your buggies for the last four or five years. They have given entire satisfaction. I think they are the best buggies made for the money.
W. B. GRIMES & CO., Liveryman Whitehall Illinois.

GENTLEMEN: We have been handling your work for two seasons, and have in every instance found your buggies first class. We never have had one of your jobs returned to us for repairs; neither have we had a single complaint on account of work not being perfectly satisfactory. Very Respectfully, H. P. BUCKLEY & CO., Springfield, Illinois.

GENTLEMEN. I have no hesitancy in saying that the buggies manufactured by the Columbus Buggy Company are the best work for the price I have any knowledge of. In not a single instance has there been any dissatisfaction on the part of any one of my customers.

FRANK L HALL.
Owensboro, Ky.

DEAR SIRS: For the past two years we have used your buggies side by side with other makes in both our stables, and are perfectly satisfied with the strength, durability and workmanship compared with others. As fast as our stock in livery is used up we shall replace them with your manufacture, knowing from experience that it is the best we can do. Respectfully,

SWEET & FOLLANSBEE,
Quincy Illinois.

For sale by dealers everywhere.

ANY of our readers who will enclose two 3 cent stamps in a letter to the Columbus Buggy Co., Columbus O., will receive in return a beautiful engraving in colors, representing an Australian scene and their manner of travelling in that country with ostriches as a motor. They have this picture (the packing costing six cents) to all who may send for it, desiring in this manner to make themselves more widely known to the people.

—Our former neighbor Mrs. John Meek, of Waterloo, made this office a short visit this week and renewed old acquaintance. Come again, we are always glad to meet our friends.

—Mace Long and his "Pilgrims" entertained a mixed audience on our streets Saturday evening. Though his book is of questionable value to young people, he sells a great many of them.

—Court is still grinding away and under the management of Judge Hoffman, an unusual amount of business will be completed, greatly to the satisfaction of litigants and the public generally.

—The ladies should not get their winter hats nor bonnets until they see the beautiful styles at Mrs. Little's. She will start east to-morrow and return next week with the latest styles of ladies' headwear, ribbons, etc.

—A telegraph line from New York to Chicago is to be run through this place. Quite a lot of poles are now at the Wabash depot, and will soon be put in position. The line will run through town on Seventh street.

—An unfortunate feature in reunions is the amount of beer drinking indulged in. Men who seldom or never take a drink, are, on these joyous occasions, called in and treated, and too frequently get more than they can carry.

—We have neglected to enlighten the people that our docile, quiet and straight-up-and-down drayman, James Rhodenbaugh, has taken unto himself a wife. Jim., the COURIER hopes your new life will be prosperous and happy.

—As will be seen by a notice we publish this week, W. A. Shreve, executor, will sell the personal property of the late Thomas J. Shreve, at the residence of the latter, on the Newville road, east of town, on Friday, October 27.

—Jacob VanAuken, father of J. J. VanAuken, of this place, died last week at his home near Pleasant Lake. He was over 80 years old. He had long been a prominent citizen of that part of the country and was highly respected.

—The new superintendent of the Jackson road went south one day last week and returned next day. He traveled on a hand car in order to examine the condition of the track better. He intends to put the road bed in good condition as soon as it can be done.

H. M. Betts, druggist, Lagrange, says: "I consider there is great merit in Brown's Iron Bitters."

—We had a pleasant call this week from A. M. A. Miller, now of Hicksville, who has been here a few days visiting relatives. He is now in the hardware business in that thriving town, and doing a prosperous business.

—As will be seen by notice in this week's paper, our young friend Orson Edge has stepped down and out of the state of single blessedness, and got married. The young people have our best wishes for their future happiness.

—There will be another cheap excursion over the Wabash to Detroit, on Thursday, October 19, for the benefit of the Lutheran and M. E. churches at Butler. The train leaves Auburn at 5 o'clock a. m. Fare for the round trip from here is $2.00.

—Do not forget the meeting for Ex-Governor Isaac P. Gray on Friday of this week, in Auburn. The speech takes place at 2 o'clock p. m. Governor Gray has a host of warm friends in this part of the state, and we should see to it that he has a good audience.

—The old building now occupied by Mr. Halliam is being removed to another lot, in order to make room for a new brick. We understand that Dr. Swartz is putting up the new building. The change will a be decided improvement in that part of Main street.

—Dr. Allyn and Charles Schaab, accompanied by Misses Anise and Jennie Cowan, Miss Frankie Ryan and Miss Tillie Williamson caused quite a flutter among the COURIER typos Tuesday by making them a chatty call. Always glad to see the young folks. Call again.

—Dr. C. B. Allyn will return to his Florida home next week. He gives a glowing account of the "land of the orange and vine," and invites all his northern friends to come down and eat "raw" oranges with him at any time that suits their convenience, as he is now raising his own.

—Last night the engineer of Pittsburg express No. 2 struck a stuffed man or "dummy" that had been placed on the track near Hamlet, west of Valparaiso. The engineer stopped his train and went back to find that there was no fatality as he feared.—Fort Wayne News Oct. 5.

—Don't fail to read Tom Mays' letter on our first page. Tom gives democrats some good advice. He has had some experience in the matters he speaks of, but after all the unfair treatment he received at the hands of some of his own party, he comes up manfully and tells them to stick to their men.

—Joseph Hossler, living near Corunna, died last Wednesday from the effects of a fall. He was hauling logs with a wagon, and on Tuesday was taken with a fit, to which it seems he was subject, and fell from the log on which he was riding. He was not hurt by the wagon, but the fall injured him internally.

—The members of the Catholic church here, assisted by other friends of the 88th boys, got them up an excellent dinner Tuesday. In the room next west of the postoffice, It was free to the members of the regiment, but the committee in return for this hospitality made a liberal donation to the church.

—Ferguson & Elliot granite and marble dealers of Columbia City, have just erected a beautiful monument over the remains of the late John Ehlers. They are agents for the celebrated Lima iron fence, and parties desiring a good substantial as well as an ornamental fence, should see F. & E. before purchasing, or address them at Columbia City, Ind.

—Willis D. Maier, of the Ft. Wayne Fin and Feather, and candidate on the democratic ticket for clerk of Allen county, George Jones, foreman of the Fort Wayne Gazette, and Col. I. B. McDonald, of the Columbia City Herald, showed their good looking faces in the COURIER office Tuesday. They were all soldiers and had come up to talk over old times.

—Byron Rainier, who was arrested here last summer for an assault on J. A. Marlett and others, but who escaped after being convicted of the offense, was arrested on the fair grounds at Waterloo last Friday, and brought here to the county jail. He was bailed out the next day by his brother Joe and Wm. Sheffer. Constable Smith did the job with his little handcuff.

Mr. J. Vankerveen, Druggist, Grand Haven, Mich—I can safely recommend Ely's Cream Balm for the cure of Catarrh, Cold in Head, &c. Before I have used the first bottle I purchased of you I find myself cured. At times I could scarcely smell anything and had a headache most of the time. Henry Lilly, Agent for the American Express Co., Grand Haven, Mich. 2t.

—F. L. Britton, of the Corunna band, called in to visit the COURIER Tuesday. Like all the boys of the band, he takes pride in the organization of which he is a member. They expect to give a series of entertainments this winter in order to assist in defraying the heavy expense to which they have been put in getting up their new uniforms. We have no doubt the citizens of the county will give them a generous support.

CORRESPONDENCE.

WATERLOO.

The fair was an immense success. It is claimed that 12,000 tickets were sold on Thursday. The crowd was so great, that visitors found some difficulty in seeing the articles on exhibition.

John Henderson, of Jackson, had a nice display of cattle and sheep. He had eight head of his fine Devons, on which he received all the premiums in that class. His twenty head of Shropshire Downs, all received premiums in their class, and made a fine show, as did also, his Oxford Downs. These were a rare sight to many of our people, and attracted a good deal of attention.

E. B. Gerber, democratic candidate for joint representative was here last week attending the fair. He made a good impression on all he met, and will make a splendid run in this county. Mr. Gerber, though originally a farmer, is now in the hardware business at Ligonier, and is a man thoroughly competent to represent the people of this district in the state legislature.

Mr. and Mrs. J. H. Hoffman, and Jesse L. Dunning of Ligonier, attended the fair last week.

Fare to Ligonier and return during the fair there this week, is $1,20.

Let our citizens turn out and go up to Angola, and see the fair. Angola has always been liberal in patronizing us.

Dan Thomas, of Richland township, took a premium on his fine young horse as he has done several times before.

Mrs. Dickinson, of this place, and Mr. Fleming, of Auburn, as well as a lady from Ligonier, made fine displays of flowers and plants.

Several pockets were picked during the fair, our old friend John Beidler being among the unfortunate ones.

For once, the hacks had their hands full. They could not carry all the crowd at one time on Thursday.

Among the collections that took premiums at the fair, should be noticed the fine collection of paintings by Willie Straub. He took four first, and three second premiums, amounting in all to $11,00. This is pretty good for a boy of sixteen. He has many friends and relatives in this county, who will be pleased to see how he is succeeding in his chosen profession.

Hon. L. D. Britton had a fine yearling colt that took first premium in its class, and several other articles, some of which we failed to get.

Latta, of Ligonier, was on hand with some fine stock. He had also, his well known Haw Patch on exhibition.

Williard Fee received premiums on his hogs amounting to $11,00, and $4,00 on his premium calf.

Will S. Gilbert, of Chicago, is in town canvassing for that excellent work. The Literary Encyclopedia. It is a brief biography of all of our American literary celebrities, and in each case give an extract from their choicest pieces. It is a splendid book.

BUTLER.

New buildings continue to be commenced, and the good weather is very favorable.

Ezra Hawkins has another kiln of brick ready to burn. No brick famine this winter.

Irene Campbell is visiting at Sedan.

David Knisley's marriage to Eva Mason reported in last week's Courier, proved premature. It may happen yet.

A. J. Mason's new dwelling is finished, and occupied by himself and family.

Our sick people are improving.

Milton Bowman is able to be up a little.

W. F. Garrison is reported better.

The young lady at Egnew's is improving.

The fair was liberally patronized by the people of Butler.

Mr. May, the tailor, has purchased the dwelling just north of Seed's new building and will move there soon.

W. W. Snyder, of Norwalk, Ohio, has purchased the dwelling on the northeast corner of Pearl and Green streets and has moved there.

S. D. Freely is not married yet, but is improving his house.

MCKINLEY'S SCHOOL-HOUSE.

Hon. D. D. Moody, the next representative of DeKalb, propounded democratic principles at this place Friday evening, Oct. 6. As the notice was very short and the audience large, we can but infer that the people are awake to their interests and propose to support a man whose efficiency has already been proven. Mr. Moody ably discussed the tariff and other questions of national interest, and then turned his attention to the proposed prohibitory amendments, which he completely dissected, that total prohibition is unwise and unfair; that it is impossible to accomplish it—the stability of our license system — and the silly attempt of republican leaders to lie silently and safely on both sides of the question was clearly illustrated. Mr. Moody handles his question without gloves, and his plain definition of his position met the approbation of the thinking men of all parties. Hurrah for Moody!

The Fair.

We learn from the officers of the fair, that it has been one of the most successful, if not the most successful fair they have ever held. The total number of tickets sold during the week amounts to 15,557. License receipts $871. Speed over $300, and from all sources the receipts of the week amounted to about $5425. The best day, was as usual on Thursday, when about 10500 tickets were sold. This is the largest number ever sold in one day. The managers feel very much gratified by their success. It will greatly assist to pay off the debt that has been bothering them somewhat.

—Joseph Shilling, one of our most prominent citizens has disappeared very mysteriously. He went to visit friends at Fremont, Steuben county, and last Saturday his sons here received a letter from him, dated at Detroit, saying that he would go from there to Bay City, and that they need not look for him as he would never return. The sons at once started to Detroit to find some clue to this strange proceeding. They returned Sunday night, and on Monday C. P. Houser went with them, on a second trip. They went to the hotel from which the letter was written, and there learned that such a man had been there, and they remembered his calling for paper and writing a letter. No further information could be gained. The sons then went on to Bay City to see if any other trace could be found, but to the present nothing farther has been learned of his whereabouts.

—Dr. Levi Keehn, of Milford, Ind., one of the 88th boys, was here at the reunion. He was wounded at Mission Ridge, having lost a leg there. On his return, he was for a time a pupil under the editor of this paper, thus establishing friendly relations that have existed ever since. He is now located in the practice of medicine at Milford, and has a good run of business. He has for some years been trustee of his township, and has not only been a brave soldier, but a very useful citizen.

—T. H. Sprott, as will be seen by a notice elsewhere in this paper, is still doing the leading insurance business. As he represents none but sound companies, it will be safe to insure with him. No business man or farmer can afford to take the chances of fire during the coming winter when he can insure his property, and so get its value in cash in case of loss.

—The social connected with the Presbyterian church will be entertained in the basement of the church on next Wednesday afternoon, Oct. 18, from 5 to 7 p. m. SEC'Y.

My son, aged nine years, was afflicted with Catarrh; the use of Ely's Cream Balm effected a complete cure. W. E. Hamman, Druggist, Easton, Pa.

The Catholic Fair.

The location of the fair is changed and it will be held in Hebel's hall, on the corner, and over Hebel's grocery store, each evening of next week. On Monday evening the votes for the different prizes will be begun. One of these prizes will be awarded each evening as follows. Wednesday evening, a splendid cane to the most popular young man; Thursday evening, a lady's gold watch to the most popular young lady; Friday evening a rocking chair will be presented to the minister receiving the greatest number of votes; Saturday evening, a fine rocking chair will be awarded to the married lady receiving the greatest number of votes. The voting for all these will begin on Monday evening and continue until decided. Each evening there will be speeches by different persons. Monday evening by D. Y. Husselman; Tuesday evening by E. D. Hartman; Wednesday evening by W. H. Dills; Thursday evening by O. K. Hubbel; Friday evening by Hon. D. D. Moody, and Saturday evening by R. Wes. McBride. Come out everybody and give them a successful fair.

FOOL'S GOLD.

Poor, fond fool, nursing with exclusive dreams,
As some love-token to your lips you lay,
Murmuring, "Ah, he is truer than he seems,
I shall be [illegible]—
These [illegible] gold—
What are they but "fool's gold?"

Oh, statesman, grasping with rash, eager hand,
The reins of power, ask your [illegible]
Whether the glory of self or of the land
Be first with you! Let naught your hands defile—
Unless your ends be pure all treasure must Turn to mere shining dust.

Sisters, for whom to-day a nobler race
Is open than the world has ever known,
Will ye [illegible] with your shreds of lace,
And soulless jewels—take for bread a stone!
The glittering baubles in your nerveless hold—
Are they not mere "fool's gold?"

Oh, vague philosopher, whose empty creed
Fits for th[illegible] of pleasure for the fair,
Bright day[illegible]
Leaves [illegible] ware
Lest these false gods that to your hearts you fold
Prove in the end "fool's gold!"

Look to it, friends, your aims be pure and high,
Lest—like those ships Virginian pilgrims sent,
Sailing to eastward, freighted heavily
With shining dust on which all hopes were bent—
The glittering [illegible] for which your souls are sold
Be proven but "fool's gold."

OUR MITE.

Times-Star.

Me an' some of the boys was out prospectin'. After a week of the cussedest luck we come back, aggravated and disgusted with everybody and everything. It was nigh onto midnight when we struck camp, and jest about as chilly as you'd care to have it. Jem Curry, or Big Jim, as we most generally called him, was a standin' outside, with his arms folded across his chest, looking lonesomer than I'd ever seen him afore, though Jim was one of the lonesome kind, always mooning by hisself. If you'd a' ask him what he was thinking about he'd just say one word: "Home."

"Wait a minnit, boys," says he, taking the pipe out of his mouth. "Don't go in ye—there's something in there."

He spoke in a skeered kind of way, and we all gathered round him, wonderin' what had happened.

"Sit down, for I know yer tired, and I'll tell ye what's up," says Jim in the solemnest tones.

We dropped on the log along side the tent, and waited curiously for him to speak.

"Well, boys," says he, heaving a long sigh, "night afore last I was sittin' jest where you are, feeling awful blue thinking of the little ones that, when all of a sudden I saw a mite of a thing standin' near me. I tell you I was skeered for a minnit. Thought sure 'twas the ghost of one of my—." He kind of gulped something down afore he could say "children."

"I put my hand out and touched the critter, and found 'twas alive. Where did ye come from, sonny? says I, at a venture, not knowing whether it 'twas a sonny or a sissy. It ketched my hand and says in a squeaky voice: 'Come, mamma.' I went with it and it wandered around; 'peared to be looking for something. Purty soon I spied a woman, sittin' on the ground, leanin' agin a tree. Well, you might have knocked me over with a straw I was that a-tonished. "Good evening ma'am," says I, as polite as if there was 100 eyes lookin' at us instead of only the big shiny moon and thousand twinklin' stars. She didn't answer, so I went a step nearer and saw her face was as white as—as—I was goin' to say a sheet, but it was whiter'n any sheet I've seen lately. Then I picked her up—there warn't no more left of her than of a baby—and brought her into camp, the mite trottin' along after me.

"Abe was doubled up on the buff'lo skin, snoozin' like all forty. I gave him a kick. He jumped up and began rubbin' his eyes.

"Trapped some game, Jim?"

'Get a light and you'll see,' says I, layin' the limp critter on the rug.

"He made a light, and when he caught sight of my game he gave a yell like a wild Ingin.

"'Holy poker, Jim! whar'd ye find it?' says he.

"Out there sittin' agin a tree. Bring the whisky, and let's see if its dead.'

"We rubbed her hands, soused water in her face, and put raw whisky in her mouth. Abe was for ontightenin' her frock, but I said 'no, if she comes to she'll do it herself; if she's dead'—well, we thought of our one wimmen folks, an' kind o' covered her up an' waited.

"After a while she gave a sigh' opened her eyes and stared around.

"'It's all right, ma'am," says I, "you re with friends.'

"Then she put her hand out, an' I knew she was feelin' for the mite. I looked 'round the tent. There the little thing sat starin' with its big eyes, not sayin' a word. I brought it over and put it where she could touch it, and you'd jest felt sorry to seen the looks that came into her white face. I got a bit of cold ven'son an' put it in her mouth, but she shook her head.

"All right, ma'am, says I; 'If you can't eat that I'll give you spoon vittles.'

"I got some hard tack, soaked it in whisky, and she swallowed a little. Abe took the mite on his knee and fed it. You jes oughter see it stow away the ven'son and biscuit. Then he put it 'long side its mother, and they both fell asleep.

"'Jim's, thinkerin' that corner,' whispered Abe.

"Not both of us,' says I, pointin' to the woman's white face, "it isn't safe.

So we took turns watching. The mite slept like a tired kitten, but 'she' moaned all night. In the morning we made her a cup of tea. Maybe she didn't gulp it down! Then I brought a basin of water and asked her if she'd like to take a wash. She raised her hand, but it fell helplessly beside.

"P'raps I'd better do it for you."

She looked kinder grateful, and while I bathed her poor, thin face, Abe stood in the door snickering. When I finished he took the baby away. After a while the mite came in with its hands and face clean and its hair slick and combed, then I knew he had been tryin' his hand as a nurse, too. During the afternoon the woman brightened up a bit an' told us her story.

It 'pears she and her husband come from Ohio more'n two years ago and settled on government land. Their nearest neighbors lived in a cabin some three miles off. About six months ago they got disgusted, picked up their traps and left. Soon after her husband was taken down with rheumatics, so she had to do all the chores and tend her baby and her sick husband. Next their one horse died. The husband worried and grew worse; 'twarn't mending matters at last the rheumatis struck his heart, and he went off all of a sudden, leaving her and the mite alone, not a living soul within twenty miles of them. For a day or two she was nearly wild with fright and lonesomeness. Then she dug a grave and she with the mite buried the dead man. Boys, your hearts 'ud just ached if you'd seen the skeered look in her face when she was tellin' of it. After that she picked up a few duds and what grub was in the cabin and started for Cheyenne, but saw the gates of heaven open, and concluded to stay in. She went up the hills to invite you all down to the funeral; he isn't back yet, so I'll speak for you.

Jim looked lonesomer than ever when he stopped talking. His heart was nearly as big as his body, and that was 6 feet long. He put his hand over his eyes and I saw something glisten on the end of his nose. It mighth ave been a drop of dew that fell from the trees over our heads, only dewdrops ain't hanging around frosty nights!

"Come and have a look at her." says he.

We bared our heads and followed him into the tent. On the buffalo-skin lay the woman, or girl, for she was quite young, and the child near her, sound asleep. Jim had stuffed his coat between to draw a line between the livin' and dead as he put it.

We sat down and talked in a sort of whisper about the time when the ones we loved went away from us forever. First thing we knew a streak of light shot up in the east, then a couple of us went out to prepare the grave, while the others tied up the tent. No one thought of breakfast; at least no one had the heart to speak of it.

"Look here boys!" says Jim, coming over to our new cemetery. "Do any of you know what them preacher fellows say at buryin's? It's something 'bout 'He that believes in Me shall live, even though he be dead.'"

We shook our heads and Jim went on.

"It isn't Christianlike to drop her in ter that hole without a word. I vote that we all kneel down and say the Lord's prayer afore we dump her in.'

The boys agreed to this, and we all filed back to the tent. A couple of us lifted the purty little critter, as keerful as a mother 'ud lift a baby, and carried her out. Abe took the mite in his arms and the rest followed, like a sure enough procession.

"Here, yonker, wake up and take a last peep at yer ma," says Abe. And we knelt down, and I reckon we looked about as sheepish as any half dozen fellows ye ever seed. You can jest bet our hearts was thumpin' agin our side, and if we didn't cry it wasn't 'cause we didn't wanter. At last I sed: "Jim you're runnin' this thing; s'pose you begin the prayer." He did, and we all jined in; some 'peared to forget the words, but we got through after a fashion; then dropped the body into the grave as tenderly as we could. As Jim threw the first shovelful of dirt he said in a choking way: "Rest in Peace." Each of us took a hand at it, repeating the same words. There warn't any blubberin' at that funeral, but you bet 'twas awful solemn. It took us a whole week to get straightened up agin and get the kink out of our hearts.

The little critter the dead woman left us was a living sermon to all on us. P'haps we didn't love her, and p'haps we didn't try not to swear when she was around? We all chipped in and sent Abe to Cheyenne to buy black frocks for her. All claimed a share in her; and nights, when she was sleeping like a kitten, we'd tell what we'd do when she was big enough to begin larnin'. When we'd go to bunk, we'd take turns in holding her in our arms, so as to keep her warm. Ah! she was the cutest, lovin'est little thing you ever seed. We never knewn her name so we always called her "Mite." When we went up into the mountains we'd take her along, and she'd play 'round till she got tired; then some one 'ud put her to sleep. Each man had a pet name for her. She was Abe's sunshine, Jim's blossom, and my birdie. I s'pose you'll smile at my tears, but I can't keep them back when I think of her. You see there were a lot of love 'cumulatin', as it was, in our hearts when she dropped into camp, and we poured every bit of it right out onto her.

The next winter she took cold, no one could tell how it happened, for we were very keerful of her. It was terrible sudden—only lasted three days—then she jest skipped into the open gate after her mother. Well, maybe, there wasn't blubberin' at that funeral! If you'd been thar you'd thought the queen of England and all her ancestors was dead. We dressed our mite in a little black frock, so her mother 'ud know we'd done the square thing by her. Jim was the hearse, and when we reached the cemetery each man took her in his arms an' held her till the next had to take her from him almost by force. Last of all Abe got her. He kissed the dear little face 'about twenty times, then said, all in a tremble: "I can't do it boys; some one else 'll have to put her in.' "I'll do it, Abe," says I reaching for her; for, 'tween you an' me, I was glad to get her in my arms once more. He walked away sobbing like a woman.

We said the Lord's prayer as at her mother's buryin'; then lowered her into the tiny grave with our hands. We covered the innocent little face, so dear to every man of us, with a clean handkerchief; 'twas Abe's best; and Jim turned his head aside when he dropped this earth on her, saying in a shaky voice: "Now I lay me down to sleep." Somehow Jim could always think of the right kind of prayers. You bet there wasn't no stones in the earth that covered her little body, for every grain of it was passed through a fine sieve before 'twas used for filling up. Abe made a cross of wood, an' carved on it:

"Sacred To The Memory Of Our Little Mite.

and planted it at the head of the grave Jim made one like it, and just put the words on it. We made a fence of logs for our cemetry, and used to sit on them at night, smoking our pipes an' talkin' about our baby. But we couldn't stand the lonesomeness after she was gone, so we pulled up stakes and left. Before going each man laid a bunch of evergreens on the graves of Mite and her mother, and I wouldn't like to swear that our eyes were tearless when we left them to their everlasting rest.

"Mite's Mother"

Early Rose and Aldine.

New York Tribune.

Mr. Vanderbilt's pair, Early Rose and Aldine, were brought to this city from Hartford on Friday last, and are now in Mr. Vanderbilt's stable at Madison avenue and Fifty-first street. Yesterday, when seen by a Tribune reporter, they appeared to be in perfect racing condition, as they lazily ate the heads off the rye straw in which they walked knee deep. In another spacious stall stood Maud S. She fondled the manager of the stable as he gave her big lumps of white sugar. Close by was Lysander, while Leander and Bay Dick stood hitched to a road wag[illegible] Mr. Vanderbilt. Shortly after 3 o'clock he came in, and sitting down chatted with the reporter, who remarked that it was said that he had secured a team that would beat the world. Mr. Vanderbilt laughed as he said in reply.

"Not to beat the world, because that is a very large place. But they are pretty fast, and I think will beat Mr. Work's team should he accept Mr. Eastman's challenge. But I hardly think he will, as it would only be taking his money. I should not expect to keep a team that could beat anything on the road for five years. Old horses, like old men, must give way for younger ones, and while I believe that Aldine and Early Rose are the fastest team hitched, still there has been such a great improvement in trotting horses in the last five years that I am forced to think that there will be almost as much improvement in the next five years."

"Where did you buy the pair?"

"Early Rose I bought recently for $18,035. About two weeks ago Mr. Bair sent me word that Aldine, the brown Kentucky mare sired by Almon, the sire of Early Rose, could be had for $10,000. I sent word that after a trial, if satisfactory, I would take her. I did not know that she was to start in a race the next day, and so when her owner refused a trial I thought there was something wrong. On the next day after she had trotted and won the race, John Shepherd, of Boston, bought her without a trial. He then allowed me a trial and and said I could have her for $15 000 for or without."

"Were you present when Early Rose and Aldine were driven a mile in 2:16½?"

"No I did not see Aldine until after I had bought her. I telegraphed to Mr. Bair on Tuesday of last week to make the best time he could and come to New York. On Wednesday he hitched them up, and the many watches that were held recorded the time as 2:16½. That one performance has fully repaid me for what they cost, and today I would not take half a million dollars for the team, because money I can get, but I cannot buy faster horses.

"What do you intend doing with Maud S.?"

"She has had a rest this year, but is now being worked a little every day, and will appear once more on the track in all probability, next year."

How Gen. Sherman was Fooled.

[Detroit Free Press.]

About six miles out of Savannah, I came across a farmer who accepted a plug of tobacco and was ready to sit down on a log and answer all questions. When I asked him about Sherman's approach, he burst into a loud laugh and slapped his leg, and was so tickled that he did not calm down for two minutes.

"Excuse me, stranger," he finally said, "but whenever I think how I fooled General Sherman it tickles me all over."

"Did you fool him?"

"Wall, I rather reckon."

"How?"

"Wall, you see, that's my place up thar' on the rise. When the war broke out I was the most cantankerous rebel that you ever saw. I swore I'd fight and fout and fit till we licked the Yanks, if it took a hundred years. I reckon Gineral Sherman heard it."

"Probably he did."

"And after he took Atlanta he made up his mind to gobble me. He knew I'd swore to die before I'd surrender, and he came along down from Atlanta with over seventy thousand men to surround me. Mighty cute old man, that Gineral Sherman!"

"Yes."

"Wall, they got here one night about 10 o'clock. I reckon that night nigh onto 30,000 of them surrounded my house up thar' and called for me to come out and surrender and end the war."

"And of course you did?"

"And of course I didn't. That's whar the fun comes in. I wasn't home at all, but was down in Virginny with Lee. They entered the house and searched and searched, and went to the barn and called and called, and when the old woman finally told 'em I wasn't home, they was the maddest crowd you ever set eyes on. They had hoofed it all the way from Atlanta to git their paws on me, and had had their long march for nothing. I expect Sherman was ready to bust with madness, and I reckon he won't never quite forgive me. It tickles the old woman wuss than it tickles me, and you'd better come up to the house and hear her tell what them 70,000 Yankees said when they got here and found me gone."

The Garfield Team.

The magnificent team of bays purchased by the employes of the Union Pacific from a fund raised last Spring, for Hon. J. T. Clark, ex-General Superintendent, and now General Superintendent of the Milwaukee and Omaha road, has been forwarded to that gentleman. The team was driven to the Nebraska State Fair grounds for several days, and attracted general attention and admiration. It is what is known as the Garfield team, and was purchased in June of last year by several friends of the late President Garfield, and sent to him at Washington, and consequently, the President never saw them. After his death, Mrs. Garfield declined to accept them. They were purchased of the other donors by one of their number.

It's a cold deck when an iceberg falls on it.

WASHINGTON MONUMENT.

That Remarkable Pillar Still Going Higher and Higher—What Is to Be Seen from Its Summit.

Cor. of the Indianapolis Journal

Washington, September 21.—Yesterday was not exactly the sort of a day one would select for going to the top of the Washington monument, as the theremometer took a sudden start early in the morning and went up to some high among the eighties long before midday, but the opportunities for going up are very rare, and I could not resist a tempting invitation to join a party who had received permission from the superintendent to make the ascent. There was, however, a fine breeze at the top, and we experienced no inconvenience whatever, and were amply repaid for going up.

The elevator is worked by a steam-engine located in a small room at the base of the monument, and, although it is very large and very strong, it is nothing more than a platform with rails on it, upon which are run the trucks containing the stone, cement, tools, etc., used in the work now going on. The visitor is obliged to stand and hold on to the truck in going up. It takes exactly six minutes to ascend at present, as the height is now 302 feet. Two hundred and forty-eight feet more are to be added to it, and will require about two years to complete, at the present rate of progress. The blocks of granite and marble weigh about three tons each, and are two feet high, two feet wide, and about seven feet long. They are accurately fitted to each other, and united by English cement of the finest quality. The cement is poured in, a liquid state, and in course of time hardens and becomes very strong. From the upper row of blocks there are extended heavy iron arms, to which is attached a very strong rope netting intended to catch the workmen if they should make a misstep and fall overboard I asked the superintendent if any had ever fallen over, to which he replied: "Oh! yes, several have fallen over but they did not seem to mind it, knowing the netting was strong enough to hold them."

The view from the top is simply grand. The city, with its beautiful parks and public buildings, is spread out before you. The whole of the District of Columbia, and miles of the surrounding States, with their hills and vales and winding streams, are plainly seen. The Blue Ridge mountains are seen like a faint line above the horizon, full fifty miles away. The height is so great that even the magnificent capitol dwindles into the size of an ordinary building. The Potomac river does not appear to advantage from this point, for all the shallows and turns and ugly spots are plainly seen, and indeed seem to stand out in bold relief. I think the committee having charge of the Potomac Flats business, should view the river from the top of the monument and at this season of the year, and I am very sure they would feel the necessity of doing something for them, and that very quickly.

Of the stones contributed to the monument by the several States and Territories, the first to be seen is from Delaware, and bears the inscription "1849;" the others are so obscured by dust and darkness, it is quite impossible to read the inscriptions upon them. There are no windows, and the interior is quite dark. The old part is very much defaced by dust and dampness, and appears to great disadvantage, compared with the new work. When all is done—no doubt—the old part will be cleaned and painted up, and the whole interior lighted with electric lights.

In descending everything is so quiet and dark, it seems very much like going down into a mine—only I have never been in a mine—but I imagine it is very dark and silent. The scene around the base is a very lively one; hundreds of workmen are busily engaged in dressing huge blocks of marble, hoisting those already dressed upon trucks to be raised to the top, and in breaking and hauling the refuse. The latter is to be utilized in paving the carriage-way, leading to the main entrance of the White House.

I think if the Father of His country could return to life and look upon this obelisk reared in his honor, he would be both thrilled and pained by the sight—thrilled at the vastness of the undertaking and pained at the slowness with which the work has been done; but if all goes well, no doubt it will be completed before another President is inaugurated, and Washington will have a grand jollification over it.

When it is completed and stands 550 feet high, it will be another exhibition of the prevailing American spirit, viz: to go ahead of everything else in the world. She already has the biggest trees, the most wonderful cataract, the greatest railroads, the most prosperous people in the world; why should she not have the highest monuments? It is to be hoped that it will not share the fate of the Tower of Babel.

Curious, Useful, and Scientific.

Since the introduction of the electric light, the matter of its effect on the eye has been much discussed. The result of a recent investigation by Parisian scientists was that it was not hurtful.

An eminent Arabian naturalist and physician of the tenth century named Temini, states that in ancient times the bitumen of Judea was used to preserve the vine from the ravages of parasites.

A reliable pill for dyspepsia: Diastase, 10 grains; pepsine, 50 grains; extract of gentian, 50 grains; tartaric acid, 50 grains; powdered rhubarb, 50 grains, and gentian, q. s. before Divide into three-grain pills, shortly before meals.

In 1880 the value of sugar of milk imported into this country exceeded $25,000. The Boston Times says some of our large cheese factories undertook the manufacture of sugar from the whey, which yields about five per per cent. of this substance.

To produce light and dark shades in gold leaf the metal is alloyed with silver and copper. The addition of the baser metals lessens the malleability, as the leaf is sold by superficial measure, and not by weight, adulteration is kept at the minimum.

The St. Gothard Line not only has the longest tunnel in the world but twenty-four miles, or more than one-fifth of the whole line, consists of tunnels. Many of these have had to be constructed in spiral or cork-screw fashion, whereby, while making the necessary rapid ascent from the valley to a higher elevation, the line is perfectly protected against the avalanches which are frequent at those spots.

Starch is much more readily converted into sugar when under pressure than otherwise. Not only, says a contemporary, is the diastatic action of the soluble albuminoids increased, but when the pressure is great the small percentage of free acid which is found in all cereals is sufficient to convert rapidly the starch into sugar. It is a matter of surprise, therefore, that brewers do not mash under pressure.

Some engineers, of Dundee, Scotland, have tried with success a new gun for throwing a line to a wrecked vessel. The gun is about two feet long, and a bore of two and a half inches in diameter, and the cord is coiled in the form of a cap and put inside a steel canister, steaming behind it. Two ounces of gunpowder carried the end of the line at least 400 yards, and would have taken it further if the line had been longer.

Dr. John Rae does not hold the common opinion that the Esquimaux are a diminutive race. He is inclined to think that they are full as tall as the average native of London, and much heavier. The women, when young, he says, are very pleasant-looking—almost pretty—extremely solid and compact, with small feet and hands and well-formed limbs. As to strength, he found that the Esquimaux could lift 400 or 500 pounds with ease.

Libraries have their enemies in the shape of worms, mites and beetles, which destroy the bindings and bore through the leaves of books. A case is on record in which a small wood-boring beetle (anobium pertinax), which operated in a neglected library, was found to have perforated twenty-seven folio volumes in a straight line, making a round hole through which a string could be passed and the whole number of volumes lifted at once.

M. Gley, a French physiologist, has attempted to answer by experiments made upon himself the question: What are the affects of intellectual work upon the cerebral circulation. When he applied himself to a subject which he had a difficulty in understanding thoroughly and had therefore to concentrate all his energies upon it, the rhythm of the heart was far more accelerated than when he took up some matter with which he was well acquainted.

This is an interesting piece of information from the Pharem Zeitung: Place a watch with the case open but the works in motion, in a vessel so that the watch will be completely covered with benzine. After three hours it will be found that the watch has been thoroughly cleaned. The vessel should be covered with parchment paper, and the watch before it is removed should be slightly agitated. Lastly, the watch is laid in benzine again, but this time a little petroleum oil is added, in order to lubricate the machinery.

Two scientific observers in Geneva, Messrs. Dufour and Farrell, have discovered a fresh proof of the theory that the earth is of a globular form as taught by modern science. They find that the images of steamers and the surrounding mountains reflected on the surface of a large lake invariably appear slightly diminished in size. They conclude, therefore, that the surface of the water must be bent in a convex shape, so that it produces the same result as a convex lens.

Good work from human beings, just as from machinery, requires good treatment, and the finer the quality and the greater the quantity of the work the larger must be the outlay. Build factories that supply pure air, and the employes will produce more; but they will ask for more pay, because they will consume more food and can not live on low wages. A donkey can exist on thistles, of course, and give a donkey return; but a race horse can not be placed on the same fare with profit to any one.

The Matter With the Telephone.

[Detroit Free Press.]

"I doan' know what I shall do mit dat telephone of mine," observed a citizen as he entered the headquarters of the company yesterday and sat down in a discouraging way.

"Out of order, is it?"

"Sometimes it vhas, und sometimes it vhas all right. If I go to speak mit der coal man, or der City Hall, or der butcher, it vhas all right, und I can hear every word. If somebody vhants to order my peer, I get the same shust as plain as daylight."

"And when does it fail?"

"Vhell, shust like two hours ago. A saloon man he owes me $18, und I rings him oop und calls out, 'Hello! hello! I likes dot monish to-day!' Den he vhants to know who I am, und says he no catch der name. I tell him ofer and ofer, und by und by he he calls out dot he don't deal in water-melons, und dot he goes in to Gratiot street, und dot he is sorry he can't sign my petition to der Council. Den I haf to go all ofer again, und he tells me to stand back, und to come closer, und to speak louder, and at last he gits mad und tells me dot if I call him a dandy again, he'll proke my head. It's no use—I can't make one of my customers hear me. If somethings don't ail my telephone, it may be dot my voice is giving out. I vish you would examine me und see if I had better let my son Shon do der talking vhile I keep der pooks."

Income of the Rulers.

The Queen of England's estate or estates, if any, are not crown property. The Kensington property, bought by Prince Albert, is small, which was sold by his agent in building lots no doubt realizing a handsome profit on the purchase. It will fall into the hands of the heirs at the expiration of the lease of ninety-nine years with all the buildings thereon. We will turn now to the fixed income of other European crowned heads, the Emperor of Russia, 1,000,000, the Emperor of Austria, 750,000; the King of Spain, 200,000, the King of Portugal, 150,000. These sums represent the pound sterling. The persons who grumble about the Queen's income being so large forget that the people's representatives voted the sum of 385,000 per year to the Queen as an equivalent for all she relinquished.

A famous north-country clergyman, whilst preaching a few Sundays since from the text, "He giveth his beloved sleep," stopped in the middle of his discourse, gazed upon his slumbering congregation and said: "Brethren, it is hard to realize the unbounded love which the Lord appears to have for a large portion of my present auditory!"

"Mary," said he, gazing into her bright eyes, "can you tell me why you are like the weather?" said Charley. "Give it up," said Mary, quite promptly. "Because," said Charles, "you are so confounded changeable, you know." "Very good," said Mary; "but can you tell me, Charley, why you are not like the weather?" Charley having failed to guess, she added, "because the paper here says the weather is going to clear off." Charley looked serious and began searching for his hat.

THE IDEAL AND THE REAL.

The Indian Maiden as She Is and as She Is Pictured in the Fourth Reader.

Laramie Boomerang.

One of the attractions of the Cheyenne Indian agency is the reserved seat ticket to the regular slaughter-house matinee. The agency butchers kill at the rate of ten bullocks per hour, while at work, and so great was the rush to the slaughter-pens for the internal economy of the slaughtered animals that Major Love found it necessary to erect a box-office and gate, where none but those holding tickets could enter and provide themselves with the delicacies.

This is not a sensation, it is the plain truth, and we desire to call the attention of those who love and admire the Indian at a distance of 2,000 miles, to the æsthetic love for the beautiful which prompts the crooked-fanged and dusky [illegible] to rob the slap [illegible] glue-factory that [illegible] make [illegible] they-ense holiday. As a matter of fact common decency will not permit us to enter into the discussion of this matter. Firstly, it would not be fit for the high order of readers who are now paying their money for the Boomerang; and secondly, the Indian maiden of the present moment abode on a lofty crag of the Rocky Mountains, beautiful in her wild simplicity, wearing the fringed garments of her tribe. To the sentimentalist she appears outlined against the glorious sky of the new West, wearing a coronet of eagle's feathers and a health-corset trimmed with fantastic bead-work and wonderful and impossible designs and savage art.

Shall we then rush in and with ruthless hand shatter this beautiful picture? Shall we portray her as she appears on her return from the great slaughter-house benefit and moral aggregation of digestive mementoes? Shall we draw a picture of her, clothed in a horse-blanket, with a necklace of the false teeth of the pale-face, and her coarse unkempt hair hanging over her smoky features and clinging to her warty, bony neck? No, no. Far be it from us to destroy the lovely vision of copper-colored grace and smoke-tanned beauty, which the freckled student of the effete east has erected in the rose-hued chambers of fancy. Let her dwell there as the plump-limbed princess of a brave people. Let her adorn the hat-rack of his imagination, proud, beautiful, grand, gloomy and peculiar, while as a matter of fact she is at that moment leaving the vestibule of the slaughter-house conveying in the soiled lap-robe, which is her sole adornment, the mangled lungs of a Texas steer.

No man shall ever say that we have busted the beautiful cigar-sign vision that he has erected in his memory. Let the graceful Indian queen that has lived in his heart ever since he studied history and saw the graphic picture of the landing of Columbus, in which Columbus is unsheathing his bread-knife, and the [illegible] Indians are fleeing to the tall brush, let her, we say, still live on. The ruthless hand that writes nothing but everlasting truth, and the stub pencil that yanks the cloak off the false and artificial from cold and, perhaps, unpalatable fact, will spare this little imaginary Indian maiden with a back-comb and gold garter. Let her withstand the onward march of centuries, while the true Indian maiden eats the fricasseed locust of the plains and wears the cavalry pants of progress. We may be rough and thoughtless many times, but we cannot come forward and ruthlessly shatter the red goddess at whose shrine the far-away student of Blackhawk and other Fourth-reader warriors worships.

As we said, we decline to pull the cloak from the true Indian maiden of to-day and [illegible] she is. That cloak may be all she has on, and no gentleman will be rude even to the daughter of old Bob-Tail-Flush, the Cheyenne brave.

Darwin's [illegible] toward Religion.

"Topics of the Time," [illegible]

It [illegible] customary to greet every mention of Darwin's name with a jest concerning the ancestral ape. The development theory has grown and thrived in spite of the various phases of [illegible] which have indicated the attitude of orthodoxy toward it. Thirty years ago the discussion of the whole matter was confined to scientific circles. The public did not recognize [illegible] in the world of thought, which it was so sure to become. This indifference was succeeded by a sudden alarm. The suggestion that a secret conspiracy against Christianity was hatching roused the fears of its advocates. Nobody seemed to think it was at all worth while to find out what this terrible new doctrine was. Discretion formed a small part of the valor which assailed it with every imaginable weapon. The age did not countenance the rack and the thumb-screw, so the next best thing must be done, and faithfully it was done. No effort was spared to denounce, sneer, laugh the Darwinian theory out of existence.

In order to look fairly at the attitude which Darwin sustains toward religion, it is necessary to clear away some of the rubbish with which the question has been encumbered. Science is not irreligious, it is simply extra religious. Science and religion do not deal with the same questions, they do not cover the same ground. Within their own proper limits they touch only on one side—the Theistic. Science, strained to its last legitimate point, can only confirm the truths of natural religion. With the truths of revelation, from the very nature of the case, it can have nothing to do. It bears exactly the same relation to the Koran, the Rig Veda, and the Zend Avesta that it does to the Bible. The logic of its facts teaches the existence of a Creator and a Lawgiver to the universe. * * *

Many of the most brilliant as well as the most religious minds of the century have for years felt entirely free from anxiety in regard to the growth and spread of the theory of evolution; feeling that it did not touch, that in the nature of the case it could not touch the essential Divine truth. They held the view just quoted from Darwin, that science deals not with the nature of the power which works but with the methods by which it acts: it is a question not of the initial cause, but of processes.

It would be as absurd to accuse Stephenson of denying the existence of steam, because he concerned himself [illegible] and the explanation of the steam engine, as to assume on the evidence of the evolution hypothesis that Darwin denies the existence of a Creator, because he is occupied in making clear the laws under which He creates.

Riding Blondin.

Denver Tribune.

"That was a funny thing, my getting the title of Colonel," said Col. T. Allston Brown, the theatrical manager. "I never was in the army. I was made the hero of the hour in the show business, and for a single act I played I was given the title I now bear by the boys. In 1859, I think it was, I was managing Blondin, the famous tight-rope walker and performer. While he was Philadelphia that season, Dan Rice's circus happened along, enroute to Baltimore, and we doubled up for a trip of two weeks. You know that Blondin's greatest feat was to walk the rope with a man on his back and without a balancing pole. I made arrangements while at Baltimore for his appearance at the old Front Street Theatre.

The event was splendidly advertised, and a great fuss was generally stirred up about it. An immense audience thronged the theater. A man had been engaged to act as Blondin's load in the perilous feat, but at the last moment, and when the audience was evincing worriment and disappointment, he refused to play his part. Well I I couldn't blame him much; it was one of the toughest rope ascents that Blondin ever made, the rope being stretched on a steep incline from the stage to the [illegible] over the heads of the audience. What was to be done? That was the question. The people had all paid their money, and there was Blondin with his reputation almost in the balance. Who would accompany him? Would I take the chance? was the question that Blondin sent to me. Now in those days I didn't fear any thing or any body, and a few moments afterward I found myself on Blondin's back, slowly ascending over the slender support toward the dome of the theater, conscious of only one encouragement in the hazardous undertaking. If I fell he must fall too.

"Once or twice I felt the swaying of his body and the shaking of his knees, but I had such confidence in his prowess that I thought he was only trying to scare me. At last he stepped on the platform built near the dome, and such a yell of applause was never before nor since heard in a theatre. Not until the ordeal was past did I realize the awful chance for life I had taken. One false step, the weakening of a muscle, the paralysis of a nerve, and both of us would have fallen fifty or seventy-five feet on the heads of the audience. The shouts and yells continued for minutes, and when I made my appearance among the boys again they dubbed me the Colonel. The name has clung to me as faithfully as if it had been won in a retreating Bull Run or a bloody Antietam.

A Scene in School.

Two boys were in a school room alone together, when some fireworks, contrary to the master's prohibition, exploded. One boy denied it; the other, Ben Christie, would neither admit or deny it, and was severely flogged for his obstinacy. When the boys got alone again—

"Why didn't you deny it?" asked the real offender.

"Because there were only we two, and one of us must have lied," said Ben.

"Then why not say I did it?"

"Because you said you didn't, and I would spare the liar."

The boy's heart melted. Ben's moral gallantry subdued him.

When school reassembled the young culprit marched up to the master's desk and said:

"Please, sir, I can't bear to be a liar; I let off the squibs;" and he burst into tears.

The master's eyes glistened on the self-accuser, and the undeserved punishment he had inflicted on the other touched his conscience. Before the whole school, hand-in-hand with the culprit, as if he and the other boy were joined in the confession, the master walked down to where young Christie sat, and said aloud—

"Ben, Ben, lad, he and I beg your pardon; we were both to blame."

The school was hushed and still, as old schools are apt to be when something true and noble is being done; so still, they might almost have heard Ben's big-boy tears dropping on his book, as he sat enjoying the moral triumph which subdued himself as well as the rest. And when from want of any thing else to say he gently cried "Master forever!" the loud shout of the scholars filled the old man's eyes with something behind his spectacles which made him wipe them before he sat down.

"The Diamond Widow."

New York, Sept. 5.—There was a wedding in Trinity Church to-day, in the busiest part of the day—at 11 o'clock in the morning—but not over half a hundred of New York's vast population knew of it. There was no show, and rarely indeed has such an event passed off so quietly; yet the lady who was led to the altar was, in her young womanhood, the bride in the most remakable nuptial ceremony that ever occurred in the metropolis. The affair took place October 12, 1859, in St. Patrick's Cathedral, in Mott Street, and was known as the "diamond wedding." The contracting parties were Don Esteban Santa Cruz de Oviedo and Francis Amelia Bartlett the daughter of Lieutenant Washington Bartlett, of the United States Army. Since the death of her husband, the rich Don Estaban, twelve years ago, the lady had been known as "the diamond widow," but to-day she lost that title, only to win another—that of Baroness. The gentleman who took her to be his wife in Trinity Church is a German Baron and a Colonel in the Mexican army. In full his name is Colonel Le Baron Bodo Von Glumer.

The story of the bride, who almost twenty-three years after the diamond wedding, becomes a bride again, reads romantic enough. Don Esteban was a Cuban, and immensely wealthy, while Miss Bartlett was a belle at Washington, Saratoga, and other lands and localities. While on a visit to this country in 1859, Don Esteban, following the custom of those by whom he was surrounded, gave himself up to calls and interchanges of seasonable compliments. He met Miss Bartlett, and was enamored of her. He was stricken with fever and ague. The young lady visited him at his hotel. Her presence mitigated the asperities of ague, and her smile dulcified the bitterness of quinine. The wealth of Don Esteban was placed at every figure from $5,000,000 up, besides 4,000 negroes. He certainly was rich enough to buy his bride's $100,000 worth of jewels as a wedding gift. "A brooch," said the Jenkins of the day, "one living Kohinoor mountain reposed upon the quiet of a satisfied heart. There were seventy-five sumptuous robes made for the bride by Genin, and there were many coffers of [illegible]. The wedding dress was made in Paris, and cost $6,000."

After the rich Don Esteban died there was many suitors for the hand of the still fair widow. For the past three years or so she spent a great deal of her time in this city, and has made her home at the Park Avenue Hotel. Two months ago she sailed for Havana. On the steamer she met Col. Von Glumer. It was a case of love at first sight with both. Mme. Oviedo had been a widow twelve years, and Col. Von Glumer was a widower with two children. It was a short suit with the Colonel, and easily won. The day was appointed shortly after arriving in New York, it was said, but the affair was kept almost a secret.

Brain Stimulation.

Dr. Brunton in Contemporary Review.

The anatomist is familiar with the fact that there are two large nerves of sensation known as the "fifth pair," which are distributed to the top of the head and face, and to the mucous membrane of the mouth, nose and eyes. These nerves are closely connected with the nerves which control the action of the heart and of the blood vessels. By their stimulation the heart's action may be increased. This explains the fact that people of all nations are accustomed, when in any difficulty, to stimulate one or another branch of the fifth nerve and quicken their mental processes. Thus some persons, when puzzled, scratch their heads; others rub their foreheads, and others stroke or pull their beards, thus stimulating the occipital, frontal or mental branches of these nerves. Many Germans, when thinking, have a habit of striking their fingers against their noses, and thus stimulating the nasal cutaneous branches, while in other countries some people stimulate the branches distributed in the mucous membrane of the nose by taking snuff. The late Lord Derby, when translating Homer, was accustomed to eating brandy cherries. One man will eat figs while composing a leading article; another will suck chocolate creams, others will smoke cigarettes, and others sip brandy and water. By these means they stimulate the lingual and buccal branches of the nerve, and thus reflexly excite their brains. Alcohol appears to excite circulation through the brain reflexly from the mouth, and to stimulate the heart reflxly from the stomach, even before it is absorbed into the blood. Shortly after it has been swallowed, it is absorbed from the stomach, and passes with the blood to the heart, to the brain, and to the other parts of the nervous system, upon which it begins to act directly.

Russia.

Chicago Inter Ocean.

Russia is a little over a thousand years old, and there have been eighty rulers during that time. The government is an autocracy, but the real autocrat just now is not the Czar, nor yet the Czaritza; but, if report may be credited, a Mrs. Popedowostzeff, the young and energetic wife of the chief procurer of the holy synod. This lady is not indebted to anything disreputable for her influence, but to her genius for public affairs. A correspondent says that with the modesty of an ascending star madame keeps her own counsels, but it is believed that she has no sympathy with liberalism in any form. Her somewhat antique husband is so devoted to her that his highest pleasure is found in executing her plans, and she is the courted of all courtiers. This is not the first time a Russian woman has shown great genius for politics. Queen Olga succeeded Igor as regent in the infancy of the present nation, and to this day fabulous stories are told of her achievments. Among the rulers of the eighteenth century, a memorable period, none excelled in ability or proficiency Catharine the Great. Four women have worn the Russian crown beside Olga, but she alone of the number showed special aptitude for matters of state, noted more for badness than greatness.

Converting Policemen.

It is a curious incident in the progress of evangelical work that when evangelists propose to pray for the police the idea seems to the bystanders so absurd that they greet it with expressions of mirth and derision. Yet so it is under the ministrations of the militant forces of the Salvation Army who have for several days taken their stand on the City Hall steps. When they pray for the policemen the gaping crowd of street boys and idlers sends up a loud guffaw of laughter, as if a converted policeman was the funniest thing on earth. This is to some extent because most of the people in the crowd are not trained in the habits of decorum which are expected of a worshiping assembly. And perhaps it is also because some of those who are present have made the acquaintance of the police under circumstanses unfavorable to growth in the Christian graces.—New York Sun.

From Black to Gray.

Popular Science Monthly.

Staff-surgeon Parry, while serving in India, during the mutiny, saw a strange sight. Among the prisoners taken in a skirmish at Chamda was a sepoy of the Bengal army. He was brought before the authorities and put to a question. Fully alive to his position, the Bengalee stood almost stupefied with fear, trembling greatly, with horror and despair plainly depicted on his countenance. While the examination was proceeding the bystanders were startled by the sergeant in charge of the prisoner exclaiming, "He is turning gray!" All eyes were turned on the unfortunate man, watching with wonderful interest the change coming upon his splended, glossy, jet-black locks. In half an hour they were of a uniform grayish hue.

Religious Intelligence.

Bishop Elder has pledged the Church to finally pay the debts of Archbishop Purcell.

It is possible, thank heaven, to have very erroneous theories and very sublime feelings.

The Free Church of Scotland has been moved to promulgate a warning against the "sin of admiring the works of nature on the Sabbath day.

"San Francisco is clamoring for brass bands in churches." Extreme measures must be taken to keep San Francisco awake, evidently.

One in every five persons in the United States is a member of some evangelical church, and one in every fifty six is a Sabbath-school teacher.

In Austin, Texas, a colored congregation recently discharged their pastor because he made too frequent and uncomplimentary reference to "de powers ob darkness."

A Baptist clergyman says that the man who at baptism does not go deep enough into the water to get his pocket book under has not been dipped enough to save him.

The most thoughtful clergymen are gradually coming to the conclusion that "continued growth is better than an avalanche of revivals," and are looking about them for a way to promote continual growth.

The ter-centenary of the death of St. Theresa will be celebrated by the Catholic Church on October 21, and a general collection for the benefit of the displaced nuns of Mount Carmel, whose home is in New Orleans, is proposed.

"Would it not be appropriate for some congregations," asks the Moravian, "instead of having prayer after the sermon, to put it before the sermon? For, after all, it is a good custom our mothers taught us to observe, namely, never to go to sleep before we had said our 'Now I lay me down to sleep,' or some other appropriate prayer!"

BEN HILL DYING POOR.

Making an Immense Fortun and Losing it Again.

Atlanta (Ga.) Constitution.

I once heard a lawyer of judgment assert that Mr. Hill made more money by the practice of his profession, considering the years he was engaged in the practice, than any other lawyer in America. He cited the case of Judge Curtis, of the Supreme Court who was held to have the most lucrative practice, and who made $400,000 in ten years. Mr. Hill himself told me that he made over $20,000 a year for the first fifteen years of his practice. Judge Sam. Harris says he has authority for saying that Mr. Hill made $480,000 at the law up to 1860. As this allowed him fourteen years of practice, the average was about $34,000 a year. During that time he made a canvass for Congress, for Governor, twice as Elector, and served two terms in the Legislature. Treasurer Dan. Speer knew Mr. Hill intimately all his life. There was no bank in La-Grange in the old days, and Mr. Hill used to deposit his fees in the safe in Dr. Moreland's office, where Mr. Speer was. He says that his income from fees as shown by his deposits was enormous, and that the cash on hand was frequently very large. Mr. Hill was in every important case in Western Georgia, and later in nearly every big case in the State. He named his own fees. He bought negroes and lands with his surplus, and always had more than he could possibly use. He lost his negroes and much other property by the war, and yet was worth about $2,00,000 when he left La-Grange in 1869.

Since that time Mr. Hill has never given his whole time to the practice, but he has made an enormous amount of money. He made in 1863 one fee in a case in East Tennessee of $100,000 in Confederate money, equal to about $60,000 in gold. In 1865 he had a fee of $12?,000 in the famous Metcalf case, but only collected about $60,000. The balance he failed to sue to judgment. Mr. Metcalf dying, he failed to get his balance, when other judgments against the estate were paid, being barred by limitation. His fee in the Western & Atlantic lease case was a share in the lease and lease bonds that paid him about $125,000. He received one share of the lease as his originally. He bought with Mr. Nutting one other share, each taking half. He took one more share from Mr. Kimball as a fee, paying off a small mortgage on it. This gave him two and a half shares. On this he drew $100,000 of income bonds, they being issued at the rate of $40,000 to each share. Shortly afterward he sold the shares for $50,000, to Mr. Walters. He, therefore, drew $150,000 from lease shares. The expenses on the Kimball shares and the one he bought with Nutting amounted to about $25,000, leaving him net $125,000. His fee in the Kimball House case was an interest in the hotel, which he sold, after deriving considerable rent, for $25,000, George Adair and Mrs. Kimball buying it. He drew one fee of $12,500 from the lease company, and another of $10,000, that I know of. A case in New York paid him $10,000, and he had many $5,000 fees. It is certainly safe to say that he has made $1,000,000 by his tongue and brain as fees by the time he was fifty years old. This record is without parallel, the nearest approach probably being Henry Ward Beecher, who, as lecturer, preacher, and writer, is said to have made $1,000,000 up to his sixty-fourth year. Equal to what Mr. Hill made in one profession up to his fiftieth year. When we consider that Mr. Hill spent ten of those years at least principally in politics, while Mr. Beecher gave all of his to professional work, the difference is the more striking.

The Virgin's Tree at Heliopolis.

Pall Mall Gazette.

Many a traveler has inscribed his name upon the famous sycamore known as the Virgin's tree, at Heliopolis, where Arabi is now throwing up his intrenchments for the defense of Cairo. The rude buffets of time and the embellishments of the tourists have dealt hardly with its trunk, but its branches are still flourishing. According to the legend the virgin and child once rested under its friendly shade during the flight to Egypt. Another story tells how Mary consoled herself with the child in the hollow of the trunk, and that a kindly spider so completely covered the opening with its web as to "screen her effectually from observation." It was presented by the Khedive to the Empress Eugenie at the inauguration of the canal. The unfortunate part of the tale is that the tree now shown as the real article was not planted until about 1672, the tree of the fable having died a natural death in 1665.

The mast crop in Virginia is the heaviest known for years.

HALL'S Catarrh Cure

Is Recommended by Physicians!

$100 REWARD FOR A CASE IT FAILS TO CURE!

We manufacture and sell it with a positive guarantee that it will cure any case, and we will forfeit the above amount if it fails in a single instance.

It is unlike any other Catarrh remedy, as it is taken internally, acting upon the blood. If you are troubled with this distressing disease, ask your Druggist for it, and ACCEPT NO IMITATION OR SUBSTITUTE. If he has not got it, send to us, and we will forward immediately. Price, 75 cents per bottle.

F. J. CHENEY & CO., Toledo, Ohio.

FREE! RELIABLE SELF-CURE.

A favorite prescription of one of the most noted and successful specialists in the U. S. (now retired) for the cure of Nervous Debility, Lost Manhood, Weakness and Decay. Sent in plain sealed envelope free. Druggists can fill it.

Address DR. WARD & CO., Louisiana, Mo.

If you feel drowsy, debilitated, have frequent headache, mouth tastes badly, poor appetite and tongue coated, you are suffering from torpid liver, or "biliousness," and nothing will cure you so speedily and permanently as to take SIMMONS LIVER REGULATOR OR MEDICINE.

The cheapest, Purest and Best Family Medicine in the World.

An EFFECTUAL SPECIFIC for all diseases of the Liver, Stomach and Spleen.

Regulate the Liver and prevent Chills and Fever, Malarious Fevers, Bowel Complaints, Restlessness, Jaundice and Nausea.

SIMMONS LIVER REGULATOR

BAD BREATH!

Nothing is so unpleasant, nothing so common as bad breath, and in nearly every case it comes from the stomach, and can be so easily corrected if you will take Simmons Liver Regulator. Do not neglect so sure a remedy for this repulsive disorder. It will also improve your Appetite, Complexion, and General Health.

PILES!

How many suffer torture day after day, making life a burden and robbing existence of all pleasure, owing to the secret suffering from Piles. Yet relief is ready to the hand of almost any one who will use systematically the remedy that has permanently cured thousands. SIMMONS' LIVER REGULATOR is no drastic violent purge, but a gentle assistant to nature.

CONSTIPATION!

Should not be regarded as a trifling ailment—in fact nature demands the utmost regularity of the bowels, and any deviation from this demand paves the way often to serious danger. It is quite as necessary to remove impure accumulations from the bowels as it is to eat or sleep, and no health can be expected where a costive habit of body prevails.

SICK HEADACHE!

This distressing affliction occurs most frequently. The disturbance of the stomach arising from the imperfectly digested contents, causes a severe pain in the head, accompanied with disagreeable nausea, and this constitutes what is popularly known as Sick Headache.

ORIGINAL AND ONLY GENUINE.

TRUE Temperance

Is not signing a pledge or taking a solemn oath that cannot be kept, because of the non-removal of the cause—liquor. The way to make a man temperate is to kill the desire for those dreadful artificial stimulants that carry so many bright intellects to premature graves, and desolation, strife and unhappiness into so many families.

It is a fact! BROWN'S IRON BITTERS, a true non-alcoholic tonic, made in Baltimore, Md., by the Brown Chemical Company, who are old druggists and in every particular reliable, will, by removing the craving appetite of the drunkard, and by curing the nervousness, weakness, and general ill health resulting from intemperance, do more to promote temperance, in the strictest sense than any other means now known.

It is a well authenticated fact that many medicines, especially 'bitters,' are nothing but cheap whiskey vilely concocted for use in local option countries. Such is not the case with BROWN'S IRON BITTERS. It is a medicine, a cure for weakness and decay in the nervous, muscular, and digestive organs of the body, producing good, rich blood, health and strength. Try one bottle. Price $1.00.

Ayer's Hair Vigor,

FOR RESTORING GRAY HAIR TO ITS NATURAL VITALITY AND COLOR.

IT is a most agreeable dressing, which is at once harmless and effectual, for preserving the hair. It restores, with the gloss and freshness of youth, faded or gray, light, and red hair, to a rich brown, or deep black, as may be desired. By its use thin hair is thickened, and baldness often though not always cured. It checks falling of the hair immediately, and causes a new growth in all cases where the glands are not decayed; while to brashy, weak, or otherwise diseased hair, it imparts vitality and strength, and renders it pliable.

The VIGOR cleanses the scalp, cures and prevents the formation of dandruff; and, by its cooling, stimulating, and soothing properties, it heals most if not all of the humors and diseases peculiar to the scalp, keeping it cool, clean, and soft, under which conditions diseases of the scalp and hair are impossible.

As a Dressing for Ladies' Hair

The VIGOR is incomparable. It is colorless, contains neither oil nor dye, and will not soil white cambric. It imparts an agreeable and lasting perfume, and as an article for the toilet it is economical and unsurpassed in its excellence.

An Unpublished Page.

The Burlington Hawkeye is responsible for the following unpublished page from the history of George Washington. The scene is laid on the Potomac, and it is the merry summer time. To him the mother of the father of his country:

"George, dear, where have you been since school was dismissed?"

"Hain't been nowhere, ma."

"Did you come straight home from school, George?"

"Yes, ma'am!"

"But school is dismissed at 3 o'clock, and it is now half past 6. How does that come?"

"Got kep' in."

"What for?"

"Missed my m'joggrafy less'n."

"But your teacher was here only an hour ago, and said you hadn't been at school all day."

"Got kep' in yestiddy, then."

"George, why were you not at school to-day?"

"Forgot. Thought all the time it was Saturday."

"Don't stand on one side of your foot in that manner. Come here to me. George, you have been swimming."

"No'me."

"Yes, you have, George. Haven't you?"

"N o a p."

"Tell your mother, George?"

"N u c k."

"Then what makes your hair so wet, my son?"

"Sweat. I run so fast comin' from sc'hool."

"But your shirt is wrong side out."

"Put it on that way when I got up this morning for luck. Always win when you play for keeps if your shirt's on wrong side out."

"And you haven't the right sleeve of your shirt on your arm at all. George, and there is a hard knot tied in it. How did that come there?"

"Bill Fairfax tied it when I wasn't lookin'."

"But what were you doing with your shirt off?"

"Didn't have it off. He jes took'n tied that knot there when it was on me."

"George!"

"That's honest truth, he did."

About that time the noble Bushrod came along with a skate strap, and we draw a veil over the dreadful scene, merely remarking that boys do not seem to change so much as men.

During the first half of 1882 it is estimated by excellent authority, that the United States borrowed $88,000,000 in Europe with which to construct railroads. When it is remembered that 5,000 miles of road were built in this country during that period, it will be seen that the money borrowed was a very small proportion of the total invested. The aggregate cost of the new lines and their equipments was not less than $125,000,000.

Judge Lowry at Columbia City.

The Columbia City Post editorially says that "Hon. Robert Lowry, democratic candidate for congress in the 12th congressional district, opened the campaign at the court-house in Columbia City last Saturday evening. The address was confined wholly to national affairs, and consisted in part of an exposition of the fallacy that the republican party deserves the credit for the growth and prosperity of the country; complete exposure of the present iniquitous tariff and the efforts of the republican party to evade the issue. In his review of the condition of the finances of the country and republican corruption and extravagance, he showed himself as well posted as those who have been in congress for years. In treating the subject of the unseating of democratic members of congress, he explained principles that none but a profound constitutional lawyer could attempt."

"Hon. Robert Lowry is not a rattling, loose-tongued orator who can talk a whole day to no purpose, but a profound statesman who deals only in logic and solid fact, and he is the kind of man who will, from the first day he enters the house, command the attention and admiration of every member. He is everywhere recognized as a deep constitutional lawyer and what he lays down as the law in the congress of the United States will not be questioned. Added to this he has devoted a great share of his time during the past half century to making himself acquainted with the growth of the country, its needs and requirements and the study of its principles and law. He has not only the ability, but he also possesses the firmness and decision of character to combat republican rascality and corruption in high places. He will be a valuable member, not only of the Indiana delegation and the democratic side of the house, but to the people of the whole country."—[Fort Wayne Sentinel.

A "Flip" Flour Dealer.

One day this week a firm of flour dealers in Wabash received an order for a fifty pound sack of flour. They delivered the goods, the customer's wife immediately baked some bread to test the quality of the flour. For some reason she had "bad luck" with her baking, and when her husband came she complained that the flour was of no earthly account, and instructed him to send it back without a moment's unnecessary delay. He told the flour man that his wife didn't like the flour, and that individual at once sent his delivery wagon after the objectionable article with orders to haul it around town for an hour or two and then return it to the residence of the customer. The driver of the delivery wagon did as directed, removing the flour early in the afternoon and bringing it back quite late, as he placed it on the porch, he remarked to the lady who had condemned the flour, that it was the finest goods ever manufactured in Wabash, and was ground from old selected wheat. On the following day the lady mixed up some more bread, and succeeded in turning out the lightest and whitest loaves that ever graced a dining table. When her husband partook of it he praised it in extravagant terms, and resolved thereafter to purchase his flour only of that house. A week later he met the flour dealer, who inquired how he liked the last sack of flour he had sold him. The gentleman was lavish in his commendation, and then the miller calmly proceeded to inform him that the flour which he liked so well was that which at first refused. And thus is the truth of the Scriptural passage: "The stone which the builders rejected is become the head of the corner," again forcibly exemplified.—Wabash Courier.

A day or two since a letter was received in this city from Senor Juan Gimenez Ramez, Zamora, Spain. He writes under date of August 31, saying that there is a certain treasure, amounting to several thousand dollars in coin buried in or near Fort Wayne. He says that when in this part of the world in 1877, he made an exact survey of its location, which he proposes to indicate to the gentleman addressed, providing he complies with certain conditions named in the letter. The epistle, which is very lengthy, is written in French language, in a neat hand. Our French reporter is busy about its translation and an interesting outline can probably be printed to-morrow. One of the conditions the writer specifically mentions is the adoption of a child, in which he evidently has a deep interest.—Ft. Wayne News, Oct. 2.

GENERAL HARRISON.

His Dayton Deceptions and Ohio Oddities.

SPEECH AND SPIRITS—SALVATION AND SALOONS.

[Dayton, (Ohio,) Democrat.]

There was a good deal more "meat" in Senator Harrison's remark at the opening of his speech at the court-house on Tuesday night—that he "would feel better if he had something warm"—than appears on the surface. It did not refer wholly to the coolness of the evening, nor wholly to the enthusiastic temperance or prohibition speech by Colonel Ed. Parrott. For one solid hour, Senator Harrison, who had come all the way from Indiana to talk, and not to be talked to, listened with the audience to that cold water speech! No wonder he felt chilly, and wanted something "warm" after the cataract ceased pouring.

But we understand, from republican sources, that there was a sarcasm concealed in the honorable senator's remark that was only visible to the prominent, hospitable gentleman of the republican party here in Dayton for whom it was intended. They may not have perceived it, and perhaps Senator Harrison may not have especially intended it, but the supposition in certain republican circles is, that he practically expressed his opinion of the cold water entertainment in the open air that he received here, by marching off, as soon as he left the stand, to the most prominent public restaurant and saloon on Jefferson street, and filling up with "warm" liquid and solid refreshment. This was duly related in the Democrat of yesterday, but the Democrat did not then see the true inwardness of it. It only saw and commented on the inconsistency of a United States senator posing as the principal orator at a political meeting, where the liquor traffic was denounced as infamous and immoral, and then going off and engaging in it, just like a wicked democrat, to the extent of a drink or two, or perhaps three or four. The publication of the fact in the Democrat yesterday created considerable of a sensation among republicans of all classes—temperance and anti-temperance. The former, of course, profess not to believe it, while the latter confess that it was true, and say that the reason that Senator Harrison was forced to seek refreshment in a saloon was that the honorable senator had not even had his supper that evening, and that no member of the republican campaign committee, nor any prominent republican of the county or city, had even so much as inquired if he had had it, or proffered him any of the ordinary courtesies usual among gentlemen—least of all those due to honored visitors or strangers. Of course some excuse is better than none, and we give this because it is the one current among a certain class of republicans. It may serve, too, in the minds of some, as an apology for Senator Harrison seeking refreshments in a saloon, but if it is admitted, it is a confession of the inhospitableness of the leading republicans of Dayton, which is discreditable and humiliating. So far as the Democrat is concerned its point was made when it simply noted the inconsistency of a republican temperance orator denouncing saloons publicly, and then privately patronizing them. And the pitiful apology that is made for this only increases one's disgust and contempt for a party whose leaders practice such hypocrisy, and whose voters seem to sustain, tolerate and excuse it. What sort of a party is this republican party anyhow, and what sort of a committee have they?

A Democrat reporter was astounded after hearing Senator Harrison's temperance argument last night, to observe him with Al. Kimber locked arms, and Charley Gary, walking along on the other side, bashfully wishing he might lock arms too, and then the trio entered a fashionable saloon and restaurant on Jefferson street. There are two entrances to this building—one entrance for the restaurant and one for the bar. This happy trio entered the door on which was painted "Bar." Now, wasn't that queer for three distinguished representative members of the great temperance reform party, who had just been denouncing, on a public stand, all the liquor traffic and the men who deal in it? Of course we do not know what they took when they got in. When a man goes into a dry goods store it is not presumed he is after sugar or hardware.

At the republican meeting the other night, Hon. E. A. Parrott led off with an enthusiastic temperance speech of an hour. Senator Harrison then took the stand, and in alluding to the coolness of the evening said he "would feel better if he could have something warm," or words to that effect. Perhaps Col. Parrott's cold water speech had quite as much effect in chilling the honorable senator as the weather, inasmuch as he was seen soon after the meeting entering a prominent Jefferson street saloon, where he could get "something warm." To the modern republican temperance apostle the sin and disgrace of the liquor traffic depends wholly on which side of the bar the parties to it stand. How much better is Senator Harrison for being on his side of the bar than the liquor dealer whom he patronizes is for being on his side? It is a matter of the whisky traffic anyhow, isn't it, Mr. Senator? and it takes two to buy and sell!

It is after harvest, and the cold chilly winds remind us that winter is approaching, and those who owe us are respectfully requested to call and settle at once. Last week a man stepped up to us and said he would pay every cent he owed us if he lived until Saturday night. We presume the man died. Another said he would pay us in a day or two as sure as we born. Query: Did the man lie, or were we never born? Another said he would settle as sure as shooting. We are led to the conclusion that shooting is uncertain. Another said he hoped to go to the devil if he did not pay us in three days. Haven't seen him since, suppose he has gone, but we trust he has hoped in vain. Quite a number said they would see us to-morrow. These have been stricken blind, or else to-morrow has not come. One man told us six months ago that he would pay us as soon as he got some money. The man would not lie, so of course he has not got a cent since. Now, friends, we need our money. We have trusted you on your word, and we have to pay our debts on our word. When we fail to meet our obligations we loose our credit. "A word to the wise is sufficient."—[Michigan Democrat.

Passenger conductors on the Fort Wayne division of the Lake Shore are endeavoring to master the very exhaustive manner of keeping accounts required by the company's rules. At the end of each trip the conductor makes seven reports. The general manager and assistant general manager get duplicate reports of the run; the general superintendent and division superintendent are furnished with other duplicates, and reports are made to the general ticket agent, the treasurer and the car accountant. Beside all this, a ticket and cash report and the train journal are as regularly made out. The cash and tickets are expressed to the general office at Cleveland after each trip. The conductors should have a clerk.—Ft. Wayne News.

Three young ladies at Three Rivers, Mich., attempted to stand on their heads for a wager last week. This was certainly the most brilliant display by a hose company made in Michigan this year.—[Goshen Democrat. This is strictly a home affair and we would inform our Hoosier brethren that the trio cannot be enticed away from the old St. Jo. They have three editors at home to entertain.—[Michigan Democrat.

Sixty-nine pieces of baggage, trunks, and boxes, the property of the late Mrs. Abraham Lincoln, went east over the Pittsburg last night, in charge of the Adams Express Co. They were shipped to Washington. Many of the trunks bore the initials, "M. L.," Mary Lincoln, and contained the wardrobe of this expensive and eccentric lady, and the thousand articles of virtu which she had accumulated in Europe and America. The trunks will be opened in Washington—Fort Wayne News Oct. 2.

Puck is the author of the following sentimental and seasonable literary gem: "Soon will the sentimental young lady meander through the forests in quest of dainty colored leaflets and languid ferns to stow away in books, and then the frost will appear, and the hog will be suspended by a hind leg with a corn cob in his mouth."

A Rapjacket Duel.

A CURIOUS CONTEST CARRIED ON BETWEEN TWO GEORGIANS.

[Jackson Herald.]

On last Thursday evening was a week, a Mr. Hill who lives near Harmony Grove, got mad with Mr. W. J Goss, of that place, and wanted to fight him. Mr. Goss said he did not care to fight him, but that if Hill would not be satisfied any other way, he would agree to fight him with a buggy whip. Hill agreed to this mode of warfare, and after making an agreement as to distance and other rules to govern the fight, new buggy whips were procured, and the combatants toed a mark about five feet apart and commenced lashing down on each other with all their might and power. The battle ground was in front of Freeman's livery stable, in the heart of the town, and it was not long until the most of the citizens of the place were looking on at a safe distance. No one had interfered and the combats were making steady and regular licks upon each other without flinching, and the strokes of the whips could be heard several blocks away, as they went whizzing through the air and upon the backs of the two men. Occasionally one or the other would back a little from his line, but would soon come up again to the scratch. Whenever they got tired, one would call out to hold up for awhile, and they would take a blowing spell, and when rested they would go at it again. The fight continued for over three hours with short intervals for rest.

After the second round Hill, who had no covering on his back except a shirt, insisted that Goss should pull off his coat, which he did, and they took both hands to their whips and went to work. By this time the news of the fight had spread all over the town; some of the merchants closed up their stores and business was generally suspended to see what would be the result of the encounter.

After they had worn out over seven dollars worth of new buggy whips, and were completely tired down, they agreed to quit, and Hill told Goss that he was satisfied. From parties who saw Hill's back, we learn that there was not a place on it that you could place a silver quarter without touching the whelts the whip had made, and he was marked all over in the same way. We learn that Goss was not hurt quite so bad, and was able to be out the next day, but Hill had to lay up, and it was rumored over this way that he was seriously sick.

A Seasonable Publication.

This fall number of Ehrich's Fashion Quarterly will be found particularly useful to all ladies who contemplate the most delightful of feminine occupations—shopping. Within the compass of its one hundred and twenty pages, it contains a compendium of the whole art and mystery of retail purchasing, giving descriptions of the latest styles in every department, with a complete list of prices, and a really bewildering array of illustrations. Aided by this useful publication, a lady can plan out her shopping for the season, with an absolute certainty that no necessary item will be overlooked, and that every dollar will be made to do its full and utmost duty. Whether she makes her purchases by mail or from storekeepers nearer home the Fashion Quarterly is equally useful. In either case it shows her just what styles are fashionable, as well as which is the most economical; and, studying its pages, a lady can adapt her expenditure to her means, and avoid the vexation of finding, too late, that unwritten extravagance in one direction entails convenient economy in another.

The Fashion Quarterly is published by Ehrich Bros., Eighth Avenue, New York, at 50 cents a year, or 15 cents a copy. It is amply worth its price.

A report from Delphi, this state, says: Years ago a gentleman and his family came to Delphi, where they resided for a long time, and was for a time editor of the Delphi Times. Subsequently he removed to Rensselaer a few miles west. On a recent visit east, in the interest of some inherited property, he made the startling discovery that he and his wife were full brother and sister. They were adopted by different families in early orphanage, are now quite aged, and have several grown children, three of whom are veritable albinos.

VICTOR HUGO'S latest predictions are that France and Spain are destined to be the foremost representatives of civilization; that the Turks will be driven out of Europe, and that the twentieth century will see all Africa civilized by means of the Mediterranean powers, including England, owing to her possession of Gibraltar.

THE net income of the United States Post-office Department for the fiscal year which ended on June 30, 1882, was about $1,500,000—that is, not only did the receipts meet all expenditures, and they exceeded the expenditures by $1,500,000. Since the breaking up of the Star Route abuses, the department has been rapidly becoming self-sustaining.

AN Ashtabula man named Taylor had some trouble about seats at a circus, and was ejected from the tent, receiving some injuries. He got out legal papers, followed the show to Warren, O., and attached the ticket wagon after the afternoon performance. The manager retained a lawyer, who assured him the papers were solid. So they compromised the matter, Taylor receiving $700.

A CHICAGO man has invented and patented a hand grenade for extinguishing fires, which stands the test of experiment and is believed to be a valuable invention. The grenade is constructed of glass, in the shape of a round bottle with a short neck, and it contains a chemical solution charged under pressure with fire-extinguishing gasses, which, when liberated, diffuse themselves and extinguish the flames surrounding it.

MORMON leaders are more defiant and outspoken in their opposition to the anti-polygamy bill. The board of education has been restrained by injunction from contracting for schoolbooks for the public schools containing 40 per cent. of Mormon sectarian matter. Returns of registration are published showing 34,000 names; four out of nine are those of women, and three out of four are Mormons.

THE London Truth gives the following opinion in regard to the education of children: "The school hours ought to be shortened. All the work should be in school, in alternate hours for study and repetition. There should be no evening preparation at home and no child ought to be tought anything but to tell the truth and say, 'If you please,' and 'No, thank you,' much before 7 years of age. Two years later he would, I venture to predict, be a fair better scholar than the average 9-year-old victim of the school board, and he would, furthermore, have the chance of being a fine healthy, happy, and well-grown urchin.

ENGLISH scientists are having quite a scare over the comet. A special dispatch says: Richard A. Proctor, who denied that it was the comet of 1843 and 1880, now finds he made a mistake, and so has withdrawn his statement. More cautious astronomers than he have no doubt of the identity of the comet, and believe it will return, at latest, in October, 1883, and then fall into the sun with disastrious results to our planet. It is said, on good authority, this is the opinion of the most eminent scientists of the day, C. Piazzi Smith, Astromomer Royal for Scotland, in particular, making no secret of his belief.

THE excessive imports continue to increase, and it is not a good sign. The imports of foreign dry goods at New York during September amounted to $11,800,238, being $981,961 more than for the same month last year, $1,737,959 more than for the corresponding month in 1880. The goods marketed during the month amounted to $12,049,858, or a trifle in excess of the imports. For the nine months ending with September the total importations were $105,218,401, or $17,378,116 more than for the corresponding period last year, $4,417,682 more than for the corresponding period in 1880, and $32,071,669 in excess of the nine months of 1879. For the nine months ending with September the goods thrown on the market amounted to $103,974,845, against $90,967,169 for the same time last year, and $95,426,062 in 1880.

The bed was on fire, but was soon extinguished.

Bogus Nautch Girls.

The Cincinnati Gazette exposes the fact that the "Nautch girls" who traveled with Snelbaker's show were no other than the Vivian sisters, a company of well-known variety actresses, "made up" and colored to suit the parts. The truth was brought out in a singular manner. A lady missionary who had just returned from India, accompanied by a young Hindoo girl, was to give a lecture in the city the same night on which the "Nautch girls" per'ormed. The reporter borrowed the Hindoo Maiden and attempted to interview the "Nautch girls," when the managers owned up the fraud. The "Nautch girls" themselves thus relate their experience:

"Oh, what a dreadful time we had. You see we have been but a short time in this country, having come from England with Jarrett to do the skipping-rope dance in "Cinderella." This engagement came prematurely to a close, and we were left in New York almost without means. Col. Snelbaker suggested to us—that is, we three and Lizzie Latelle, then of our party—the Nautch-girl scheme. We had never seen a Nautch girl; but no matter, a ballet-master, one Novissimo, was brought in and we were taught the proper steps, and as the salary offered was large the farce began. A costume was selected, modeled after an Egyptain mantle ornament, our faces, arms, and busts painted with a copper-colored mixture, and we were taken heavily veiled to Philadelphia, where our debut was to be made. It was really dreadful. We were prisoners for six mortal weeks, not even being allowed to speak to any of the company, who for a long time actually believed us to be the genuine article. At the Smedley house we were registered as Hindoos, and being left in the room by our agent and supposed interpreter, went an entire day without food or fire, not daring to speak to any one. Emily tried to make signs to the waiter, but we all laughed so heartily at the queer plight we were in that the fellow thought we were making sport of him, and hurried out of the room. Our food was served without knives or forks when we did get anything, as Hindoos were supposed to either eat with their fingers or chop-sticks. So we went from place to place, wrapped up in huge cloaks, with veils closely drawn, until, as you know, the exposure came, and the Nautch girls ceased to be attractive.

The Chinese as Cattle Tenders.

Corwin Anderson, one of the most extensive breeders of fancy and common cattle in Kentucky, has lately been in Denver, engaging Chinamen for his farms. His plantations are extensive. He has employed hundreds of negroes to do his work, and while he has always paid them well, he claims that they have been lazy and did not earn the money they received. Besides that, they were not disposed to learn, and to infuse into their minds any new ideas as to the science of agriculture or stock raising was almost impossible. This inactivity and stubborn-mindedness has been detrimental to his interests, and he determined upon employing Chinamen. His arrangements in Denver are such that he has reason to think that within a month his cattle will be watched by Chinese employes.

He says that the Chinamen possess all the qualities wanted. They are cleanly, and their great imitative powers will soon place them on a par with the white race so far as agricultural knowledge and intelligence go. Then they are steady workers, too, and with them there will be no basking in the sun or sleeping behind a fence. Mr. Corwin does not expect to make any money from a cut in wages. He will pay the Chinamen as much as he has been giving his colored help, and will rely upon the difference in work done to establish the wisdom of his new move. Large numbers of the oldest planters who heretofore have been wedded to old ideas and old ways of doing things, stand ready to emulate the example of Mr. Corwin if he succeeds. There will, it is expected, be considerable trouble over the matter, as the colored population will not quietly submit to being ousted from their places, their old homes and associations.

The Coming Bonnet.

Boston Traveller.

There was never less to say of millinery than this year, for everything is worn and nothing looks odd, or attracts more than a passing glance. The only general rule is that hats are large and bonnets small, and the most utterly utter of all is a small bonnet sans strings, although these are limited to young ladies. The large hats carry off an incredible amount of trimming, although is a matter the wearer can regulate at her own sweet will.

Velvet and plush are used either singly or in combination, and often in two colors; the brim of one fabric and color, the crown of the other fabric in a contrasting color; the ties, usually of the Ottoman repped ribbon, are of the same color as the brim, while the plumes are shocked in the two colors, or, if the contrast is too striking, are of the same color as the strings and brim. Velvet ribbon is used for ties on some bonnets, but it is not so popular as the softer rep. It crushes in tying, and looks shabby after its first freshness is worn off. Feathers are used in trimming in great profusion and infinite variety. Heads and breasts, and often the whole bird, with beak and claws gilded, are used; ostrich plumes, not the long ones, but the tips and toes of demi-length, are seen often.

Colors range through olive tones, crushed strawberry and terra cotta shades, Indian and electric blue. White opera hats are conspicuous by their absence.

WASHINGTON.

The indications regarding the tobacco crop of the country are more favorable now than they were a month or more ago. The reports from Connecticut and other New England tobacco sections, and likewise from the tobacco regions of Pennsylvania were not favorable. Now, however, it is learned that the Virginia and North Carolina crops are likely to be very valuable and the "North Carolina bright tobacco" is reported the finest crop ever grown in the State.

Great regret is felt here over the [illegible] the effort to reach Lieutenant Greely at his signal station at Lady Franklin Bay. He has been there nearly a year already, and the record of observations made during that time would not only be very valuable in itself, but is desired to be used in connection with those from the other stations in the International circumpolar chain. There are twelve of these stations which have been opened by the various nations on the seventy-first parallel, or as nearly so as possible. Two of them are occupied by the United States, two by Russia, one by England and Canada, and one each by Germany, Austria, Holland, Sweden, Norway, Finland and Denmark.

Some figures recently prepared at the Treasury Department regarding the public debt are quite interesting. They show that the annual interest charge is now $1.09 per head for all persons in the United States. In 1865 it was at its highest, being $4.29 per person. In the following year it was $4.12, and a year later $3.84. From that time it gradually lessened, until in 1871 it touched $3 per head, and latter $2. Now it has fallen to $1.09 per capita, and soon must go below that.

From statistics prepared by Inspector General of Steam Vessels Dumont for his annual report, it appears that there were 5,117 steam vessels in service during the fiscal year 1882, with a total tonnage of 1,278,564 and with 20,467 licensed officers. During that period 338 were placed in the service against 243 the previous fiscal year; the increase in tonnage for the year was 7,456 against 62,196 for the year previous, and the number of officers licensed was 2,659, an increase of 1,532 over the previous year. The figures indicate a considerable increase in the number of new vessels, but the decreased tonnage shows they are mostly of small size. A noticeable circumstance is the small increase of the traveling and miscellaneous expenses, which are but $200 in excess of the expenses of the year 1881, or a total of about $87,800. In 1874, with little more than one-half the number of vessels now in service, the expenses were $54,109.

The Treasury Department has decided to act in accordance with the decision of the Circuit Court at San Francisco, relative to the right of Chinese subjects to visit the United States under the recent act of Congress. A boy about 18 years old called at the police headquarters this morning and asked for a permit to carry a pistol. He was asked what he wanted to carry a pistol for, and replied, "To shoot President Arthur." He was taken to Jefferson Market Court, where he seemed much excited. In answer to questions from the court he said his name was William Martin; that he lived at No. 117 East Eighty-fourth street; that President Arthur used to live in the same house with his father eighteen years ago, when he was a roundsman. He said he had just come from the Penitentiary, where he served a term for larceny, and that when he did not steal, he blacked boots. He was committed for examination as to his mental condition.

The declaration of Patrick Ford, of the Irish World, that the Land League had ceased to exist, has caused much commotion in Land League circles. Dr Wallace, President of the National League, said to-day that he admired Ford's frankness, but did not think his action would cause the disbandment of the League organization, of which he (Wallace) is President. Action of the conference in Ireland would be awaited before any important steps were taken here.

FOREIGN.

London, October 9—Davitt, in a speech at Wexford, yesterday, declared that the Land League had inculcated principles which were eternal and indestructible, but he was disappointed at the outcome of the agitation. When the whole Irish race had rallied to the cry for the abolition of landlordism the league had by one tremendous sweep of the Government been arrested in its career. The Government had been furnished with a pretext for action by the outrages committed by some of the Irish people. Pleading for justice at Westminister, he said, was useless. The people should rely upon Irish detetermination to arraign landlordism before the civilized world as the cause of crime and disorder.

Farmer Hogan, who was shot at Ballina, on Saturday, died Monday.

Thirty persons have been poisoned here from eating head-cheese manufactured by local butchers. The physicians attribute the trouble to bristles chopped up with the skin of the pork, causing irritation of the stomach's inner coating and producing spasms, and vomiting. Some of the sufferers are very low, but it is supposed all will recover.

Bishop Walsh, who has just returned from Ireland, Sunday, in St. Peter's Cathedral, referred to the Irish question. He condemned in scathing terms the agrarian crimes, but quoted statistics to show that there was less crime in Ireland, proportionately than in England, Scotland and Wales. While opposing the disintegration of the Empire, the Bishop favored home rule for Ireland, similar to that enjoyed by Canada.

Odessa, October 9. The military tribunal in session at Balta, trying the cases of the anti-Jewish rioters, condemned one of the leaders to two years, and five others from sixteen to eighteen months' imprisonment.

Constantinople, October 9—All the Powers, except England, Russia and France, have agreed upon a principle of license tax which the Porte proposes to levy upon foreigners doing business in Turkey

London, October 10.—A conference of coal miners, representing nine counties of England, will meet at Manchester, Friday, to decide upon the time at which notices shall be given of a general stoppage of work, especially in Yorkshire, Derbyshire and Lancashire. North Staffordshire coal mine owners have acceded to the application of the miners for an advance of ten per cent. in wages. Twenty thousand men are affected by the decision.

Cario, October 10. Arabi Pasha believes his life is in danger. There have been certain incidents which might demoralise the Circassians guarding him. One of the khedive's adherents has been heard to say he would like to administer to Arabi a cup of bad coffee, and the khedive has remarked that he and Arabi could not live in the same country.

The Ohio Election.

Columbus, October 11—The reports from the election received up to the hour of going to press, show that it was "a glorious victory for the Democrats and anti-temperance and anti-liquor license aggregation. In 545 precincts the Democratic gain was 12,378 indicating that the state has been caraied by about 20,000 majority. The Democrats claim 30,000 majority on the State ticket and the election of seventeen congressmen out of twenty-one. The Republicans concede a majority of 12,000, and the election of thirteen congressmen. The present delegation stands fifteen Republicans and five Democrats. In the next Congress Ohio will have twenty-one representatives. Governor Foster accounts for the Republican defeat on the ground that they had eight or ten candidates upon whom a bitter fight was made. He assigned as other reasons that the liquor interest went over in a body to the Democratic party. not only furnishing the means, but were also active in polling a full vote. He is of the opinion that if the Republicans had gotten out their vote the Democrats could not have carried the State.

The Republicans claim the election of Schultz, Taylor, Keifer, McCormick, Updegraff and McKinley certain, two others in doubt. At the Democratic headquarters they claim the following congressmen: Follett, Jordon, LeFevre Hurd, Hill, Converse, Wilkins, Foran, Seney and and Powell, and probably Geddes, Paige, Neal, Warren and Campbell. Gov. Fostor's own precinct, in Fostoria, gave a Democratic gain of seventy-eight.

Cincinnati, October 11.—This county has gone Democratic on the State ticket ten thousand, and on the county ticket three thousand. Hawkins the Democratic Enquirer candidate for sheriff, is probably defeated by a small vote. The latest from the State gives the Democrats a majority, of at least 25,000. The congressional delegation stands fifteen Democrats and six Republicans.

Columbus, October 11—Additional election returns are coming in slowly, as the Republicans are getting in more advices, they concede everything but a few congressmen. Estimates this morning put the Democratic majority in the state at 25,000, and make the congressional delegation stand fifteen Democrats to six Republicans. The election of McKinley in the nineteenth district, and of Robinson in the ninth, are in great doubt, and the Republicans must carry both to get six congressmen.

A peculiar feature of the contest, i that while Republicans were championing temperance, the prohibition vote has increased, and it is estimated has a larger per cent, of gain than th Democratic vote.

Cicinnati, October 11. Complete, but unofficial, returns from Hamilton county shows the following Democratic majorities: Newman, secretary of State, 10,650; Okey, judge of the supreme court, 9 809; Weible, board of public works, 9,734; Hawkins, sheriff, 111; Dalton, clerk, 937; Pugh, prosecuting attarney, 2,636; Muscroft, coroner, 2,344; Robertson, recorder, 2,738; Kuhl, county commissioner, 3,177; Cosgrave, county solicitor, 3,555; Fowler, board of control, 3,559; Applegate, infirmary director, 381; Follett, congress, First district, 1,763.

The Republicans still claim the election of Beresford for sheriff.

The city wa al excitement Wednesday morning on account of the mob which invaded Evansville and broke open the jail, taking therefrom Hume Redman, who was charged with murdering his wife, Eva, on last Friday night, and killing him in the street, and the subsequent events which have followed and are narrated below. The first intelligence received by the officers was at ten minutes past 2 o'clock Wednesday morning, when night-turnkey Hatmacher, received a telephone message from Ulimer's brewery, that a masked mob had passed up the streets on horseback. Hatmacher immediately notified Newitt, who hastened to the jail. Hatmacher after notifying Newitt want to the Sheriff's residence and gave the alarm. Sheriff Kerth and deputies Mauntie and Morten and Tom Kerth, Jr., were on the alert prepared to defend the jail and the prisoner. Newitt soon arrived and went into the clerk's office to telephone for assistance. He heard the clattering of the horses' hoofs coming up the bouldered street, and hurried back into the jail.

Sheriff Kerth was at the front door of the Court House, when the mob arrived. The mob dismounted, picketed their animals, left a guard to cover their retreat, and captured all citizens who happened to be attracted to the scene, while a portion of the mob made a dive for the jail. Kerth fired at them, but they did not falter; they took him a prisoner and were into the front yard in a jiffy. Two blows were sufficient to break in the outside wooden door, and they were in the jail defending their post.

Newitt Morton and Tom Kerth, Jr., opened up a brisk fire, which was responded to by the mob, who poured a fusilade through the door. Chisels and sledge hammers were soon brought, and willing hands went to work, and in a twinkling the jail door was open, Newitt ran back to Redman's cell and said to him, "I done all I could for you. They will get you," and he replied, "Give me a revolver and I will kill some of the s— of b—." When the jail door was opened, the mob rushed through the corridors to Redman's cell, and in a minute it was opened and Redman in their power. They tied his hands with a rope, and led him out.

The officers, all this time, were trying to escape from the jail and get assistance, so as to capture the mob or some of them. Newett managed to get into the Sheriff's residence, and ran up stairs to the front window, which he opened and blew his whistle. Then the mob followed him and threw him down stairs. When he got up the mob were bringing Redman out of the front door. They were ordered to halt, when their leader replied, "We are from Posey county, and came after Redman, and we are going to have him." The alarm of fire having been given out in the city, the chemical engine came rapidly up the street, and struck the buggy, into which the mob had placed Redman, and overturned it.

This threw the mob into same disorder, and one of the leaders said, "Put him on horseback." Then the order was countermanded and orders were given to kill him on the spot. One of the band seized a sledge hammer and dealt Redman a powerful blow on the head, falling him to the ground.

At this point, Chief Pritchett arrived on the scene. One of the mob run up to him and said: "Go away from here Pritchett; we don't wan't to kill you," at the same time snapping a revolver in his face, but his hand was knocked up in the air before the weapon was discharged. By this time several officers were on the ground and without orders from their superior opened fire on the rapidly retreating mob. The mob fired as they retreated. They were well armed and a regular pitched battle was fought on Third street. The bullets whistled by in every direction. Chief Pritchett and and Detective Newitt led the fight against them and made an effort to capture some of them, but the firing was so hot that they were compelled to lie flat on the ground to escape death.

The result of th battle was that Redman was killed where he was stricken down with the sledge-hammer. Over two dozen pistol balls entered his body. It was at this place that David Murphy, a brother-in-law of the murdered man, met his death. The mob were so intent on killing Redman that they fired helter skelter through their own ranks, and it was then that Murphy found his death. He was astride a gray horse, which started down Third street with the remainder of the mob when they left. A half-square from the scene, Murphy reeled and fell. Pritchard and Newitt hurried to his assistance, and he was carried into the court house, and medical aid summoned. Chief Pritchett telephoned for all the police and the officer at the hose house was placed on the watch. The body of Redman was conveyed to the court house. Murphy asked for a drink of water and said he resided in Mount Vernon. In twenty minutes afterward he was a corpse.

The mob, on leaving the scene, divided. At every corner they separated, and thus avoided the officers.

DR HARTER'S
A combination of Protoxide of Iron, Peruvian Bark and Phosphorus in a palatable form. The only preparation of iron that will not blacken the teeth, so characteristic of other iron preparations.

GENTLEMEN: I have used DR. HARTER'S IRON TONIC in my practice, and in an experience of twenty-five years in medicine, have never found anything to give the results that DR. HARTER'S IRON TONIC does. In many cases of Nervous Prostration, Female Diseases, Dyspepsia, and an impoverished condition of the blood, this peerless remedy has, in my hands, made some wonderful cures. Cases that have baffled some of our most eminent physicians have yielded to this great and incomparable remedy. I prescribe it in preference to any iron preparation made. In fact, such a compound as DR. HARTER'S IRON TONIC is a necessity in my practice. DR. ROBERT SAMUELS, 2[illegible] Wash. Avenue. ST. LOUIS, MO., NOV. 25th, 1881.

It gives color to the blood, natural healthful tone to the digestive organs and nervous system, making it applicable to General Debility, Loss of Appetite, Prostration of Vital Powers and Impotence.

THE London Truth gives the following opinion in regard to the education of children: "The school hours ought to be shortened. All the work should be in school, in alternate hours for study and repetition. There should be no evening preparation at home and no child ought to be tought anything but to tell the truth and say, 'If you please,' and 'No, thank you,' much before 7 years of age. Two years later he would, I venture to predict, be a fair better scholar than the average 9-year-old victim of the school board, and he would, furthermore, have the chance of being a fine healthy, happy, and well-grown urchin.

ENGLISH scientists are having quite a scare over the comet. A special dispatch says: Richard A. Proctor, who denied that it was the comet of 1843 and 1880, now finds he made a mistake, and so has withdrawn his statement. More cautious astronomers than he have no doubt of the identity of the comet, and believe it will return, at latest, in October, 1883, and then fall into the sun with disastrious results to our planet. It is said, on good authority, this is the opinion of the most eminent scientists of the day, C. Piazzi Smith, Astromomer Royal for Scotland, in particular, making no secret of his belief.

THE excessive imports continue to increase, and it is not a good sign. The imports of foreign dry goods at New York during September amounted to $11,800,238, being $981,961 more than for the same month last year, $1,737,-959 more than for the corresponding month in 1880. The goods marketed during the month amounted to $12,-049,558, or a trifle in excess of the imports. For the nine months ending with September the total importations were $105,218,401, or $17,378,116 more than for the corresponding period last year, $4,417,682 more than for the corresponding period in 1880, and $32,-071,669 in excess of the nine months of 1879. For the nine months ending with September the goods thrown on the market amounted to $103,974,843, against $90,967,169 for the same time last year, and $95,426,062 in 1880.

At the Jefferson College Hospital, Philadelphia, a few days a go, Dr. Little performed an interesting operation on a young Irishman, whose eye had been burned by sulphuric acid, destroying the conjunctiva. The corresponding part of a rabbit's eye was cut out and stitched onto the injured part of the man's eye, and it is believed now the operation of transplanting will be entirely successful.

Henry Ward Beecher, at the autumn meeting of the New York and Brooklyn Congregational churches, took occasion to withdraw from membership in the association. His pulpit teachings, he thought, took a range unauthorized by the denomination, and he did not propose that the association should be compelled to defend him. Future punishment, he claimed, would be mental, not physical; and the fire and brimstone hades he denounced as a barbaric slaughter-house notion. The doctrine of original sin, also, came under his displeasure, but in the Trinity and Divinity of Christ he was a firm believer.

The bed was on fire, but was soon extinguished.

Bogus Nautch Girls.

The Cincinnati Gazette exposes the fact that the "Nautch girls" who traveled with Snelbaker's show were no other than the Vivian sisters, a company of well-known variety actresses, "made up" and colored to suit the parts. The truth was brought out in a singular manner. A lady missionary who had just returned from India, accompanied by a young Hindoo girl, was to give a lecture in the city the same night on which the "Nautch girls" performed. The reporter borrowed the Hindoo Maiden and attempted to interview the "Nautch girls," when the managers owned up the fraud. The "Nautch girls" themselves thus relate their experience:

"Oh, what a dreadful time we had. You see we have been but a short time in this country, having come from England with Jarrett to do the skipping-rope dance in "Cinderella." This engagement came prematurely to a close, and we were left in New York almost without means. Col. Snelbaker suggested to us—that is, we three and Lizzie Latelle, then of our party—the Nautch-girl scheme. We had never seen a Nautch girl; but no matter, a ballet-master, one Novissimo, was brought in and we were taught the proper steps, and as the salrrry offered was large the farce began. A costume was selected, modeled after an Egyptain mantle ornament, our faces, arms, and busts painted with a copper-colored mixture, and we were taken heavily veiled to Philadelphia, where our debut was to be made. It was really dreadful. We were prisoners for six mortal weeks, not even being allowed to speak to any of the company, who for a long time actually believed us to be the genuine article. At the Smedley house we were registered as Hindoos, and being left in the room by our agent and supposed interpreter, went an entire day without food or fire, not daring to speak to any one. Emily tried to make signs to the waiter, but we all laughed so heartily at the queer plight we were in that the fellow thought we were making sport of him, and hurried out of the room. Our food was served without knives or forks when we did get anything, as Hindoos were supposed to either eat with their fingers or chop-sticks. So we went from place to place, wrapped up in huge cloaks, with veils closely drawn, until, as you know, the exposure came, and tha Nautch girls ceased to be attractive.

The Chinese as Cattle Tenders.

Corwin Anderson, one of the most extensive breeders of fancy and common cattle in Kentucky, has lately been in Denver, engaging Chinamen for his farms. His plantations are extensive. He has employed hundreds of negroes to do his work, and while he has always paid them well, he claims that they have been lazy and did not earn the money they received. Besides that, they were not disposed to learn, and to infuse into their minds any new ideas as to the science of agriculture or stock raising was almost impossible. This inactivity and stubborn-mindedness has been detrimental to his interests, and he determined upon employing Chinamen. His arrangements in Denver are such that he has reason to think that within a month his cattle will be watched by Chinese employes.

He says that the Chinamen possess all the qualities wanted. They are cleanly, and their great imitative powers will soon place them on a par with the white race so far as agricultural knowledge and intelligence go. Then they are steady workers, too, and with them there will be no basking in the sun or sleeping behind a fence. Mr. Corwin does not expect to make any money from a cut in wages. He will pay the Chinamen as much as he has been giving his colored help, and will rely upon the difference in work done to establish the wisdom of his new move. Large numbers of the oldest planters who heretofore have been wedded to old ideas and old ways of doing things, stand ready to emulate the example of Mr. Corwin if he succeeds. There will, it is expected, be considerable trouble over the matter, as the colored population will not quietly submit to being ousted from their places, their old homes and associations.

The Coming Bonnet.

Boston Traveller.

There was never less to say of millinery than this year, for everything is worn and nothing looks odd, or attracts more than a passing glance. The only general rule is that hats are large and bonnets small, and the most utterly utter of all is a small bonnet sans strings, although these are limited to young ladies. The large hats carry off an incredible amount of trimming, although is a matter the wearer can regulate at her own sweet will.

Velvet and plush are used either singly or in combination, and often in two colors; the brim of one fabric and color, the crown of the other fabric in a contrasting color; the ties, usually of the Ottoman repped ribbon, are of the same color as the brim, while the plumes are shocked in the two colors, or, if the contrast is too striking, are of the same color as the strings and brim. Velvet ribbon is used for ties on some bonnets, but it is not so popular as the softer rep. It crushes in tying, and looks shabby after its first freshness is worn off. Feathers are used in trimming in great profusion and infinite variety. Heads and breasts, and often the whole bird, with beak and claws gilded, are used; ostrich plumes, not the long ones, but the tips and toes of demi-length, are seen often.

Colors range through olive tones, crushed strawberry and terra cotta shades, Indian and electric blue. White opera hats are conspicuous by their absence.

WASHINGTON.

The indications regarding the tobacco crop of the country are more favorably now than they were a month or more ago. The reports from Connecticut and other New England tobacco sections, and likewise from the tobacco regions of Pennsylvania were not favorable. Now, however, it is learned that the Virginia and North Carolina crops are likely to be very valuable and the "North Carolina bright tobacco" is reported the finest crop ever grown in the State.

Great regret is felt here over the abandonment of the effort to reach Lieutenant Greeley at his signal station at Lady Franklin Bay. He has been there nearly a year already, and the record of observations made during that time would not only be very valuable in itself, but is desired to be used in connection with those from the other stations in the International circumpolar chain. There are twelve of these stations which have been opened by the various nations on the seventy-first parallel, or as nearly so as possible. Two of them are occupied by the United States, two by Russia, one by England and Canada, and one each by Germany, Austria, Holland, Sweden, Norway, Finland and Denmark.

Assistant Postmaster-General Hatton has issued an order that all letter-carriers while on duty must wear their full uniform, under penalties of suspension and loss of pay.

Some figures recently prepared at the Treasury Department regarding the public debt are quite interesting. They show that the annual interest charge is now $1.09 per head for all persons in the United States. In 1865 it was at its highest, being $4.29 per person. In the following year it was $4.12, and a year later $3.84. From that time it gradually lessened, until in 1871 it touched $3 per head, and later $2. Now it has fallen to $1.09 per capita, and soon must go below that.

From statistics prepared by Inspector General of Steam Vessels Dumont for his annual report, it appears that there were 5,117 steam vessels in service during the fiscal year 1882, with a total tonnage of 1,278,564 and with 20,457 licensed officers. During that period 338 were placed in the service against 243 the previous fiscal year; the increase in tonnage for the year was 7,456 against 82,195 for the year previous, and the number of officers licensed was 2,659, an increase of 1,532 over the previous year. The figures indicate a considerable increase in the number of new vessels, but the decreased tonnage shows they are mostly of small size. A noticeable circumstance is the small increase of the traveling and miscellaneous expenses, which are but $200 in excess of the expenses of the year 1881, or a total of about $67,800. In 1874, with little more than one-half the number of vessels now in service, the expenses were $64,100.

The Treasury Department has decided to act in accordance with the decision of the Circuit Court at San Francisco, relative to the right of Chinese subjects to visit the United States under the recent act of Congress. Their decision was substantially that the statute must be made to harmonize with extradition treaty, and that tee law cannot be construed as forgidding the landing of merchants, travelers, students, etc, they not being laborers.

The total values of exports of petroleum and petroleum products during August, 1882, were $3,599,440; during August, 1881, $5,962,939. For the eight months ending August 31, 1882, they were $30,946,856, and for the corresponding period of the previous year $30,409,259.

The trial of A C Soteldo for killing his brother came up Monday. The murder occurred last February in the office of the National Republican, and grew out of a criticism which appeared in the paper, and gave offense to A M Soteldo, who was a clerk in the office of the District Commissioner. A M and A C Soteldo, the latter then a prominent press correspondent, went to see the managing editor Clarence Barton, about the matter. An altercation ensued in which Barton drew his revolver and began firing. A C Soteldo, as this story goes, thought his brother in danger and commenced likewise to shoot. One of his shots took effect in his brothers neck, killing him instantly. He was immediately arrested, and has been in jail ever since, bail being refused.

A boy about 18 years old called at the police headquarters this morning and asked for a permit to carry a pistol. He was asked what he wanted to carry a pistol for, and replied, "To shoot President Arthur." He was taken to Jefferson Market Court, where he seemed much excited. In answer to questions from the court he said his name was William Martin; that he lived at No. 117 East Eighty-fourth street; that President Arthur used to live in the same house with his father eighteen years ago, when he was a roundsman. He said he had just come from the Penitentiary, where he served a term for larceny, and that when he did not steal, he blacked boots. He was committed for examination as to his mental condition.

The declaration of Patrick Ford, of the Irish World, that the Land League had ceased to exist, has caused much commotion in Land League circles. Dr Wallace, President of the National League, said to-day that he admired Ford's frankness, but did not think his action would cause the disbandment of the League organization, of which he (Wallace) is President. Action of the conference in Ireland would be awaited before any important steps were taken here.

FOREIGN.

London, October 9—Davitt, in a speeck at Wexford, yesterday, declared that the Land League had inculcated principles which were eternal and indestructible, but he was disappointed at the outcome of the agitation. When the whole Irish race had rallied to the cry for the abolition of landlordism the league had by one tremendous sweep of the Government been arrested in its career. The Government had been furnished with a pretext for action by the outrages committed by some of the Irish people. Pleading for justice at Westminister, he said, was useless. The people should rely upon Irish detetermination to arraign landlordism before the civilized world as the cause of crime and disorder.

Farmer Hogan, who was shot at Ballina, on Saturday, died Monday.

Thirty persons have been poisoned here from eating head-cheese manufactured by local butchers. The physicians attribute the trouble to bristles chopped up with the skin of the pork, causing irritation of the stomach's inner coating and producing spasms, and vomiting. Some of the sufferers are very low, but it is supposed all will recover.

Bishop Walsh, who has just returned from Ireland, Sunday, in St. Peter's Cathedral, referred to the Irish question. He condemned in scathing terms the agrarian crimes, but quoted statistics to show that there was less crime in Ireland, proportionately than in England, Scotland and Wales. While opposing the disintegration of the Empire, the Bishop favored home rule for Ireland, similar to that enjoyed by Canada.

London, October 10.—A conference of coal miners, representing nine counties of England, will meet at Manchester, Friday, to decide upon the time at which notices shall be given of a general stoppage of work, especially in Yorkshire, Derbyshire and Lancashire. North Staffordshire coal mine owners have acceded to the application of the miners for an advance of ten per cent, in wages. Twenty thousand men are affected by the decision.

Cairo, October 10. Arabi Pasha believes his life is in danger. There have been certain incidents which might demoralize the Circassians guarding him. One of the khedive's adherents has been heard to say he would like to administer to Arabi a cup of bad coffee, and the khedive has remarked that he and Arabi could not live in the same country.

The Ohio Election.

Columbus, October 11—The reports from the election received up to the hour of going to press, show that it was "a glorious victory for the Democrats and anti-temperance and anti-liquor license aggregation. In 545 precincts the Democratic gain was 12,378 indicating that the state has been carried by about 20,000 majority. The Democrats claim 30,000 majority on the State ticket and the election of seventeen congressmen out of twenty-one. The Republicans concede a majority of 12,000, and the election of thirteen congressmen. The present delegation stands fifteen Republicans and five Democrats. In the next Congress Ohio will have twenty-one representatives. Governor Foster accounts for the Republican defeat on the ground that they had eight or ten candidates upon whom a bitter fight was made. He assigned as other reasons that the liquor interest went over in a body to the Democratic party. not only furnishing the means, but were also active in polling a full vote. He is of the opinion that if the Republicans had gotten out their vote the Democrats could not have carried the State.

The Republicans claim the election of Schultz, Taylor, Keifer, McCormick, Updegraff and McKinley certain, two others in doubt. At the Democratic headquarters they claim the following congressmen: Follett, Jordon, LeFevre Hurd, Hill, Converse, Wilkins, Foran, Seney and and Powell, and probably Geddes, Paige, Neal, Warren and Campbell. Gov. Fostor's own precinct, in Fostoria, gave a Democratic gain of seventy-eight.

Cincinnati, October 11. — This county has gone Democratic on the State ticket ten thousand, and on the county ticket three thousand. Hawkins the Democratic Enquirer candidate for sheriff, is probably defeated by a small vote. The latest from the State gives the Democrats a majority, of at least 25,000. The congressional delegation stands fifteen Democrats and six Republicans.

Columbus, October 11—Additional election returns are coming in slowly, as the Republicans are getting in more advices, they concede everything but a few congressmen. Estimates this morning put the Democratic majority in the state at 25,000, and make the congressional delegation stand fifteen Democrats to six Republicans. The election of McKinley in the nineteenth district, and of Robinson in the ninth, are in great doubt, and the Republicans must carry both to get six congressmen.

A peculiar feature of the contest, i that while Republicans were championing temperance, the prohibition vote has increased, and it is estimated has a larger per cent. of gain than th Democratic vote.

Cicinnati, October 11. Complete, but unofficial, returns from Hamilton county shows the following Democratic majorities: Newman, secretary of State, 10,650; Okey, judge of the supreme court, 9 809; Weible, board of public works, 9,734; Hawkins, sheriff, 111; Dalton, clerk, 937; Pugh, prosecuting attorney, 2,636; Muscroft, coroner, 2,344; Robertson, recorder, 2,728; Kuhl, county commissioner, 3,177; Cosgrave, county solicitor, 3,555; Fowler, board of control, 3,559; Applegate, infirmary director, 381; Follett, congress, First district, 1,763.

The Republicans still claim the election of Beresford for sheriff.

The city was al excitement Wednesday morning on account of the mob which invaded Evansville and broke open the jail, taking therefrom Hume Redman, who was charged with murdering his wife, Eva, on last Friday night, and killing him in the street, and the subsequent events which have followed and are narrated below. The first intelligence received by the officers was at ten minutes past 2 o'clock Wednesday morning, when night-turnkey Hatmacher, received a telephone message from Ullmer's brewery, that a masked mob had passed up the streets on horseback. Hatmacher immediately notified Newitt, who hastened to the jail. Hatmacher after notifying Newitt want to the Sheriff's residence and gave the alarm. Sheriff Kerth and deputies Mauntie and Morten and Tom Kerth, jr., were on the alert prepared to defend the jail and the prisoner. Newitt soon arrived and went into the clerk's office to telephone for assistance. He heard the clattering of the horses' hoofs coming up the bouldered street, and hurried back into the jail.

Sheriff Kerth was at the front door of the Court House, when the mob arrived. The mob dismounted, picketed their animals, left a guard to cover their retreat, and captured all citizens who happened to be attracted to the scene, while a portion of the mob made a dive for the jail. Kerth fired at them, but they did not falter; they took him a prisoner and were into the front yard in a jiffy. Two blows were sufficient to break in the outside wooden door, and they were in the jail defending their post.

Newitt Morton and Tom Kerth, Jr., opened up a brisk fire, which was responded to by the mob, who poured a fusilade through the door. Chisels and sledge hammers were soon brought, and willing hands went to work, and in a twinkling the jail door was open. Newitt ran back to Redman's cell and said to him, "I done all I could for you. They will get you!" and he replied, "Give me a revolver and I will kill some of the s— of b—." When the jail door was opened, the mob rushed through the corridors to Redman's cell, and in a minute it was opened and Redman in their power. They tied his hands with a rope, and led him out.

The officers, all this time, were trying to escape from the jail and get assistance, so as to capture the mob or some of them. Newett managed to get into the Sheriff's residence, and ran up stairs to the front window, which be opened and blew his whistle. Then the mob followed him and threw him down stairs. When he got up the mob were bringing Redman out of the front door. They were ordered to halt, when their leader replied, "We are from Posey county, and came after Redman, and we are going to have him." The alarm of fire having been given out in the city, the chemical engine came rapidly up the street, and struck the buggy, into which the mob had placed Redman, and overturned it.

This threw the mob into some disorder, and one of the leaders said, "Put him on horseback." Then the order was countermanded and orders were given to kill him on the spot. One of the band seized a sledge hammer and dealt Redman a powerful blow on the head, falling him to the ground.

At this point, Chief Pritchett arrived on the scene. One of the mob run up to him and said: "Go away from here Pritchett; we don't wan't to kill you," at the same time snapping a revolver in his face, but his hand was knocked up in the air before the weapon was discharged. By this time several officers were on the ground and without orders from their superior opened fire on the rapidly retreating mob. The mob fired as they retreated. They were well armed and a regular pitched battle was fought on Third street. The bullets whistled by in every direction. Chief Pritchett and and Detective Newitt led the fight against them and made an effort to capture some of them, but the firing was so hot that they were compelled to lie flat on the ground to escape death.

The result of th battle was that Redman was killed where he was stricken down with the sledge-hammer. Over two dozen pistol balls entered his body. It was at this place that David Murphy, a brother-in-law of the murdered man, met his death. The mob were so intent on killing Redman that they fired helter skelter through their own ranks, and it was then that Murphy found his death. He was astride a gray horse, which started down Third street with the remainder of the mob when they left. A half-square from the scene, Murphy reeled and fell. Pritchard and Newitt hurried to his assistance, and he was carried into the court house, and medical aid summoned. Chief Pritchett telephoned for all the police and the officer at the hose house was placed on the watch. The body of Redman was conveyed to the court house. Murphy asked for a drink of water and said he resided in Mount Vernon. In twenty minutes afterward he was a corpse.

The mob, on leaving the scene, divided. At every corner they separated, and thus avoided the officers.

Victoria, B. C., dispatch:

Gold diggings that pay $10 a day have been discovered in the Cariboo District, and a band of miners have gone thither. In the Lilloet District there is much excitement, Indians have brought in $4,000 worth of gold dust from the Bridge river, some pieces weighing out as much as $10. It is believed that new and rich gold fields have been found.

A combination of Protoxide of Iron, Peruvian Bark and Phosphorus in a palatable form. The only preparation of iron that will not blacken the teeth, so characteristic of other iron preparations.
GENTLEMEN: I have used DR. HARTER'S IRON TONIC in my practice, and in an experience of twenty-five years in medicine, have never found anything to give the results that DR. HARTER'S IRON TONIC does. In many cases of Nervous Prostration, Female Diseases, Dyspepsia, and an impoverished condition of the blood, this peerless remedy has, in my hands, made some wonderful cures. Cases that have baffled some of our most eminent physicians have yielded to this great and incomparable remedy. I prescribe it in preference to any iron preparation made. In fact, such a compound as DR. HARTER'S IRON TONIC is a necessity in my practice.

Auburn Courier.

AUBURN, INDIANA, OCT 19th, 1882

HON. D. D. MOODY,

Candidate for Representative, will address the people on the political questions of the day at the following times and places. All mettings to be in the evening:

Newville,	Oct. 21
Richland Center,	Oct. 23
Franklin Center,	Oct. 24
Fairfield Center,	Oct. 25
Waterloo,	Oct. 26
Butler,	Oct. 27
Garrett	Oct. 28
Auburn,	Oct. 31

W. R. MYERS, candidate for secretary of state will be at Garrett, Oct, 19, and at Waterloo Oct. 24.

As we went to press last week, news came that Ohio went democratic. It turned out to be a sweeping victory that extended into every part of the state. The democratic majority was about 20,000, and they get 13 of the 21 members of congre s. Let every democrat turn out on election day and vote as the democrats of Ohio did, and Indiana will wheel into line in good style.

REV. D. F. KAIN and J. W. Baxter are working for prohibition. This may be well enough. But we submit that they have no right to go about the country claiming to be democrats, and at the same time working against Mr. Moody, the democratic candidate for legislature. Two years ago Mr. Moody helped Mr. Baxter into the office he now holds. It looks like a case of bad memory or of ingratitude.

THE Butler Record says that nothing can defeat their ticket in this county, but a light vote. Correct. That's what will do it. And it is a mighty light vote that some of them will get as matters now stand. The people are tired of voting for a man merely because he talks well, dresses well and spends his money freely. They are going to stand by men whose ability and integrity are unquestioned, men whom they have known for years, and whom they can meet as friends and equals everywhere.

IN Iowa, where prohibition is succeeding finely, the number of saloons increased nearly 9 per cent during the year 1881. In Indiana, under a license law the number decreased nearly 3 per cent, in the same year. In Michigan, it increased nearly 5 per cent, that year under a license law. In New Hampshire under prohibition, the traffic increased over 8 per cent. In Maine, a prohibition state, during the same year, it increared over 23 per cent. This shows whether prohibition can cure all the evils of intemperance, as its advocates claim it will. To an unprejudiced mind, it looks more like free whisky than temperance.

THE Butler Record, takes great pains to propagate a lie. It could have told the truth just as well, if in its article in reference to Judge Lowry, it wished to do so. The editor of the Record knows nothing about Judge Lowry's war record. If he did he would know, that the Judge did as much toward putting down the rebellion as he himself, or as the patrotic Glasgow, or as much as any republican who staid at home. And how does the Record know that "Glasgow was the friend of the soldier, when the soldier needed a friend." No doubt the Record man is one of those republicans who are admirers of all the confederate leaders who now vote the republican ticket, but look upon a democratic soldier who shed his blood for the Union, with a great deal of holy horror.

O. Z. HUBBELL, candidate on the republican ticket for joint representative made a speech to a fair sized audience, in the court room Saturday evening. Like most of the republican speakers, he made a number of very sweeping assertions in regard to the tariff and other questions, but never offered a word of proof to make his assertions good. Neither did he attempt to give reasons for the remarkable statements he made. Like Glasgow, he claimed that the tariff on goods imported into this country, was paid in the old country by the manufacturer, and that it did not come out of the consumer in this country, unless it was in the case of goods that were also manufactured here. Why did he not show how this was done? If he thinks the tariff on one class of goods is paid here, and on another class it is paid on the other side of the ocean, why did he not inform us, how it comes to be so? Why did he not tell us in what cities of Great Britane, our custom officers and custom houses are located in order that the dealers there may pay over their tariff money to United States custom officers. Under what law of congress are we able to collect our revenues in England instead of collecting them in our own ports of entry. We want explanation and proofs.

WEST VIRGINIA elected but one state officer this year, a supreme judge. The democratic candidate received a majority of 7000, which represents about the majority in that state.

WE occasionally hear some sour democrat—a disappointed office seeker—saying the democratic party made a great departure from its former record on the liquor question this year, and they can no longer remain with the party, or at least vote for its candidates for the legislature, because they are honest enough to come out and tell the people they are opposed to prohibition. Here are the democratic platforms adopted by the party in state conventions on this question.

PLATFORM JULY 5, 1856:

That while we are in favor of sobriety and temperance and all proper means for the promotion of these virtues, we are unconditionally opposed to the prohibitory liquor law passed at the last session of the General Assembly of this state and to any enactment embodying the oppressive and arbitrary provisions of that law.

PLATFORM OF 1866:

RESOLVED, That all prohibitory liquor laws affecting the private rights of citizens to use their own time and innocent pursuits, or to force men to abstain by law, under pains and penalty, and should be discountenanced. The agencies of moral suasion are more in consonance with the character of our people and their institutions. The luxury of doing right without constraint is to all men an ennobling sentiment. We further believe that the people of Indiana have had quite enough of Main lawism, under the fanatical rule of men opposed to the democratic party in days gone by and with our consent that kind of legislation shall never be re-enacted in this state.

PLATFORM OF 1868:

That the attempt to regulate the moral ideas and appetites of the people by legislation is unjust and despotic, and we are opposed to that class of legislation which seeks to prohibit the people from the enjoyment of all proper appetites and amusements.

PLATFORM OF 1870:

That any attempt to regulate the moral ideas, appetites or innocent amusement of the people by legislation is unwise and despotic.

PLATFORM OF 1874:

That the act of February 27, 1873, commonly called the Baxter Bill has proved a failure, and is in many respects of doubtful constitutionality, and is no more efficient in restraining the evils of intemperance than a judicious and well regulated license law favoring its repeal.

PLATFORM OF 1876:

We believe that a license law properly guarded is the true principle in legislation upon the liquor traffic.

PLATFORM OF 1882:

The democratic party is now, as it has always been, opposed to all sumptuary legislation, and it is especially opposed to the proposed amendment to the constitution of Indiana, known as the prohibitory amendment, and we are in favor of the submission of said proposed amendment, as well as other proposed amendments, to the people, according to the provisions of the constitution for its own amendment, and the people have the right to oppose or favor the adoption of any or all the amendments at all stages of their consideration, and any submission of constitutional amendments to a vote of the people should be at a time and under circumstances most favorable to a full vote, and therefore should be at a general election.

Proposed prohibitory amendment to the constitution:

Section 1 The manufacture, sale and keeping for sale in said state, spirituous, vinous, malt liquors, or any other intoxicating liquors, except for medical, scientific, mechanical and wines for sacramental purposes, shall be and is hereby forever prohibited in the State of Indiana.

Section 2. The General Assembly of the State of Indiana shall provide by law in what manner, by whom and at what place such liquors shall be manufactured or sold for medicinal, scientific, mechanical and sacramental purposes.

Article 16, Sec. 1 of our constitution provides that

Any amendment or amendments to the constitution may be proposed in either branch of the General Assembly, and if the same shall be agreed to by a majority of the members elected to each of the two houses, such proposed amendment or amendments shall, with the yeas and nays thereon, be entered on their journals, and referred to the General Assembly to be chosen at the next general election; and, if, in the General Assembly so next chosen, such proposed amendment or amendments shall be agreed to by a majority of all the members elected to each house, then it shall be the duty of the General Assembly to submit such amendment or amendments to the electors of the state; and, if a majority of such electors shall ratify the same, such amendment or amendments shall become a part of the constitution.

As the labors of the constitutional convention of 1850 were drawing to a close, a committee consisting of ten members of the convention was appointed to prepare an address to the people, in which the main features o the constitution were to be set forth. The committee performed that duty, and the address was endorsed by the entire convention and was bound with the constitution and sent out to the people as a key or commentary explaining each article of the new constitution, and we give below what they said of the plan proposed for amending the constitution, which address is as binding and sacred as the constitution itself. We submit to our readers whether the men who made the constitution understood its meaning better than the delegates of the last republican state convention. Here is what the address says:

MODE OF AMENDING THE CONSTITUTION:

Amendments to the constitution may be proposed in the senate or house of representatives. If passed by a majority of all the members elected to either branch, they are referred to the next regular session of the legislature, to be held two years thereafter. If passed by them a second time they are then, at the next general election, to be submitted to the people; and if they pass this final ordeal they become a part of the constitution.

In this way there will always occur a general election of members of the legislature, during the canvass for which the amendments that may have been proposed at the previous session can be brought in issue; and nearly three years must intervene from the time an amendment is first proposed before it can be finally adopted.

There was provided in the old constitution no mode of submitting to the people separate amendments. The advantage of this provision is, that without expense of a convention, the new constitution, if found faulty or deficient in any of its parts, may be amended and perfected.

GEO W. CARR, President.
WM. H. ENGLISH, Principal Sec'y.
George L. Sites, Robert M. Evans, Herman G. Barkwell, Assistant Secretaries.

[See page 31 of pamphlet entitled "Constitution of the state of Indiana, the address of the Constitutional Convention," published by Norman & Kent, at New Albany, in 1851.]

Where is the provision for the special election? "If passed by them a second time they are then at the next general election (not special) to be submitted to the people."

THE TRUE RULE

is, that whenever a large number of people of the state petition the legislature to propose an amendment to the constitution, the legislature in the first instance ought to propose, in order that public attention may be drawn to it and its merits or demerits be considered, and after being proposed in the first instance, it should be disposed of in the manner pointed out by the constitution and in accordance with the spirit and intention of the constitution. The party that stands by the method provided by the constitution for the submission of amendments to the constitution and accepts the duty which the constitution imposes upon the electors of the state respecting them and boldly and honestly meets the issue as it is required by the constitution to be met, will not be found wanting in public confidence.

A TEMPERANCE DEMOCRAT.

CORRESPONDENCE.

WATERLOO.

W. R. Myers, candidate for secretary of state on the democratic ticket, speaks here Tuesday evening Oct. 24.

Lowenstein & Rothschild are selling vast quanities of goods, and business is taking a boom for people who want winter clothing.

Miss Bateson, keeps filling up her stock of fancy and millinery goods, as often as the stock gets low.

Kendallville papers say 443 excursion tickets were sold at that place, for the Waterloo fair, 341 being sold on Thursday alone.

It is generally agreed that there should have been a street sprinkler used during the fair.

Brand & Duncan are getting a nice lot of winter apples from Steuben county, and are also shipping to other places what they can spare from their business here.

Boyer & Beidler did a big business during the fair.

Mary Beard, daughter of J. D. Beard, of Smithfield, and one of our well known teachers, has obtained a position in the public schools of Des Moines, Iowa, at $60 per month. She has one of the higher departments, and her good fortune will be gratifying to her many friends in this county.

Spriggs and Roberts two of the stockmen who exhibited short horns at the fair, have got into a quarrel, about their premiums. Spriggs has published a number of articles in the Waterloo Press and Fort Wayne Gazette, in which he charges unfairness on the part of the committee on short horns. Both these gentlemen have fine stock, and it won't pay to get into a silly quarrel over that matter.

Our people will learn with regret the death of Dr. Shepherd's little son at their home in Ada, Ohio.

Quite a number of our citizens got ready to go to Angola to attend the fair last Thursday, and many of them went away after they found they could get no train home. No special trains were provided, and regular trains run in such a way they did not get home till two o'clock at night.

Miss Maggie Bateson has returned form Cleveland, where she has been to purchase a new stock of goods. They are now arriving every day, and ladies can find anything in the millinery and fancy goods line by calling at her store.

Dr. Darby is having a brick walk built on the north side of his residence. Had. and Frank are doing the work.

F. P. Blair visited his friends Will. Urie, at Burr Oak, Mich., and Clark Long, at Chicago, last week, and found them both prosperous and happy.

R. D. Tefft was in town Tuesday night, having in charge Texas Bill, whom he was taking to Michigan City.

Mrs. Leb Anderson was visiting her parents near Angola last week.

Mrs. Parmeter and daughter of Toledo, are the guests of her sister Mrs. J. S. Bowers.

Miss Jennie Moore, of Toledo, who has been visiting her sister Della, for the last two weeks, returned to her home Tuesday.

Miss Lizzie Dickinson, of Angola, spent a few days last week with her sister Mrs. C. W. Gillett.

Born to the wife of F. W. Willis Oct. 13, a son.

Mr. Frager has his sale next Saturday, preparatory to starting west.

A delegation of about fifty German Lutheran ministers changed cars here Tuesday for LaPorte, to attend conference.

Mrs. Clint Daylong is quite sick.

Geo. Morrell left yesterday for Marion, Iowa, where he has a position in a drug store.

Harry Ettinger a former Waterloo boy is visiting his sister Mrs. B. F. Kennedy this week.

In attempting to board a freight train at this place last Monday morning, A. Parks, a Lake Shore conductor was seriously injured. He is now improving as fast as can be expected.

The Lake Shore pay car passed through this place yesterday.

J. G. Brown has been given his old position as section foreman on the Lake Shore.

F. P. Blair resumed work Monday night, after enjoying a vacation for a couple of weeks.

Charlie Clark has left us, gone west to grow up with the country. We wish him abundant succes.

BUTLER.

Mrs. Rev. Wilkinson, is quite poorly again. She has been in feeble health all summer.

Bro. Garrison is slowly gaining again, and hopes are entertained that he will be on the streets again soon.

Milton Bowman is still quite low.

Our streets presented a gala day appearance on Saturday. Hitching places were at a premium.

Mrs. Stoner, of Metz, occupies Maggie Dills' old millinery stand.

The sale of Geo. Egnew's personal property amounted to over $800. His beautiful and commodious late residence is to let.

W. W. and Edwin Egnew, of Kansas City, and Detroit, were in attendance at the sale at their father's goods.

Hogs seem scarce in this locality, and prices run from $6 to $8 per hundred.

Quite a serious accident occured just west of the round house, on the Lake Shore road on the morning of the 13. Stock express No. 28 from the west, by some means broke in two, the forward section passing in on the switch all right, while the rear section fell behind and stood part on the main and part on the side track. No. 17, New York and Chicago express, limited, which does not stop here came thundering around the curve at a high rate of speed, not discovering the obstruction till within a dozen car lengths. The engineer reversed his engine and leaped in the ditch just in time to save his life. The engine plowed clear through two cars loaded with cattle, smashing them to kindling wood, yet strange to say did not injure but a single one so much as to prevent them from being immediately loaded into other cars and reshipped. No one hurt.

MARRIED:—Sunday evening Oct. 15, 82, at the residence of the bride's parents by Rev. C. H. Wilkinson, Mr. David Knisley of the firm Knisley & Brothers, and Miss Eva Mason, all of Butler. They started east Monday afternoon to spend their honey moon on the banks of Harlem river. May hope and happiness ever crown these young hearts who walk forth with the morning star of promise glistening on their brows, and may each morning's dawn spring up anew, filling their lives with diamond joy dust, which may long float and sparkle, enclosing their home in gems jeweled in perpetual sunbeams of joy, beauty and peace.

PLEASANT CHAPEL.

The concert last night proved a success instead of a failure. It being the first ever held in the place. They did well.

Rev. J. N. McCurdy who has been visiting under the parental roof for some weeks, will soon return to his charge in Kansas, and his sister Ida will accompany him.

Dr. J. Kenestrick, of Angola, spent Sabbath with his parents and friends.

Mr. W. R. Emerson and his son-in-law S. Rose have returned from the Waterloo fair, they report a fine time. Mr. E. will soon start for Maylay, Kansas, on a visit to his daughter, Mrs. A. J. Crooks and will bring his daughter Mary home with him.

We had two book agents in our vicinity Sunday, Frand Bundy and Oscar Gerber.

Mr. and Mrs. Tim Kimsely and little daughter Dessie of Butler, attended the concert at Pleasant Chapel. Miss Dessie sang a beautiful temperance song. Miss Zella McCurdy read a very fine selection on temperance. Miss Minnie Werrbaugh read an essay. Title, The Four Seasons and their Relations to Life.

Mr. J. H. McCurdy will teach the Pleasant Chapel school this winter. S.

MR. HUBBELL, in his Saturday evening speech, said, as so many of his party say, that a high tariff made the wages of employes in factories much higher and made the manufactured article cheaper. It was a surprise to hear such a thing, and no less surprising to find that some of his hearers believed it. Let us reason together. Let us analyze this argument, and it will stand like this: "Without a tariff, a yard of goods can be made at a cost of one dollar, and the men employed to make it get one dollar a day for their labor. Now, put a tariff of fifty cents a yard on these same goods, and they can be sold at seventy-five cents a yard, and the workmen will receive one dollar and a half a day, for their labor." They say the tariff can do both these things, make the goods cheaper and raise the price of wages. But the increase of wages and the increase in cost made by a tariff, must necessarily increase the cost of producing a yard of goods. But by republican ideas, the more you add to the cost of a thing, the cheaper it becomes.

THE Record says Glasgow is in favor of a free ballot and a full and fair count. How did he stand on the "full and fair count" business in 1876? That is what the people want to know. Was he then in favor of overturning the will of the entire nation as expressed by their votes, as his party then did by fraud and perjury? No doubt he was then as busy as any one in condoning the crime, and at the same time, crying aloud for a free ballot and a fair count.

THE Glasgow meeting at Waterloo during the fair, did not take place for want of an audience.

THE Steuben county teachers' institute begins Nov. 13, the same day as ours.

—Shaffer has the largest stock of furniture in DeKalb county.

Foster's Illustrated Musical Journal contains the latest vocal and instrumental music every month, Musical News, Literature, Romance, Instruction, etc. The amount of music therein during the year would amount to over TWENTY DOLLARS in sheet form. The music is selected with the aim to supply, alike, the beginner and the practiced musician with the best music. The JOURNAL is printed on heavy, calendered, tinted paper with illustrations from eminent artists. Another essential is "Answers to Correspondents;" while one of the prominent features is the prize department, whereby EVERY SUBSCRIBER RECEIVES CASH PRIZES. Again the MUSICAL LIBRARY, a bound book containing about $15 worth of the latest and choicest music, will be given as a premium. Of these there are several volumes, vocal and instrumental, easy and difficult. State which you wish or send for contents. Lastly, to prove the superiority of our music, one of our latest 50c. pieces, with illustrated title page, will be included in above offer. This is truly the greatest offer ever made considering the excellency of the JOURNAL and the value of premiums. Subscribe at once and learn particulars of prize department and if desirous of getting up a club, send for our unequalled terms. If not satisfied after subscribing money will be refunded. Send 3 3-cent stamps to pay postage on premiums, to the STANDARD MUSIC PUBLISHING HOUSE, GENEVA, OHIO.

COLUMBUS BUGGY Co.
COLUMBUS OHIO.

Be sure, before buying, to examine the Name Plate to be found on the rear of every Buggy manufactured by us, for NONE ARE GENUINE unless they bear the name

Columbus Buggy Company,
COLUMBUS OHIO.

Many inferior goods are offered as Columbus Buggies, and care should be used to distinguish between "Columbus Buggies" and Columbus Buggy Co's. Buggies.

TESTIMONIALS.

GENTLEMEN: Your buggies have given me entire satisfaction, both in style and durability. I have used them for the past three years. Your recent improvements on road wagons I consider the best in the market.
JAMES H. RAMBURG.
Frederick Maryland.

DEAR SIRS: We have used buggies of your make that have been in use three years, and no buggy we have that cost twice the amount has given better satisfaction.
JAMES H. ALEXANDER.
Johnstown, Pa.

GENTLEMEN: We have used the Columbus Buggy Company's work for the last five years and can conscientiously recommend it as strictly first class as to style, material, workmanship and durability. Your buggies have given better satisfaction than any other make of vehicles we had in use for the last ten years
PALMER & WHITTAKER.
Red Oak Iowa.

GENTLEMEN: It gives me pleasure to state that I have been selling your buggies and carriages for four years, and can safely recommend them to any one in want of a buggy or carriage. Yours Truly, J. L. GRIBBLE.
Macomb, Illinois.

GENTLEMEN: With over fifteen years experience in building buggies, wagons, &c., I do not hesitate in saying your buggies and carriages are strictly first-class in workmanship, material and proportions, filling a long-felt want for a reliable article that can be sold at a price lower than any ordinary manufacturer can produce and sell the same quality of Work at Yours, etc. I. S. KRICK, Conneautville Pa.

GENTLEMEN: I have used your Brewster side bar buggies for four years, together with buggies that cost me $300 and $350, and your buggies were the first that went out, on account of being side-bar. They have not cost me $5 for repairs, and those I have sold of your make have given good satisfaction. I think that you make the cheapest and best road wagons that are made in the United States for the money. Respectfully, F. H. HAMLIN, Lawrence Kansas.

DEAR SIRS: We have been using your buggies for the last four or five years. They have given entire satisfaction. I think they are the best buggies made for the money.
W. B. GRIMES & CO., Liverymen Whitehall Illinois.

GENTLEMEN: We have been handling your work for two seasons, and have in every instance found your buggies first class. We never have had one of your jobs returned to us for repairs; neither have we had a single complaint on accoun of work not being perfectly satisfactory. Very Respectfully, H. P. BUCKLEY & CO., Springfield, Illinois.

GENTLEMEN. I have no hesitancy in saying that the buggies manufactured by the Columbus Buggy Company are the best work for the price I have any knowledge of. In not a single instance has there been any dissatisfaction on the part of any one of my customers.
FRANK L HALL.
Owensboro, Ky.

DEAR SIRS: For the past two years we have used your buggies side by side with other makes, in both our stables, and are perfectly satisfied with the strength, durability and workmanship compared with others. As fast as our stock in livery is used up we shall replace them with your manufacture, knowing from experience, that it is the best we can do. Respectfully,
SWEET & FOLLANSBEE,
Quincy Illinois.

For sale by dealers everywhere.

Any of our readers who will enclose two 3-cent stamps in a letter to the Columbus Buggy Co., Columbus O., will receive in return a beautiful engraving in colors, representing an Australian scene and their manner of travelling in that country with ostriches as a motor. —A mooley cow has no horns. It is different from a man in this respect—the more "horns" he has the mulier he becomes.

—A lot of cows had a little hallow eve in Hank Wolf's cabbage patch. Johnny Slifer's cow was captain of the company.

—The Catholic fair is giving encouragement to those who shouldered the responsibility. We are glad to note their success.

—Edward Orr and family, of Corunna, accompanied by Mrs. T. B. Hall, of Pioneer, Ohio, were visiting at this place last week.

—Our old friend Peter Wirick, of Jackson, is having quite a run of matrimonial business, as will be seen by notices elsewhere.

—The rain prevented quite a number from attending Mr. Gray's speech. The audience was large, however, and all listened attentively.

—The best reason yet advanced for having Monday washing day, the next day after Sunday, is because cleanliness is next to godliness.

—Remember the speeches by Mr. Myers candidate for secretary of state. Garrett, Oct. 19, and Waterloo, Oct. 24. Give them a good turn out.

—J. C. Henry is now manufacturing his own baking powder. By putting it up himself, he knows that he is giving his customers a pure article.

—W. R. Myers will address the people at Waterloo, the 24th inst. He is said to be an eloquent orator and we bespeak for him a good audience.

—The Wabash Plain Dealer last week enjoyed a serenade by a band at Marion, the county seat of Grant county, by means of the telephone.

—Frank Myers, now driving wells in Ohio, was home over Sunday. He had to Potter back to the land of Buckeyes and democratic majorities Tuesday.

—From the sanctum window our eye catches the form of Johnny Robbins on the street this week. We wish Johnny could have been here at the "reunion."

—Recorder Boland and family spent Sunday last at Kendallville. By the way Mike is being recognized as quite a shrewd worker in the ranks of democracy.

—Mrs. A. N. Seymour, of Reading, Michigan, will preach at Coleman's school house, seven miles east of Auburn, next Sunday morning at half past ten o'clock.

Victims to constipation and its untold miseries can keep in good condition, by a moderate use of Ayer's pills,—the surest and safest and most reliable cathartic.

—As Mr. Moody had made other engagements that cannot well be set aside, his place in the course of addresses at the Catholic fair will be filled by A. J. Little Esq.

—Attention is called to the advertisement of Dr. E. S. LaRue, M. D. The Dr. will be located at the Auburn House for two weeks where the afflicted can consult him.

—The brick masons will finish their part of the contract on the wagon manufactory building this week, and the carpenters will soon complete and enclose the structure.

—Old Mrs. Day, mother of Mrs. R. M. Lockhart, died at the home of the latter in Waterloo, Monday evening Oct. 16, at 7 p. m. Her obituary will appear next week.

—Doc. Ryan came home Saturday and, no doubt, great anticipations rested in that child's mind. "He went to the river, but he could'nt get across"—the bridge was under repair.

—Dr. Allen may have a home in the sunny south, a thrifty orange orchard and enjoy the morning song of the mocking bird, yet there is one thing he cannot have and that is a vote this fall.

—Mrs. A. J. Little and her grandson Tracy, are spending the week in Toledo. Mrs. L. will select a fall and winter stock of millinery goods, and those not yet supplied should wait her return.

—We acknowledge a pleasant call from Fred. Knox, of Kansas City, and Archie McIntyre, of Sedan. They are "fly" young fellows to chat with and the invitation to "call again" is always good.

—Hon. T. A. Hendricks will speak at Kendallville the 23 inst. Democrats in the northwest part of the county should make it a point to hear Mr. Hendricks discuss the issues of to-day on this occasion.

—Capt. W. R. Myers will deliver a political speech at Waterloo, to-day. We hope the friends of democracy at our neighboring town will see that the Captain has a cordial greeting and a large attendance.

—Last Thursday morning Sheriff Leas took Hazzard to Angola, where he was taken on a change of venue. Hazzard has several cases against him there, and will be held until they can be disposed of.

Mr. Wm. Bassett, farmer, South Bend, St. Joseph's Co., used Brown's Iron Bitters successfully for inflamed eyes.

MARRIED.—At the U. B. parsonage, by Rev. W. O. Butler, Oct. 15, 1882, Mr. Wm. H. Atwood, of Allen county, Ind., to Miss Alice, O. Goodwin, of Waterloo.

—Do not forget the County Institute that commences at Waterloo, on Monday, November 13. We hope to see the teachers and all friends of our common schools present.

—Col. Watson, at the Wabash elevators, is getting to be an extensive dealer in blooded horses. Aside from his famous Morgan pacer he has two trotters and one runner. Its wonderful how—they—fly.

—The new style of dress worn by the young ladies is a pitable sight to gaze upon. It looks as though the dress maker had ran out of material and the retail dealers could'nt get any more of the same shade.

—The Ed. F. Davis Jubilee company gave a performance hear last night that pleased everybody. Elwood Bishop and Miss Sarah Cousins are singers of more than ordinary note. They sing at Butler to-night.

—The Catholic fair is progressing finely. The voting for the different favorites has begun and considerable interest is manifested. Many fine articles are on exhibition and for sale. Supper every evening for all who wish.

—There was quite a wreck at the Junction Saturday evening. A Wabash engine was switching cars, and by some means ran into some on the B. & O. As a result, the old building on the west side of the track is a bad looking wreck.

—Taking things as they come is not so very distressing. It is parting with them as they go that cuts one to the soul, consequently we must sympathize with republican candidates as they go home after the votes are counted out.

—The many friends of John A. Mervin, residing in this county, will feel interested to know that he has sold out his home at Columbus Grove, Ohio, and located at Shenandoah, Page Co., Iowa, where he expects to make his future home.

—A large amount of grain was handled at the Wabash elevators this week. We are informed by E. Watson, esq., that grain will not advance in price for some time. New corn will start in at 45 cents, and oats hold at 25 cents during the winter.

—A Mr. Evans will open a meat market in the room vacated by Braun. Auburn will have three shops and Sam. Weaver's "calf house" on wheels to support. This competition in trade should have a tendancy to reduce the price somewhat.

—At the re-union last week a permanent organization was completed by the election of officers for the coming year. Col. Humphreys was made president, Genl. Blair, of Waterloo, vice president; Tom. Sullivan, treasurer, and F. F. Boltz, secretary.

—A correspondent asks: "What time of year do the days begin to shorten?" When you have a note in bank. This is the great annihilator of time. The days are crowded together in thin layers and the nights are like a smear from a blacking brush.

DIED.—Near Corunna, Ind., after a lingering illness, at the residence of Wm. Gregg, Oct. 11, 1882, Mr. Wm. H. Walleck, aged 44 years, 7 months and 6 days. The funeral was largely attended, at the U. B. church in Corunna, last sabbath morning.

—The old Long hotel, one of the pioneer hash houses of this place, will leave its land mark on rollers for another location. It has been infested by everything from the small-pox down and no doubt all are glad to see this eye-sore take its departure.

—The new bridge that is to span Cedar creek, on Seventh street, is to have a double track. A large amount of money has been expended on that old "culvert" during the last few years and we are glad to learn that a substantial structure is to take its place.

MARRIED.—In Auburn, Oct. 5, 1882, by Peter Wirick, J. P., Mr. Martin White to Miss Eva Keller, both of Concord township; and on the same day, by the same, at his residence in Jackson township, James Rickets to Miss Ann Wasson, both of Concord township.

—Among those present at the reunion last week, was our old-time friend, David Bowman, of Etna, Whitley county, who was a member of Company K of the 88th. This company was raised in Whitley county, and twenty of the survivors were present at the reunion.

—D. D. Moody is alive to the interests of the party he represents. His speeches are well attended and highly spoken of and each day he makes new friends and adds new recruits to the list of democratic reformers. Representive Moody sounds well, and he'll get there too easy, Eligh.

MARRIED:—at the residence of the bride's parents in Union township, Oct. 10, 82, by W. L. Meese, Thomas F. Hurley and Jennie Arthur both of Hannibal, Mo. The bride and groom will, we learn, soon return to their western home, and we wish them a happy journey and a bright future.

—Our wood subscribers are hereby reminded that about this time of the year we begin to use fuel, and as we have the promise of about five hundred loads we thought there might be a small chance of getting one or two out of this number by calling attention to the fact.

—Ochs has moved the clothing department of his store into the room next to the postoffice. Enos Kuhlman and T. C. Ford are in charge of this part. The old stand will be headquarters for dry goods, and general merchandise, and looks as full as ever. In fact, both rooms are full, and full of business.

—The horse and buggy that was stolen from Allen's livery barn three weeks since was found in Michigan. The thief had disposed of it to a farmer, who mortgaged his land to get the money, for over two hundred dollars. It was the best single rig Buck had and if he had not found it the loss would have been great to him.

—John Henderson has made another valuable addition to his already fine collection of farm stock. This time it is eight head of fine Merino sheep. He bought them of Albert Whitford, of Kendallville. They are the finest in that flock, and Mr. Henderson paid for them the highest price given by anyone at the recent sale of Mr. Whitford's splendid stock.

—Two street venders were selling tooth powder and perfume on the street corner Saturday evening. A few slight-of-hand tricks amused the crowd, but the most interesting feature was for the fellow to call himself professor and be detected in about every other attempt to deceive the eye and please the heart. What a tremendous amount of gall must be required.

—The dance last Thursday evening passed off in the usual manner, yet there seems to a lack of energy and former enterprise upon the part of the young men, some of them being indifferent about its success or failure. Occasions of this kind make pleasant enjoyment in long winter evenings and the COURIER would like to have the young people keep the amusement going. Have fun while you're young.

—Rev. Matthews will no longer officiate as minister at the Presbyterian church. During the past year he attended closely to his duties as leader of the church and did everything to increase the interests and benefit the members of that organization. The COURIER wishes him a prosperous ending wherever he may locate, and we shall always remember his energy, enterprise and kind acts while among us.

—We had the pleasure this week of receiving a call from Willard Pepple and his brother-in-law, Mr. T. F. Hurley, of Hannibal, Mo. Willard has been trying his fortune in the west, and expects to return their soon. Mr. Hurley is a conductor on the Missouri Pacific railroad we believe, and is a thrifty, wide-a-wake young man. It is such young men as these that give the great west its unexampled prosperity.

—The day for electing a straight democratic ticket is drawing near and we want to see every man who is entitled to a vote get up early in the morning and work with the force of a pile-driver until the poles closes. We're sure to make a clean sweep, and how well the republicans know it. Let all democrats vote together and we will wager our Sunday boots that each candidate will slide into office as easy as though he was greased.

—James Baxter, deputy clerk, who has been absent at St. Louis, Mich., for a few weeks, has returned. He has been for some time afflicted with rheumatism, and went there for the benefit of the magnetic baths of that place. He comes home greatly relieved and speaks very favorably of the efficiency of the springs in curing diseases of this kind. He thinks they deserve a greater patronage, and will some day become famous.

—Our reporter has been reliably informed that Rev. Daneils delivered a republican speech from the pulpit of the M. E. church last Sunday morning. He took his text from the proposed amendments and urged his congregation to vote for the republican party. Old gentlemen whose locks have turned white and limbs are feeble assert that this is the first time during their long period of years that they have ever listened to a political oration on a sabbath day.

—Gib. Bell, of Newville, drove an iron-gray, spirited horse, rigged out with a new nickel-plate harness to this place Monday. John Harvey, of Cedar Creek, came over the same day with a dark bay "pelter" and the one-half of a double plow harness, kept together by the use of rope and strings. When Gib. started home he took Harvey's horse and drove it to Newville and did not notice the change until the boys began to make sport of his horse trade. Now one would readily infer that Auburn whiskey had a hand in the transaction, but it did not. Mr. Bell is a strictly temperance man, and we cannot account for the mistake.

Insanity is in almost all cases the outgrowth of an overwrought brain. Dr. E. C. West's Nerve and Brain Treatment removes the cause and effects a cure. Sold at F. E. Davenport's.

—J. C. Henry has just finished putting his house in order—we mean his model drug store. Everything is in the neatest possible condition and tastily arranged. The first floor of the drug store is, of course, for his retail business, but on the second floor may be found a general stock of goods of all descriptions, in the notions line, for his now extensive wholesale business.

HUDSON, MD., Oct. 13, 1882.

ED. COURIER:—Miss Lottie Heckathorn, daughter of David Heckathorn, met with a very serious accident on Friday morning, Oct. 13, in passing through her father's sawmill. By accident her right hand came in contact with the revolving saw. She loses the middle finger, and the other fingers are badly wounded. T. Ray Morrison, M. D., of Hudson, has the case in charge and thinks that he can save the rest of the fingers. T. R. M.

—This item from the Chicago Inter-Ocean speaks the truth about as forceably as it could be written:

"A live newspaper will do more good in a single week in any congressional district, than any dozen car-loads of documents, not one in ten of which is ever read."

Thousands of dollars are squandered every election in this manner, where, if the assessment money handled by local committees, was given to their home paper and not trifled away in campaign documents the result would be much more beneficial. Not only this, but it would encourage the editor, and have him believe that his efforts to keep afloat the principles he sustains are appreciated by his party.

Notice to Taxpayers.

The time for the payment of the November installment of taxes, expires by law on the first Monday in November. This will be the 6th of that month. It is hoped that all will take due notice of the time and arrange so as to meet their taxes and save trouble and expense.

42-2t. L. J. MILLER, Treas.

Post Mortem.

Mr. John L. Houser died at Cedar Creek on Friday night last(13 inst.) after having had convulsions for about thirty-six hours. An examination of the body showed that death was caused by a fibrinous clot beginning in the heart and reaching into the large arteries for a distance of about seven inches. The clot was white and tough and of the variety called by some writers on physology, "vegetations or polypi." The presence of this clot obstructing the free flow of blood through the arteries, called for increased action of the heart and caused its enlargement. Finally the clot, breaking loose, plugged up the vessels and caused convulsions ending in death. All the other organs of the body were healthy except that the liver was somewhat enlarged. In our opinion the conditions named were sufficient to account for all the symptoms observed before death. Drs. A. A. Kester, D. B. Rother, T. C. Sargent, J. F. Thomson, J. Salmon and S. M. Sherman.

The Wheelman

is the name of a new magazine devoted to the interests of bicyclers and those interested in bicycles. It is an illustrated magazine of the size and something of the style of the Century. It is wide-a-wake, lively and original. It has struck out into a new field and on a new plan. The articles and illustrations are first-class, and are of interest to lovers of the bicycle. The first number is just out, and a copy should be in the hands of every friend of the bicycle. Address:

THE UNBIDDEN GUEST.

Within my home that empty seemed, I sat
And prayed for greater blessings. All
That was mine own seemed poor and mean and small;
And I cried out rebelliously for that

I had not, saying if great gifts of gold
Were only mine, journeys to far-off lands,
Were also mine, with rest for burdened hands;
If love, the love I craved would come and fold

Its arms around me: then would joy abide
With me forever; peace would come and [illegible]
And life would round out from this narrowness
Into a fullness new and sweet and wide.

And so I fretted 'gainst my simple lot,
And so I prayed for fairer, broader ways,
Making a burden of the very days,
In mad regret for that which I had not.

And then one came unto my humble door
And asked to enter. "Art thou love?" I cried,
"Or wealth, or fame? Else shalt thou be denied."
She answered, "Nay, my child; but I am more.

"Open to me, I pray; make me thy guest,
And thou shalt find, although no gift of gold,
Or fame, or love within my hand I hold,
That with my coming cometh all the best

"That thou hast longed for." Fair, though grave, her face, [illegible] was her voice, and in her steadfast eyes
I saw the look at once both true and wise.
My heart was sore, and so, with tardy grace,

I bade her enter. How transfigured
Seemed now the faithful love that at my feet
So long had lain unprized! How wide and sweet
Shone the small paths wherein I had been led.

Duty grew beautiful; with calm consent
I saw the distant wealth of land or sea.
But all fair things seemed given unto me
The hour I clasped the hand of dear Content.

THE GOVERNOR'S STORY.

We were very poor, said the governor, my mother and I. We lived in a little cabin on Gen. Linton's farm, and saw a hard time. My father had died when I was 16 years old, leaving us nothing, but an honest reputation, and, although I was stout and hearty, my wages were very low, and I had to toil late and early to provide the necessaries of life. But I suppose I would have been happy and contented enough; that is, as much as we unsatisfied mortals usually are, if it hadn't been for a woman. I don't know why it was that Helen Linton made such an impression on me, for she had by no means those great and noble qualities by which men as a general thing are attracted toward the opposite sex. On the contrary, she was proud, arrogant and overbearing, and I was confident if she thought of me at all, it was with feelings of contempt and disdain alone.

Not on account of my personal appearance, it is true, for though I was rough and uncultivated, and my hands were hard with excessive toil, and my face browned by exposure to the sun, still I had wonderful strength and great agility, and my hair and eyes were as dark as midnight, and many said that I was handsome. But I was poor and she was wealthy. I was Gen. Linton's hired hand and she was Gen. Linton's daughter, and it was the old, old story. It must have been her bewildering beauty that drew me more and more toward her, for she was a queenly-looking girl, with flashing eyes and magnificent dark-brown hair, and a form tall, and majestic, and stately. But, however it might have been, I am certain of one thing, and that is, that I learned to love her with a maddening, painful, consuming passion that seemed about to devour my whole being. I tried very hard to smother it and to drive her image from my heart. I knew I might as well think of plucking down the moon or the stars as to have dared to aspire to her hand.

But it was all of no avail; the more I struggled the more I became entangled. In the morning, noon and night there was but one face that I saw, and but one voice that I heard, and that was the face and the voice of Helen Linton. What was worst of all, to me, in some way she discovered my secret. How I can hardly tell. They say murder will out, and the same most assuredly can be said about love. I had never spoken about it to any one, not even my mother, and as to Helen, I had scarcely ever spoken to her on any subject. It is true that sometimes she would give me instructions in regard to the flower-garden, which Gen. Linton had selected me to manage, having as he said, more opinion of my taste in such matters than any of the rest of his workmen, but she never condescended further. I worshipped her like a star from afar off, and knew the distance between us to be as wide and as impassable.

One day she came into the garden when I was at work there, and, impelled by some unknown power, as it were, I gathered and presented to her a choice bouquet of flowers; and whether it was from my guilty looks that she then discovered all, and determined to check me in the beginning, or whether she had already probed to the depths of my heart and thought I was presumptuous, I know not, but certain it is that she never spoke to me after that. She had been in the habit of giving me a nod of recognition whenever she met me before this, but after this she passed me by without even a glance, disdain within her haughty eye and contempt upon her scornful lip. You may know that my life was as wretched as it could well be. I used to sit down by the fire in our little cabin, after my hard day's work was done, and curse my wretched fate, and call God unjust in what I considered the distinctions he made in the human race, but I little knew then what the sequel would be.

Crowds of company, gay ladies and gentlemen, came every summer from the city to spend the season at Linton hall, and it so happened that when summer came among the rest a young gentleman named Arthur St. John. He was reported to be wealthy, and handsome he certainly was, and it was not very long before he commenced paying devoted attention to Gen. Linton's daughter; and it was easy enough to see that she was as infatuated as he was. They used to ride by our little cottage on the bright summer evenings on the Forest road, as it was called, on their prancing horses, he bending fondly above her, whispering words of love and tenderness, and she listening to them with a flush on her cheek and a smile upon her lip. I remember one evening that I stood watching them as they rode down from the wild glen, bathed in the golden halo that the gorgeous fires of sunset threw upon the scene, while the summer zephyr, loaded with the perfume of wild flowers blew back her massive hair from her queenly brow, until the scene seemed to me celestial, and she an inhabitant of celestial regions. Just then she caught sight of me, as I looked at her almost entranced, and spoke something in a low tone to her companion. What it was I never knew, but they both looked at me an instant, and then the air rang with their laughter, and I heard him say something about presumption and impudence, and I guessed what it was. It was hard to be thus tortured simply for no other reason than because I had a heart and could not control its impulses, and when I look back on that time it seems to me like some terrible dream.

Misfortunes, they say, never come singly, and they always came, too, when we least expected them. My mother suddenly sickened and died, and I was thus left alone a wretched outcast on the earth. As I stood over her grave it seemed to me that I had buried every hope. I determined to leave the spot where I had seen so much misery. I cared very little where I went. Anywhere far away from there. Gen. Linton paid me what little he owed me, and I struck out for the west. Railroads and steamboats were not half as numerous then as they are now, and even if they had been, I was too poor to avail myself of their advantages. I walked, therefore, many a weary mile, until after several days of travel I found myself at the outskirts of a growing city. Here I stopped because I thought I had gone far enough, and for the best of all reasons, because my money had given out. I had to do something. A large mansion with beautiful grounds stood before me. I applied to the owner for labor. He said he was very much in need of a gardener, but did not like to employ me without reference.

After hesitating for a while, however, he concluded to engage me for a month, and if he liked me he would then engage me permanently, he said. I found out in a short time that he was a lawyer of extensive practice, immensely wealthy, and lived at his ease. I followed out the rule I had adopted through life, to be honest and industrious under all circumstances, and at the end of the month my employer, whose name was Parker, sent for me, he said, to pay me my month's wages. He then surprised me by asking me if I could read and write. I told him I could, thanks to indefatigable energy and perseverance at the little cabin on Gen. Linton's farm, during the long winter evenings when the labors of the day were over, I had acquired the rudiments of a first rate English education. My employer then told me that during the past month he had observed me closely, and that he believed me to be an honest man. "I will tell you something more," said he, "that I have discovered. You are a young man of extraordinary intelligence Gardening is not your proper avocation. I am doing an extensive practice of the law, and I need some one to stay in my office. I know of no one who is better suited than you. With your application and industry, within one year from now you may be admitted to the bar. You must consent to become my student."

I didn't know exactly how it was, but suddenly Judge Parker and the table seemed to become inverted, and the room went whirling around and around, and then we all seemed flying off through the air, like Aldain's castle, and the next thing I knew I was sobbing, with my head upon the table.

He didn't say anything until I had regained my composure, and then I told him all. What a hard time I had had through life, and how this had been the only light that had ever shown on my dark pathway. Tears sprang into the old man's eyes as I told him, but he said I must never despair, and he was certain I would come out victorious.

I went into Judge Parker's office, and I studied hard, and at the end of the year, as he predicted, I obtained my license to practice law. He then asked me what I intended doing. I told him that I intended to go off to some rising place and grow up with it, "and if I ever do anything," said I, "remember that you are the man who made me."

He said that I should do no such thing. He was getting old, he said, and was unable to attend properly to a great deal of his business, and he wanted me to stay and assist him. "You must be my partner," said he, with a share of the profits."

"Again the room seemed turning around and around, but this time I managed to retain my feelings and only said:

"May Heaven thank you for I can't.'

Well, it wasn't long before the people seemed to take an interest in me and they elected me to the state legislature, and then, after awhile, to congress, and I always continued in the same honest, industrious course until they had made me their governor.

I had heard but very little in all that time from Linton hall. I had heard that Gen. Linton had died and Arthur St. John and Helen had married, and that the old place had been sold, and that was all.

As for my part, I was still a bachelor Many a time, amid the thunders of a applause that had surrounded me, fair hands had thrown me beautiful flowers, and ruby lips had smiled, and bright eyes had glistened when I was near; but I thought of cold, cruel, haughty Ellen Linton, and had judged them all alike and had turned away.

One winter evening, shortly after I had been elected governor, when the wind was howling outside and I was enjoying the comforts of my room within and wondering if any houseless wretch were out in that storm, to my great astonishment the servent ushered in a lady. It was something unusual; but I spoke to her as politely as I could, and offered her a seat, when the light fell upon her features, and, notwithstanding the sunken eye and hollow cheeks, to my consternation I recognized the face of Helen Linton.

To my relief, however, I found that she had failed to recognize me. No, she would as soon have looked for a form from the tomb as have looked for me at that place.

She had come, she said, on painful business. Her father had been a very wealthy man, and had left her a large property, but her husband had been very dissipated, and, having run through with it all, and finding the family in want, in an unlucky moment had committed a forgery, for which he had been tried and found guilty, and she had come to me for his pardon. She told me all this amid sobs and tears, and finally concluded by prostrating herself at my feet.

Great God! This woman who once thought me not good enough to wipe her shoes upon kneeling and groveling at my feet!

I begged her to raise and be seated, and I then inquired her father's name. She said it was John Linton. I then asked her if she remembered the old widow and her son, that once lived in the cabin on the Forest road, near Linton hall.

She replied, with some surprise, that she did. Then I stood up.

"That boy," said I, "wretched, homeless outcast that he once was, now stands before you."

She turned ashen white, arose and staggered toward the door. I told her to stop, I had something to say to her.

"Let me go," said she; "I showed no mercy to you, and I expect none."

Then my heart was touched.

"Mrs. St. John," I said, "I will pardon your husband, but on one condition only."

She eagerly asked me to name it.

"It is this," said I, "that you will teach your children the folly and the evil consequences of pride; that you will guard them against its wicked and nefarious influences through life, and that your husband will likewise reclaim and lead a different life."

She readily assented to my requirements, and in a few moments more she was on her way home, bearing the joyful tidings to her little children.

The lesson that I taught her I hope may be a benefit to them through life.

She and her husband moved to a distant city, where he reformed and became a useful and respectable citizen, and often speaks of me, I understand, with profound gratitude.

I am a bachelor yet, and there is but one woman to whose memory I ever drop a tear. And that is to the memory of my mother.

A correspondent at Osterville, Mass., writes us: I suppose nearly every village on the New England coast has its traditional story connected with the exploits of the far-famed Captain Kidd, but the one to which universal credit is given, in the small, secluded place in which I am now staying, may be new to some of your readers. It was told us by an old sea captain, one beautiful afternoon just toward dusk (which enhanced the effect of the tale), to while away part of an hour during which the wind left our little bark as "idle as a painted ship upon a painted ocean." It seems, so the legend runs, that Captain Kidd, after an unusually successful expedition, entered the bay on the shores of which this village stands, in search of a safe repository for his ill-gotten gains. He selected a sheltered spot on an island in its center, and to guard against its ever being disturbed, he killed a village maiden named "Hannah," and left her spirit to watch over the place till his return. Years passed, and in all human probability Kidd had been many years dead, and there lay the treasure unclaimed, and to the somewhat indolent villagers it seemed a shame to miss the chance of acquiring wealth in such a rapid manner; so two of the most daring men started, at midnight, of course, and rowed in a light skiff to the fated spot, taking with them rods of the witch hasel, which as everyone knows, are unfailing indicators of the resting place of any hidden treasure. They landed and slowly advanced inland, watching anxiously for the bending of their wands to show the spot where their hopes of wealth lay. At length the witch hasel quivered, waved wildly round (there was no breeze), and finally droppped slowly, till it nearly touched the ground.

The men seized their tools and eagerly sat to work. Soon a deep pit yawned before them, and their strength was beginning to fail, when a dull metallic sound greeted their ears, and roused them to redoubled activity. They had struck something hard, and soon a heavy iron chest was exposed to view. It had two strong rings in the top, and these the men firmly grasped—when at once there arose on the night the fearful scream of a woman! The chest was slowly drawn down into the earth, nearly pulling the men with it. On looking around they beheld themselves the center of a circle round which were moving white animals of every description, prancing and uttering the various cries of their species. The terrified men fled to the boat, where a new horror awaited them. When they tried to pull off, behold, "Hannah" at the stern, robed in white, her hair blowing in the wind and her eyes gleaming with unnatural light, holding the boat fast to the shore. Their fear was great, but one, happily remembering what name was used to exorcise evil spirits, cried in a loud voice, "Hannah, in the name of the living God, let go!" and she threw up her hands, shrank back and slowly vanished from their sight, and their boat was free. Having been once disturbed, "Hannah" can never rest, and any time passing the island at midnight you can hear her piercing cries. Sceptical "city people" say it is only the owls, but I have it on the authority of the "oldest inhabitant" that it is none other than "Hannah Screechem."

A facetious journalist, wishing to 'take a rise" out of Leon Gozlan, inserted the following paragraph among the odds and ends of his paper: "M. Leon Gozlan was at one time a sailor, and while serving on board a brig not only caused the crew to mutiny, but also killed the captain." In the very next number of the journal appeared a letter, addressed to the editor by the author of the "Notaire de Chantilly." It ran thus: "Monsieur: You say that I have been a sailor, which is quite true; that I caused the crew of a brig to mutiny, and then killed the captian, which is also perfectly correct. But you forgot to add a detail which may particularly interest your readers; after killing the captain I ate him! Leon Gozlan."

LIFE IN JAPAN.

Queer Costumes and Customs—How the Japanese Live, and Where.

The umbrella is an institution in Japan. Whether it owes its invention to this people or not, they avail themselves largely of its use. The Japanese umbrella is a sensible article in its amplitude and lightness, being made of paper and bamboo. When under one of them a man is nearly as safe as if he was under a shed, so far as the falling rain is in question, and the shade it affords from the sun is "like unto that of a great rock in a weary land." When folded, however, it possesses a volume that is rather unwieldy and inartistic in appearance. The average Japanese is seldom seen without his umbrella. It is an indispensable article of comfort, and rain or shine he places himself under its protection. The garment most commonly worn is suited for all the needs of warmth or coolness. It is made with wide, flowing square sleeves, and is wrapper-shaped, open in front from top to bottom, and confined to the waist by a long band wound round the body a number of times. It is a very simple outfit. Comfort cannot exact anything more simple. In the cold season these garments are duplicated by the addition of wadded articles of the same character. The great multitude wear for the headgear simply a piece of blue cloth tied about the temples, though the straw hat is fast coming into use with many. Of course there are many who have adopted the European styles of costume thoughout from head to foot. The native dress of the Japanese is not a costly one. One of the garments in use in Sumerm will cost about $1.50, if made of cotton; more, of course, if of silk.

A Japanese horse is so cheaply obtained, and the cost of keeping is so insignificant, that it is a fashion here to keep a pony and trap for individual family use. One of the indispensable auxiliaries of an outfit of the pony and trap is a "betto.' A "betto" is hostler and outrider, or, rather, he is an outrunner, as his place has been determined by usage to be near the head of the team. These fellows run like racers, and do away with the necessity of hitching posts and fastening gear; your "betto" is sure to be even with his team when the lines are slackened and the occupant ready to alight. It is seldom that a gentleman takes the lines when there are ladies in the vehicle. Generally the ladies drive without male companions, and many of them have developed considerable ability in handling the lines. The most inexpensive mode of locomotion for any one residing here is to join the jin-rikisha brigade. One of these comfortable establishmenes, with a gas-top attachment for protection again rain, can be purchased for about $25. A man can be hired for about $9 a month to be constantly on hand for propelling purposes, and he will travel about as far in a day as the average equine stock of the country. He requires no "betto" or grooming; takes care of himself and the rikisha; comes in the morning, and is at your comand as long as needed. The jin-rikisha is an indispensable affair wherever he is introduced, and there are many thousands of them in Japan.

There are no more cleanly people in the world than the most indigent Japanese. If it is not a cardinal requirement of their religion to bathe often, it is a custom established as firmly as if ordained by holy canon, and their apartments are kept scrupulously clean. The staple articles of food are to be had at very small cost. The man or woman who earns 15 or 20 cents a day can procure all the food necessary for a family of three for not more than 10 cents. The problem of cheap living is solved here, and there are none to be seen who wear the pinched look of hunger. Comparatively speaking, the man who earns $1.50 a day in California, and he can put aside a larger proportion of it for the future than the Californian can. As everything is comparative, so long as the Japanese laborer is satisfied with his food and clothing, he is the happier of the two. The Japanese will not endure the the filthy ways of Chinese living, but he can and does live as cheaply as the Chinaman. The Japanese, however, is not a conservative, and he soon contracts the ways and customs of the Western world, with all their expenses.

The mode of constructing the houses here, while causing the least outlay, is admirably adapted to the conditions of the climate A Japanese house is really a double affair. The most expense is put on the roof, which is of splendid heavy tile in all the towns and villages. On the isolated farm houses straw thatch is used more extensively. The roof is sustained by uprights framed into it, which have their foundations on the ground. The floor is generally about two feet above the ground, and is divided into rooms by paper partitions, which are in sections, and slide in grooves. They can, at pleasure, be entirely removed, leaving, if necessary, the entire area in one rooms. The sides of the building, or at least one or more, are also in sections, which slide in grooves, and are removed during the day, if required. Generally there is a space left for a passage way between the outside and the inner partitions forming the rooms, so that in Winter the rooms inclosed only by paper screens are made warm and comfortable by the protection of the outer shell when slid into position, while in Summer the facility with which all partitions are removed insures good ventilation. Very many of the houses are built with an interior court, devoted to ornamental shrubs and flowers, showing an admirable degree of esthetic taste in the people.

The Dress of a Society Man.

A New York letter writer describes the appearance of young Belmont, brother of the Congressman, who has just returned from Europe, "with an entirely new and absolutely correct wardrobe."

When I saw him he was coming around the corner of Twenty-eighth street into Fifth avenue, and the windows of the swell little Knickerbocker Club were alive with weak-looking faces, convulsively holding the single eye-glass, and gazing eagerly at the latest imported clothes. The young man (he is about 30) did not walk easily. He had on a pair of dead black shoes, with untanned leather tops. They were decorated by fancy stripes along the side of the foot and over the toe, and were so absurdly narrow that they looked like deformed feet, and rendered the movements of the young man far from graceful, though he struggled hard to preserve appearances. His legs were covered by a pair of trousers that were simply amazing, so tight they were cut. It would be almost impossible to sit down without splitting them across the knee, as far as can be judged from appearances. They were as tight as calskin all the way down, fitting around the ankles as snugly as a stocking. This remarkable expose of a man's developments is not advisable when his legs are not up to the standard. The trousers in question were a very light green with dark stripes. Above them was a vest that stretched from the chin to a line just even with the hip bones, and was cut straight across. The vest was of light material and looked odd, it was so extremely short. The cutaway coat was bottle green, and fitted like a jersey. It was indeed a trial of the tailor's art in one sense, but it is far too tight to be becoming. The sleeves were nearly as tight as the trousers, and the coat tails were very longhanging as far down behind as the knee. He wore a collar that lapped over in front, and was certainly higher than any other collar I ever saw in America. It forced his chin up in the air, and caused the sunlight to scintillate on his single glass. Around the neck was a green scarf with a hound's head in diamonds for a pin. Above it all was one of the huge English Derby hats with a great curling brim and heavy crown. He wore yellow gloves, and carried a stick with a twisted handle by its lower end, so that the handle dropped nearly to his feet. The vacant stare completed the effect, and he limped along while ideal sketch but a faithful picture of a leading society man in New York in the year of our Lord 1882.

Religious Intelligence.

The total membership of the Wesleyan Methodists of Great Britain is officially given as 393 754. The Church has on its roll 1 549 prechers.

There has been a revival in Jaffra College, Ceylon, and fifty of the one hundred and twenty-three students renounced Paganism for Christianity.

The Young Men's Christian Association of Brooklyn issues a little paper called the Weekly Bulletin, giving account of the work done during the week.

It is proposed to erect a memorial Church to Daniel O'Connell in Cabirciveen, Kerry, the native parish of the Liberator. Cardinal McCabe indorses the movement.

The Young Men's Christian Association of Colorado recently held a session in Denver, at which it was stated that the association was in a flourishing condition through-out the state.

Now the vexed question is whether John Bunyan was descended from Scotchmen, Italians, or Gypsies. It is claimed that the first Bunyan in the British Islands was an Italian mason who came to work on Melrose Abbey. In the Melrose Abbey the oldest tombstone has on it the name of Bunyan.

It was a warm summer night, and some of the congregation in the little Church were slumbering languidly, except one man who snored in manner not at all languid. The preacher observing this, left his notes, and said to one of the deacons in the front row: "Will you please ask the brother to stop snoring, or he will keep the other brethren awake." The rest of the sermon was listened to.

The project of raising a million dollars in the Protestant Episcopal Church as a "centennial thank off ring" has not been given up although it has languished in a somewhat discouraging sort of a way. During October special collections and subscriptions are asked for in this behalf. The plan is to have the fund invested and its income spent in giving or lending money to aid feeble Churches to build.

A convention of the colored clergymen of Maryland, irrespective of denomination, was held last week in Baltimore. The object of the gathering, which was large, was to carefully consider the present condition of the colored race in Maryland, religiously, morally, educationally and financially, and devise ways and means to better the present status of the race along every line of duty, through all the avenues of life.

In Boston a confectioner has been fined ten dollars for sending ice cream to his customers on Sunday that they might have it for dinner. The Court which inflicted this fine decided that ice cream is not one of the necessaries of existence in such a sense as to warrant sending it out on Sunday. The old-time practice among the Puritans of Boston and its vicinity was to have cold dinners on Sunday. The absence of hot cookery on the Day of Rest was considered the essence of household godliness. The degenerate sons of these staid old sires have introduced the modern luxries of hot Sunday dinners, ice cream being the only really cold thing on the table to remind them of early days. It will be a sad hardship for many a family if this frigid confection is legally torn away from the Sunday dinner table.

The occasional introduction of an anecdote into a sermon for the purpose of needed illustration is perfectly legitimate. But everyone who has any respect for the true object of preaching and the dignity of the pulpit, and any love for real oratory on the noblest of subjects, must protest against making the sermon a mere medley of stories, humorous, tragic and pathetic, which characterizes the preaching of so many of the "popular preachers" of the day. However attractive it may be, and however effective in "drawing crowds" who are at loss for other entertainment on Sunday, it is a fashion whose effects are only pernicious. It insults the more refined and intelligent part of a congregation. It caters to an unwholesome taste in the uncultured. It lowers the speaker himself, degrades his office and lofty subject, and in the end lessens, if it does not destroy, his highest usefulness as a preacher of the Gospel. If you can not interest your audience without becoming a mere story-teller, be sure that the interest you do arouse by becoming one is unhealthy, unworthy and harmful.

"You kin jess bet dey will come along with me, or I stay at home myself. Dar wouldn't be a chicken lef' in my coop if I was ter go to de Ward meetin' and luff dem nabors at home."

They were sitting together, and he was arduously thinking what to say, when finally he grew confident in his manner, and broke out thus: "In this land of noble achievement and undying glory, why is it that women do not come to the front, and climb the ladder of fame?" "I suppose," said she, tying knots in her handkerchief, "it's on account of their pullbacks."

Henry Ward Beecher's cow broke into the grounds of a neighbor at Peekskill and made havoc, which brought the neighbor to Mr. Beecher. "I wish you would keep your cow out of my shrubbery," exclaimed the irate neighbor, to which Mr. Beecher replied: "And I wish you would keep your shrubbery out of my cow; it spoils the milk." The two aforesaid neighbors are on speaking terms no more.

HOW TO MESMERIZE.

Means by Which the Subject Is Thrown Into a Trance.

A recent writer on the mysteries of mesmerism says: I lay it down as a matter which can be verified by all who are curious enough to try it, that the mesmeric conditions can be produced without the supposition of a subtle fluid, without the use of the cabalistic passes of the mesmerist, without the bouquet, the magnetic rod or any of the mysterious means employed by the professionals to heighten the effect of what would be too simple and too unattractive if performed straightforwardly. The directions are these: Place the person to be operated on naturally in a chair. With your left hand suspend by a string, about a foot from the eyes, some small object, a dark marble or a bright steel ball, or a diamond—it matters not what, though something bright is, perhaps, preferable. Direct the subject to fasten his eyes and concenter his attention on the subject. Slowly raise your left hand until the object is as far above the eyes of the patient as is compatible with his gazing steadily at it. Watch his eyes. At first you will see the pupils contract, but after a few seconds they will expand rapidly. When they are at the point of greatest expansion, move the first two fingers of your right hand from the object directly toward the eyes, the fingers being seperated, forklike, to embrace both eyes. As the fingers approach the eyes will close, and the subject will be unable to open them. After a quarter of a minute the subject will be thoughly under control, so that the operator may make him believe whatever he tells him. Left quiet, the subject will sink into a profound torpor, during which his ears may be pierced, his cheeks sewed to his nose, and even a finger cut off without pain. To arouse him—and this is an important step—wind, either from a hand-bellows or a fan, should be directed against his eyes, or else his eyes should be tickled with a feather. The rationale of the method is simple. The fixed stare of the subject fatigues his retinal nerves, and when the operator's fingers approach the eyelids close, as eyelids always do when the eyes are threatened. But the fatigue of the nerves has produced muscular fatigue as well, transient paralysis in the eyelids has resulted, and they cannot be opened. The eyelids being, then, closed, the delicate frontal nerves exhausted, and the mind made vacant by monotonous attention to one subject, the patient is in a condition to fall asleep—and he does fall asleep. He is now ready to dream. The only thing remaining to do is to make him dream. But how is this to be effected? Dreaming, as has long been determined, is the result of external suggestion. Dr. Gregory, to illustrate, having been thinking of Vesuvius, went to bed with a jug of hot water at his feet, and dreamed that he was climbing the sides of the burning mountain. Dr. Reid read a book on the Indians, put a blister to his head on retiring, and thought in his sleep that he was being scalped. Both the dreams, as all others are, were caused by suggestions offered externally. These suggestions, being received while the directing power, the common sense of the mind, was in abeyance owing to sleep, were interpreted very erroneously, yet, according to plain laws of association. The hot water, in the one case, called up the previous subject of thought, Vesuvius; the stinging blister, in the other, the equally stinging scalping knife. It is now easy to see how the sleeping subject may be made to accept as truth whatever he is told.

About Mr. and Mrs. Lincoln.

Cleveland Leader.

Mrs. Lincoln, nee Miss Mary Todd, was born in 1818, and was consequently 64 years of age at her death. She was the daughter of Hon. Robert S. Todd, of Lexington, Ky.; was well educated, and enjoyed all the advantages of the best society of her time. In her infancy she lost her mother, and her early education was entirely intrusted to the care of a French lady, who resided opposite the Henry Clay homestead. In 1839, not liking to live with a stepmother, she came to Springfield to reside with a married sister, Mrs. Ninian W. Edwards, who offered her all the hospitalities of their home. Ward H. Lamon, in his biography of Abraham Lincoln, says that when she came to Springfield she was just 21, 'gifted with rare talents, had a keen sense of the rediculous, a ready insight into the weaknesses of individual character, and a most firey and ungovernable temper. Her tongue and her pen were equally sharp. Highbred, proud, brilliant, witty, and with a will that bent every one else to her purpose, she took Mr. Lincoln captive the very moment she deemed it expedient to do so.'

Miss Todd was of aristocratic and distinguished parentage, able to lead any one she pleased into the highest circles of the society of her time. She saw in 'Honest Abe Lincoln,' as he was then popularly styled, a rising politician, and she and her friends were not long in concluding that it would be an auspicious marriage. For some time she was courted by Douglas as well as Lincoln, but she is said to have refused the 'Little Giant' on account of his bad morals. Being asked which one of them she intended to have, she answered: 'The one that has the best chance of being President.' A friend of hers had married an elderly gentleman, giving as her reason that he had 'lots of horses and gold.' Mary Todd heard this remark, and answered with some spirit, that she 'would rather marry a good man, a man of mind, with hope and bright prospects ahead for position and fame and power, than to marry all the horses, gold and homes in the world. From her first meeting with Lincoln he frequently sought her society; and would remain for hours listening to her conversation. Yet he was never, at least before his marriage, drawn toward her by a sentiment of love. All who were intimate with him at that time concur in the opinion that it was a 'policy match.' He subsequently met several ladies for whom it was believed he entertained a deep affection, but his love affairs were never destined to run smoothly. One day he wrote a letter to Miss Todd, boldly declaring that he did not love her, and requesting to be released from the engagement. A friend to whom he intrusted this letter refused to deliver it or to give it up to its author. Mr. Lincoln then called on Miss Todd and made to her the startling communication. They parted on terms of strong friendship, and were soon reconciled. The engagement was renewed, the day set for the wedding and all preparations made, even to the supper. Mr. Lincoln failed to meet his engagement, and the cause assigned was insanity. During an entire year, it is said, Mr. Lincoln was insane, his insanity growing out of his proposed marriage and counter attachment for a Miss Edwards. He did not attend the Legislature that year, but was taken to Kentucky by his friend Speed, who clung to him until he recovered. During that time Speed says he had to remove from him razors, knives, and all arms, for fear that he would commit suicide. Lincoln admitted that there were times when he contemplated self-destruction. About this time he wrote some gloomy lines entitled 'Suicide,' which were lost. He lamented that his life was useless to the world, and said it was his great desire to do something that would 'redound to the interest of his fellow-men.' This he finally did in a manner that has stamped his name in imperishable letters among the benefactors of mankind."

Advice to Telemachus.

R. J. Burdette.

A few years ago I went into the Norton nail mill at Ashland, Ky. I saw there a machine that could make nails. I looked at it, and admired it. I thought, and still think, that machine ought to go to Congress. All its talent and all its energies are directed to one point. It can make nails, and it can't do one solitary other thing under the sun. It never talks politics. It can't carry a torch. It doesn't know what a caucus is. It even doesn't know enough to go out with a candidate and take a drink. It doesn't want, and it never did want the government to issue 400,000,000 kegs of lath nails, and loan them to citizens who want to build chicken-houses. It never once stopped work to sit down on a dry-goods box on a shady corner to declare this country would never be prosperous and happy until we had an incontrovertible currency of shingle nails, secured by a bonded fund of non-interest-bearing railroad spikes. It never once got loose and ran wildly about the country, frantically calling upon the people to rally to its support as the only means of overthrowing the "machine." It just stayed in the mill and made nails and nails and nails. It knew how to make them, and so it just went ahead and made them.

Well, I once knew a man who could make shoes. He could build you a pair of glove-fitting boots with cunning little closets for all your corns, and a lovely bay-window for your bunion. He could sew on an invisible patch with yellow thread, so that it looked like sunset on the Mississippi. How he could make shoes! And he sat with his mouth full of pegs and sung and whistled, and he pounded leather and smote the insensate lapstone with many a muffled blow, and pegged and stitched away as though that was the chief end of man.

But one day he stopped whistling, laid down his hammer, dropped his wax into a pan full of pegs, threw the lapstone into the water-bucket, blew all the pegs out of his mouth, and got to telling what Congress ought to do, and what the government should do, and what he would do if he were there, and he said it so often and said it so well, that everybody saw the country was going to ruin and he was the only man who could stop it, and the first thing he knew, the people took him off his leather bench and sent him to Congress.

Now, that man used to charge only ten cents for sewing on a patch as big as a fifty-cent piece, and twenty cents for a new heel, and only fifty cents for half-soles. And day in and day out he earned about $2 10 a day.

And the very first week he was in Congress he introduced a bill for the free coinage of $900,000,000,000 in one-dollar greenbacks, with a proviso that this issue should be doubled if it should appear that the amount originally specified should be found insufficient to meet the demands of the shoe trade.

And yet that man was a good shoemaker. The community missed him sorely when he went to Congress. It was hard to fill his place—on the shoemaker's bench, but none of them cobbled so well and acceptably as he, cobbled they never so cobble-y. He was a good shoe-maker, my boy; a most excellent and worthy shoemaker. In all the land of Ithaca, my boy, there was no better shoemaker.

A Brave Boy's Exploit.

A Providence, R. I., dispatch relates the exploit of a brave boy in the suburbs of that city a few nights ago. Mr. Harlan Page is a well-to-do landowner and business man. He has a son Willie, fourteen years old. Mr. Page and his wife went out to ride, and the house was left with the boy and his grandmother. In a small iron trunk placed in a room in the attic was $500 in money and jewelry and valuable papers, worth in all about $1,000. A tall tree reached up to the window of the attic. Early in the evening Willie heard a noise, and, investigating, saw a man coming down the tree with the iron trunk in his hands and two other men following him. The man with the trunk started down the street on the run. The brave lad, anxious to save his father's property, siezed the first weapon of defense he could get his hands on and started in pursuit. It happened to be a tightly-rolled-up umbrella. Armed with this unformidable weapon, bareheaded and barefooted, Willie made the place pretty hot for Mr. Burglar. The man took to the country. After three-quarters of a mile run, when the burglar was nearly overtaken, the boy sprained his ankle and thought all was lost. Just then an inspiration seized him, and bringing the umbrella to his shoulder like a gun, he "drew a bead" on the robber and told him to surrender or he would blow his brains out. The ruse was successful. The burglar dropped the trunk and sped away. The brave boy limped homeward with the treasure box and met his father, who at once put the authorities on the track of the burglars.

Triumphant America.

Bangor Commercial.

An Englishman, stopping at a country inn in one of the Eastern States, was continually boasting about the superiority of everything in England and depreciating the productions of America. The landlord, as may be surmised, did not relish this, and, therefore, thought of a plan to get even with the boaster. Procuring six fine, healthy crabs, he poured them into the Englishman's bed. Telling his guest that his bed was ready, he lighted a candle and escorted him up stairs. Upon reaching the door, he managed to put out the light. Of course, it did not make much difference to the Englishman, so he undressed himself and went to bed. Immediately he gave a terrific yell, and cried: "Landlord! Come here! What are these in this bed?" The landlord, who was outside the door, and who had lit the candle, came and looked into the bed, and coolly said: "Them's bedbugs! Can you beat them in England?"

"Montgomery's Train."

[Philadelphia Record.]

Noting the Record's editorial remarks respecting the Mountain Meadow massacre in Utah, a gentleman familiar with the facts recalls another equally terrible event in the annals of that Territory. Thirty-two years have elapsed since the mysterious disappearance of what was termed the "Montgomery train"—consisting of eighty-seven families of wealth and position, from the states, and hundreds of animals, en route for California. They were pursuing the old Mormon road in Utah to the Pacific coast, guided by a Mormon who, it is charged, had instructions to mislead them and let them perish. Certain it is that the immigrants were refused supplies on the route, and, whether intentionally or not, were misled and miserably perished, and no definite details respecting their fate were ever known. While the Kansas Pacific engineers were exploring this unknown country they came to a region north of the old Mormon road, about thirty miles square, which they aptly named "The Valley of Death." It is surrounded, except at two points, by inaccessible mountains. It is totally devoid of water and vegetation, and it is said the shadow of bird or wild beast never darkens its white glaring sands. Not even the tarantula or rattlesnake finds the means of subsistence in this desolate alkali desert. To this place the immigrants were led by their Mormon guide, who then left them to shift for themselves. [illegible] mirage promising water, the immigrants descended int tne broad valley. They reached the cheter, but only the white sand, bounded by the peaks, met theirgaze. Around the valley they wandered, and one by one stretched themselves in death under the hot sun. The children crying for water, died at their mothers' breasts, and with swolen tongues and burning vitals the mothers followed. Wagon after wagon was abandoned, and strong men raved and tottered and died. After a week's wandering a dozen of the survivors found water in the hollow of a mountain. It lasted but a short time, when all perished but two, who escaped by following the back trail. When the engineers discovered the spot the wagons still stood complete, the iron work shone bright and the skeletons of men and beasts lay bleaching in the sun. The train was the last that ever attempted this route to California; though the most passable, its travel was forbidden by the Mormon authorities. The fate of the "Montgomery train" was long involved in mystery. From all that can now be learned there seems no doubt that its destruction was resolved upon by the Mormon leaders because some of the immigrants had incurred the displeasure of the inhabitants along the route. It is a terrible reminiscence of the crimes that have darkened the entire record of civilization in that unfortunate Territory.

To remove bolts that have rusted in without breaking them, the most effectual remedy known is the liberal application of petroleum. Care must be taken that the rusted parts are reached by it, and some time must be allowed to give it a chance to soften the layer of rust before any attempts are made to remove the bolt.

The following recipe for makin ginger beer is said to be satisfactory: 8 gallons boiling water; 5 pounds of best white sugar; ½ ounce cream tartar; white of egg beaten to a froth; ½ pound best ginger; 2 ounces tartaric acid; 1 teaspoonful essence of lemon; 1 gill brewers' yeast. Leave to work twenty-four hours before bottling.

A chemist of Vienna has invented a glass which contains no silex, potash, soda, lime or borax. In appearance it is equal with the common crystal, but more brilliant; it is transparent, white and clear, and can be cut and polished. It is insoluble in water, and is not attacked by fluoric acid, but it can be corroded by hydrochloric and nitric acid. When in a state of fushion it adheres to iron, bronze and zinc.

Surgeons know the value of the expansive power of peas and other grain in making anatomical preparations. No one has any idea of the force exerted until a test of it is made. An Italian vessel, laden with rice put into East London some time ago, leaking badly. A strenuous effort was made to pump out the water and unload the cargo. But the rice continued to swell, and finally the vessel was violently burst asunder.

The largest trees are the mammouth trees in California. One of a grove in Tulare County, according to measurement made by members of the State Geological Survey, was shown to be 276 feet high, 106 feet in circumference at base, and seventy-six feet at a point twelve feet above the ground. Some of the trees are 376 feet high and thirty-four feet in diameter. Some of the largest that have been felled indicate an age of from 2,000 to 2,500 years.

Yet relief is ready to the hand of almost any one who will use systematically the remedy that has permanently cured thousands. Simmons' Liver Regulator, is no drastic violent purge; but a gentle assistant to nature.

CONSTIPATION!

Should not be regarded as a trifling ailment—in fact nature demands the utmost regularity of the bowels, and any deviation from this demand paves the way often to serious danger. It is quite as necessary to remove impure accumulations from the bowels as it is to eat or sleep, and no health can be expected where a costive habit of body prevails.

SICK HEADACHE!

This distressing affliction occurs most frequently. The disturbance of the stomach arising from the imperfectly digested contents, causes a severe pain in the head, accompanied with disagreeable nausea, and this constitutes what is popularly known as Sick Headache.

KING'S MAGIC TOOTH ACHE CURE

Oh, My Back!

That's a common expression and has a world of meaning. How much suffering is summed up in it.

The singular thing about it is, that pain in the back is occasioned by so many things. May be caused by kidney disease, liver complaint, consumption, cold, rheumatism, dyspepsia, overwork, nervous debility, &c.

Whatever the cause, don't neglect it. Something is wrong and needs prompt attention. No medicine has yet been discovered that will so quickly and surely cure such diseases as BROWN'S IRON BITTERS, and it does this by commencing at the foundation, and making the blood pure and rich.

Wm. P. Marshall, of Logansport, Indiana, writes: "My wife has for many years been troubled from pain in her back and general debility incident to her sex. She has taken one bottle of Brown's Iron Bitters, and I can truthfully say that she has been so much benefited that she pronounces it the only remedy of many medicines she has tried."

Leading physicians and clergymen use and recommend BROWN'S IRON BITTERS. It has cured others suffering as you are, and it will cure you.

Ague Cure

Is a purely vegetable bitter and powerful tonic, and is warranted a speedy and certain cure for Fever and Ague, Chills and Fever, Intermittent or Chill Fever, Remittent Fever, Dumb Ague, Periodical or Bilious Fever, and all malarial disorders. In miasmatic districts, the rapid pulse, coated tongue, thirst, lassitude, loss of appetite, pain in the back and loins, and coldness of the spine and extremities, are only premonitions of severer symptoms which terminate in the ague paroxysm, succeeded by high fever and profuse perspiration.

It is a startling fact, that quinine, arsenic, and other poisonous minerals form the basis of most of the "Fever and Ague Preparations," "Specifics," "Syrups," and "Tonics," in the market. The preparations made from these mineral poisons, although they are palatable, and may break the chill, do not cure, but leave the malarial and their own drug poison in the system, producing quinism, dizziness, ringing in the ears, headache, vertigo, and other disorders more formidable than the disease they were intended to cure. AYER'S AGUE CURE thoroughly eradicates these noxious poisons from the system, and always cures the severest cases. It contains no quinine, mineral, or any thing that could injure the most delicate patient; and its crowning excellence, above its certainty to cure, is that it leaves the system as free from disease as before the attack.

For Liver Complaints, AYER'S AGUE CURE, by direct action on the liver and biliary apparatus, drives out the poisons which produce these complaints, and stimulates the system to a vigorous, healthy condition.

We warrant it when taken according to directions.

The Newer Arithmetic.

PROBLEMS FOR OTHERS THAN SCHOOL CHILDREN TO SOLVE.

A soldier's widow in the service of the government has a salary of $600 per year and pays a political assessment of two per cent. How much does she have left?

If the governor of Missouri pardons state prison convicts at the rate of three for every nine days how long will it take to pardon 528 convicts?

A Wisconsin school teacher had nineteen scholars and she figured up at the end of three months that she had bestowed 128 licks on the school. Allowing that every boy received 17 of them, and that three of the girls escaped entirely, how many lickings did each of the others receive?

The average fisherman gets four nibbles to one bite, and three bites to a fish, and half his fish are not worth carrying home. At this rate how long will it take a fisherman to exhaust the supply of sheep-heads and dog-fish?

The friends of a certain man chip in four cents apiece and purchase a sponge to present him on his birthday as emblematical of his daily life. The certain man lets himself loose on the donors and damages each one's head to the amount of $3, 47. How much is each donor out of pocket?

A man pays fifty cents extra to take laughing gas while having a tooth pulled. The dentist could have pulled six as well as one, and without any further cost. How much did the patient lose by being so stingy with his molars?

The candy eaten by the school-girls cost just as much as her school-books; the peanuts she devours cost more than her singing lessons; the ice cream costs more than her French, and the gas and fuel she consumes while sparking foots up twice the cost of teaching her to paint landscapes on old jugs, and pictures. Therefore, how many daughters must a man have to be rich?

A young man wagers fifty cents that he can put a billiard ball into his mouth, and he wins the bet. A surgeon charges him $7 for the hour's work in removing it. What was the exact gain in being smart?

An Alderman pays a reporter $5 to write him a speech favoring the erection of a new schoolhouse, but after delivering eleven cents worth of the oration he is informed that there is no question before the meeting, and he falls back and breaks a pair of suspenders worth thirty-five cents. How much is the great man out of pocket.

A Book for Canvassers.

The first step toward the correction of an evil is to diffuse information concerning its extent and influence. When this information is given in words that burn into the very heart and cause the tears to flow or awaken "thoughts too deep for tears," the book which conveys it is to produce a profound sensation in the moral and political world. Such a book is "The Women of Mormonism" edited by Jennie Anderson Froiseth, which recited the plain unvarnished tale the story of woman's wrongs under the accursed system of polygamy. It shows how many of them marry missionaries abroad, supposing them unmarried, only to find, on reaching this country, that they already have several wives. It shows how some have consented to their husbands taking other wives for the sake of support for their children. It shows how others have been led to become plural wives by pretended revelations from God. It shows how this accursed system is spreading all over the country and robbing our homes of our loved daughters led away by franticisms. It shows what legislation is needed and finally what is being done by Christian churches and schools to counteract the fatal poison that destroys homes, corrupts morals and sets the laws of the nation to defiance.

No book since the days of Uncle Tom's Cabin is destined to exert such an influence over the American people as the "Women of Mormonism." It will urge the voter to demand of congress immediate and efficient action in the enactment of needed laws. It will stimulate the benevolent to greater exertions in planting in the territories of the new west the moral agencies needed to reform and purify society.

As this work is one of such intense interest to all classes it is sold only by subscription. It furnishes to wide awake men and women a grand chance for making money by its sale. We understand that there is some territory in this county not yet taken. Particulars can be obtained by addressing the publisher. C. G. G. Paine, Detroit, Mich.

What Everybody Wants.

Is a reliable medicine that never does any harm and that prevents and cures disease by keeping the stomach in order, the bowels regular, and the kidneys and liver active. Such a medicine is Parker's Ginger Tonic. It relieves every case, and has cured thousands. See other column.—Tribune. 4

A Valuable Addition.

Because it is beneficial to the scalp and adds to personal beauty by restoring color and lustre to gray or faded hair, is why Parker's Hair Balsam is such a popular dressing. 31-3w.

Senator Harrison at Dayton.

Elsewhere we publish a number of clippings from the Dayton, O., Democrat, which will enable the readers of the Sentinel to estimate with remarkable exactness the size of Senator Harrison's temperance ideas and the amount of "God and morality" he contains. He has won national notoriety for nepotism. He has worked his relatives into government employment in a way that gives to republican degradation a darker tint than it otherwise would have had. And now Senator Harrison, the "blue blood," refrigerator, the "God and morality" iceberg, the hallelujah Hubbellite, comes to the front in quite a new character. He retires from the stand, where he had denounced saloons and saloon-keepers, and goes directly to a Dayton saloon—enters the "bar" door. What for? What is the inference? Why should a saloon denouncer, a republican "God and morality" fanatic, as quick as he leaves the stand, and before he has time to blow his nose or wipe his eyes, steers straight for a saloon? Manifestly to get something to "warm" him up. Here we have the mean duplicity of the whole business. Here is Senator Harrison—"blue blood" Harrison; cold, severe, aristocratic Harrison—Harrison with a presidential bee in his bonnet, going direct from a republican "God and morality" political temperance meeting into a saloon bar room. Isn't Senator Harrison a beautiful specimen of a "God and morality" prohibitionist? When again he raves about temperance and prohibition in Indiana, won't the people clap their hands and ask him how he liked Ohio whisky, wine or beer? Won't they shout, "Say, Mr. Senator, how did you take yourn—straight or mixed? hot or cold? Did you get warm, Mr. Senator? Did your great moral ideas expand?" It is not surprising that when General Harrison in the city of Dayton, after making a "God and morality" temperance speech, went straight to a saloon to "warm" that the incident played havoc with the temperance people of Dayton. But that is the way it is worked every time. The republican bosses are full of profession and deception, and it seems that General Harrison is not an exception.

A Few Questions to Intelligent Voters.

[From the Eastern Illinoisan.]

Do you understand the tariff question?

Can you afford not to understand it?

Are you not ashamed to confess, if you must confess, that you do not know how your taxes are paid, nor how much you pay?

What do you think of a tax system that so many people do not understand?

Is such a system worthy of confidence?

If you do not understand the tariff question, how do you know that you are not voting away your family's food and clothing, to put money into somebody else's pocket?

Professor Perry, of Williams college, Garfield's teacher, America's greatest economist, says that our protective tariff has cost us in twenty years $12,000,000,000 in gold over and above what a revenue tariff whould have cost us; and that all this money is worse than wasted. This would be $1,500 to every average family. Some estimate the present loss at $1,000,000,000 a year Is not this worth looking after?

Can you afford not to study the tariff and find out for yourself whether your earnings are being filched away from you at such a rate, when so many great men say they are?

It will cost you nothing to investigate the question. It is your duty to yourself and family to candidly look into the matter.

Would you not gain self-respect by it?

If you do understand the question, then is it not your plain duty, and a great privilege, to make your neighbors understand it?

Is it not a question that concerns your liberties as well as theirs?

Will it not pay you to talk this matter over with them?

Is a man properly qualified to vote who doesn't understand the most vital question before the people.

That Tariff Commission has not dried up and been blown away, as was feared. It was recently heard from in Georgia.

Juror Brown was a little too long in hitching his story of attempted bribery. It has an ancient and fish-like smell.

The Latest Dance.

We have received from the publisher, a copy of "The Ripple," by Clarence R. Sidney, author of the popular "Original Five Step Waltz," and "Beauties of the Schottische." Mr. Sidney has struck a popular vein in this, his latest success, and all lovers of Terpsichore, will welcome "The Ripple." Sent post-paid to any address on receipt of price, 40 cents, by S. Brainard's Sons, Chicago, Ill.

THE AUBURN COURIER.

Volume 12. AUBURN, DeKALB COUNTY INDIANA, OCTOBER 26, 1882. Number 43.

Auburn Courier.

JAMES A. BARNS, Publisher.

Registered at the Auburn, Indiana, post-office as second-class matter.

As evidence of the fairness of Mr. Moody in the legislature toward all classes, and especially toward the soldier, we refer to what he said in the legislature during the consideration of a resolution for the admission of Geo. Menser, of Jefferson county, into the Soldiers' Home at Knightstown. Mr. Moody said: "If the law creating this home prevented any person from admission, save he was wounded while in the actual service of his country, then I think, gentlemen, might consistently oppose this resolution. If the law expressly provided that this class of persons should be admitted, then this soldier would at once be admitted, and not come here with a petition asking the house to pass a resolution admitting him to the benefit of the house. But in, as, much as the law creating this home provides that 'there shall be established at Knightstown a home for the maintenance of disabled soldiers and seamen and their orphans and widows,' saying nothing about when, where or how disabled, this soldier comes here and presents his petition to us asking admission. I understand he is an honorable, industrious, hard-working man, and by reason of this great calamity is deprived of the use of his hands and an eye. I think, gentlemen, that this case comes within the spirit if not within the letter of this law, and he is entitled by all means to a home in this institution. We ought to remember that we are sent here to act unprejudiced toward all the citizens of the State of Indiana. We should carefully consider each case as it comes before us, and if we are satisfied, under all the circumstances, we ought to act in a certain direction, then nothing political should permit us from doing our duty toward the humblest person in the state. I think this man's case is entitled to our earnest consideration, and I, for one, am able to rise above party spirit and vote that this soldier be admitted into this institution." The resolution passed the house.

Again, when the house was considering the bill defining the duties of the adjutant-general, Mr. Moody said: "I think a complete record should be preserved of all that may be of benefit to the soldier or to the family of the soldier who left all and answered the call of his country. If all the work is done by the adjutant-general, required of him by this bill, I am certain no man would have any reason to say he received too much pay under the bill. We pay large sums of money to officers and for books to preserve records of the titles to our homes and lands, and who can say that the record of an honorable discharge of a soldier is or may be of less importance and value to himself and family than the record of title deeds. I am satisfied that the tax-payers of the state are not going to find fault with the outlay of the small amount of money it will require to put the adjutant-general's office in good shape, and I trust the bill will pass."

John Butt, the democratic candidate for recorder, was in Butler Wednesday. He was looking to the interest of his candidacy, and finds hosts of friends everywhere. A resident of forty years in the county has given him claims upon our people, irrespective of politics, not more for his long residence than for his sterling integrity, his exhalted manhood, his faithful service to his fellow men, than his undisputable qualification for the position to which he aspires. He will not enter upon the duties of his office as a novice, but he will come into it with an experience, having in the early history of the country acted in the capacity of recorder. He also did service in that capacity on the organization of Steuben county, and the pages of the old volumes will show how well he is calculated to serve the people in the capacity of recorder. Let us not forget that it is efficiency that is most needed in this office. But aside from this Mr. Butt brings to it experience, he brings to it the man of mature years, the sober, industrious, genial, accommodating gentleman with whom we all delight to do business, and no democrat, republican or greenbacker but what will do themselves honor by giving him their suffrage and making him the incumbent of that office for the next four years.—Butler Review.

From the Geysers.

AN INTERESTING LETTER FROM THE YELLOWSTONE COUNTRY.

BUTTE CITY, Montana, Oct. 10, '82.

ED. COURIER:—The route from the Geyser Basin to the Yellowstone Lake, a distance of twenty-five miles, is full of interest. Several extinct geysers and numerous hot springs abound. Brimstone Hollow, where large chunks of brimstone are scattered about and holes and crevices in the earth, from which hot air and steam escape, bearing sulphurous fumes that remind us of the great bottomless pit which we used to read about long ago, and hear so much of during the campmeeting days of our youth, we could hear (in our minds) "weeping, wailing and gnashing of teeth and the clanking of chains." But we don't wish to tarry here, so we pass on and the next thing of interest is Mary's Lake, four or five acres in size, and on the very top of a range of mountains. Its sandy shores have no sign of vegetation, and in its clear water not a living thing could be seen. The surrounding country is sandy, with here and there a cluster of scrubby white pines. Tracks of elk and mountain sheep were visible in the sand. Next comes Mud Volcano, a large cavity in the side of a hill, which seemed to lead back to a great depth. Its dismal thud! thud! like a big engine would send out puffs of steam, and a quantity of hot mud would be thrown several feet. Within a few feet is another boiling mud hole with a crator three feet in diameter of what appears to be dried clay and stands above the general surface of the ground perhaps two feet. The boiling substance has the appearance of a solution of blue clay. Further on, and within three miles of the lake, is the famous Natural Bridge with a span of fifty feet of solid granite stretched across a rocky gorge forty feet above the little stream. An Indian trail winds its way through the thick pine timber and crosses this bridge en route to the lake. Yellowstone Lake is thirty miles long north and south and eighteen miles wide; altitude, 8,000; 2,000 feet higher than the noted Mount Washington of New England. It is fed by the stream of the Upper Yellowstone and the melting of the mountain snows, and its water is as cool as ordinary spring water. A grand picture: The placid blue waters dotted here and there with beautiful islands covered with evergreen trees and shrubs. The lofty gray mountains of the Yellowstone range with their bits of pine timber and glistening snow mirrored on its bosom. Flocks of wild geese, swans, ducks and brants are seen flying about. Plenty of large game is found in the surrounding forests, which can easily be bagged, provided one can hit the broad side of an elk. Now and then a bear is seen rambling about, scaring some sight-seer out of a year or two's growth. Another interesting feature of the park is Sulphur Mountain, on the route from the lake to the falls, a mound about 250 feet high and perhaps 200 yards in extent at the base. At a distance it has a grayish appearance, like a huge pile of ashes, and steam is issuing from many crevices and vents like smoke from a monster coal-pit. On a closer examination, larger pieces of sulphur are seen protruding, and about the vent holes pure crystals of sulphur form a yellow rim. Nestling at the base of this hill on the west side are two large boiling springs, the largest being twenty or twenty-five feet across. The hot contents resemble cream, boils with fury and gives off steam and strong fumes of sulphur. About seventeen miles below the lake the river begins to increase in velocity for a mile or two, becoming rapid and turbulent till it reaches the upper falls where it makes a jump of 150 feet to the bottom of a deep gorge from which rises a cloud of spray. The view is grand, and were there no lower falls to discount it, would be of sufficient attraction to call forth great enthusiasm and cause the tourist to abide awhile. After this leap the river again becomes smooth and and flows leisurly for a half mile, gradually bending to the east till it reaches the lower falls, where it makes the grand descent of 396 feet in one unbroken, silvery sheet, plunging to the bottom of the grand canyon. From several different points we viewed this picture, and from one position, with the sun to our backs, we could see a perfect rainbow in the spray below. A German artist, occupying a sightly position called Point Lookout, was painting a picture of the falls and canyon, but I fear, with all his skill, he will come far short of doing them justice. The Grand Canyon, perhaps the grandest of the kind in the world, or at least in America, is twenty-five miles long and is said to be over two thousand feet deep, walled on both sides with nearly perpendicular, and in many places over-hanging rocks of different colors (yellow being the most common) variegated in different shades of red, black, pink and white. The river, closely compressed between these great walls, at so great a depth, looks like a small brook, although it is one hundred yards in width. In order to take in these sights to the best advantage, you must clutch a pine tree with a firm grip, thrust your head and shoulders out over the precipice; or, what is still better, let some trusty friend hold on to your lower extremities while you hang over the rocks; then if your conscience is clear, your nerves not unstrung from bad whisky, and you are sound and long-winded in democracy, you will derive full benefit from the beauties and mysteries of nature.

J. P. GOETSCHIUS.

The Form of Tickets.

The law says all ballots shall be "written or printed on plain white paper of uniform width of three inches, without any distinguishing mark or embellishment thereon." The tally-sheets have been received by the county auditors and are ready to be delivered to the different inspectors of elections. To make the work easy for the election clerks in the counting, the tickets should be prepared and printed so as to correspond with the tally-sheets, thereby avoiding mistakes in skipping or jumping from one part of the tally-sheet to another.

In this county, our north commissioner's district is No. 1, the southwest district is No. 2 and the southeast district is No. 3.

The form of the tally-sheet is as follows:

For Secretary of State,
For Auditor of State,
For Treasurer of State,
For Attorney-General,
For Clerk of the Supreme Court,
For Superintendent of Public Instruction,
For Judge of the Supreme Court—1st District,
For Judge of the Supreme Court—2d District,
For Judge of the Supreme Court—4th District,
For Representative in Congress—12th District,
For Judge of the Circuit Court—35th Circuit,
For Prosecutor—35th Judicial Circuit,
For Clerk,
For Sheriff,
For Auditor,
For Treasurer,
For Recorder,
For Coroner,
For County Surveyor,
For Joint-Representative,
For Representative,
For Commissioner—1st District,
For Commissioner—2d District,
For Commissioner—3d District,

Moody at Sedan.

The Hon. D. D. Moody spoke at this place before a large audience composed of both parties. His remarks were convincing, and he made a good impression upon most of the republicans. They all favored his work in the legislature two years ago. His remarks on the temperance question were well taken, and some of our temperance voters can now see what they were being led to by promises of the republican party. His remarks are well spoken of by both democrats and republicans, and when the vote is counted, Sedan will loom up for Moody.

Spencerville Items.

[Last Week.]

Dr. Emanuel and lady will go to Michigan this week. Your correspondent wishes them a pleasant and safe journey.

Rev. Erick and lady, of Michigan, are visiting friends in this vicinity. Beeks says he will be a good boy while they are here.

Wm. Bishop, who is gaining notoriety through the Republican scribblers, is convalescent and likely to recover. Dr. Murphy, of Leo, is in attendance.

Rev. Schneider and Rev. Lewellyn made political (republican) speeches in the Methodist church. A number of both parties were offended and went out. Schneider is a fine "(?) republican orator.

Have you heard from Ohio?

H. Murray has repaired, as well as made new and valuable improvements in his gristmill. Spencerville can furnish A No. 1 flour.

The "Carolinians," a colored minstrel troup, degraded the Methodist church by their presence Thursday evening. The entertainment, although extolled by some, was a burlesque of religion, and there was nothing whatever of refinement in the entertainment. It ought to be beneath the dignity of a christian minister to make money on a negro concert. However, the "religous" darkies lied about the door money and swindled the church badly.

Martin Wasson has been doing some very fine painting and kalsomining in Dr. Emanuel's store this week. Also some very nice work for Barney and Erick.

The Young People's Literary Society is booming and ought to receive the encouragement of the citizens of Spencerville.

Communion at the Lutheran church Sunday.

Mrs. Silberg has returned from Michigan, and reports a very pleasant visit.

Barney & Erick have sold a large stock of buggies this season.

A. Kinsey is selling sewing machines, and a good many of them, too. Gus. is a good salesman, and a good democrat as well.

Mr. Curtis, editor of Harper's Weekly, will not support the republican nominee for governor of New York. He declares he will not support a nomination "procured by the combined power of fraud and patronage," and that by voting for Mr. Folger under the circumstances would be to 'acquiese in fraud and patronage as legitimate forces in nominating conventions.' Mr. Curtis adds that "no graver political peril now confronts the country than the complete subjugation of party by unscrupulous cabals which bribe with public employment, and pay their way by filching from the public treasury."—Ligonier Banner.

BY the revised census it appears that the population of Scotland on the 4th of April last year, was 3,735,573. Compared with the population of 1871, this was an increase of a little over 11 per cent.

UNITED STATES MINISTER YOUNG met with a warm reception in China, and the Chinese Government is about requesting that a certain number of Chinese boys be admitted to the Naval and Military Academies of the United States.

NOW THAT it has been gathered and harvested, it turns out that the tobacco crop of Connecticut, Pennsylvania and Virginia, which was reported destroyed by flood and storm in September, is in very good condition after all, and there is plenty of it.

The Crescent Mills and elevator burned at Denver, Col. The estimated loss is $225,000; fully insured. They were the largest in the State and full of grain. It is thought the fire originated from a spark from the lime-kiln across the street, which burned earlier in the morning.

EDWARD and Charles Muller and Frederick Captain have been arrested on suspicion of the murder of Arthur W. Ross, at Glendale, Saturday night. A bloody pistol was found in Captain's possession, and one of the Muthers' is said to have had one of Ross' checks.

The number of Egyptian prisoner awaiting court-martial is 148. Arabi Pasha made an able defense of his conduct before his examiners. The Khedive informed a native Ma onic delegation that his obligations to England for the service rendered were beyond computation.

GEN. TERRY is convinced from his success in working the Northern Cheyenne Indians on their farms until self-supporting, that this is the direct way of settling the Indian question. On these farms the men are manly and the women chaste, and all are anxious that the children shall be educated like the whites. He insists that cows will do more then soldiers in civilizing the red men.

A KANSAS City man struck by lightning but recovering eventually, describes the sensation as a sudden feeling of intense heat like a breath from a furnace door followed by a tingling over his entire body, his arms and legs feeling exactly as if they had suddenly "gone to sleep," a sensation that continued for a long time after all other bad effects had passed away.

J. D. Wattles, publisher of the Sunday School Times, of Philadelphia, employed by the Census Bureau to collect Sunday School statistics for the tenth census, incurred expenses amounting to $7,000, which he could not collect, owing to the exhaustion of the census fund. Now the Government is after Wattles' reports, which he refuses to surrender.

THERE are already four tickets in the field in California, and a fifth is about to be put up for the suffrages of the dear people. This ticket will be known as the Anti-Slicken ticket, "slickens" being a California name for the debris from the mines, and t movement is supported by those "who are opposed to the destruction of their farms, and the filling up of the rivers of the State by the mining debris permitted to wash down from the mountains by the great mining companies."

SERIOUS charges have been made against Mr. Porter, of Chicago, an employe of the census bureau and a member of the tariff commission. The gist of these is that he fixed the census figures upon the debt and taxation statistics of some of the southern States to conform rather to his own idea than to the facts in the case, and that he refused to correct the inaccuracies when his attention was called to them. The matter is so serious as to call for a congressional investigation at the next session.

NEAR Secor, in Woodford county, Ill., twenty miles from bloomington, silver ore assaying 75 per cent. silver mixed with copper is reported to have been discovered in the bed of Panther creek, and there is much excitement. Several men who were unknown in the vicinity were detected examining the creek by night with dark lanterns. The story is that nearly 1,000 pounds of very rich ore have been taken out already, and great crowds of people are already prospecting the stream.

NEARLY 9 years have elapsed since on October 31, 1873, the Spragues, of Rhode Island, failed. They had assets valued at $20,000,000, while their liabilities were $6,000,000 less than that amount. The estate was put in the hands of an assignee, and it was hoped that in two years all claims would be settled or greatly reduced, but one legal complication after another has followed. The many suits have been passed upon by the courts have not been adjusted with much consistency, and to-day the property is in more of a tangle than ever.

GOV. SHERMAN, of Iowa, appeared before the State Temperance Union, at Des Moines recently, and stated that there were now two cases pending in the State Sepreme court testing the validity of the Prohibition amendment and that he believed these cases would be decided in December. He further stated that he had ordered the Attorney General to be of the counsel in prosecuting both cases. One of the pending test cases is calculated to test the validity of the amendment, and the other will determine whether or not there is any present statute for enforcing its provisions.

Two doctors have lately conducted at Grenell, a suburb of Paris, at the expense of a rich Swedish philanthropist, a series of experiments upon pigs, for the purpose of ascertaining the effects of alcohol upon the internal organs of drunkards. Fifteen pigs were treated daily with different kinds of liquor, each pig, however, being confined to one particular tipple. When they had been killed their vital organs were found to be marked with small white spots resembling ulcers. Their flesh was pronounced sound, but when sent to market it was seized as unfit for food. At last accounts a dispute was going on between the experimenters and the police, the former maintaining that the market Inspector was mistaken.

THE new census of London, showing the population to be 4,764,312 souls, has drawn out from Land, an English journal, some striking contrasts. There are," it says, "in London more than double the number of people in Denmark, including Greenland; nearly three times as many as in Greece; more than eighteen times the population of Montenegro; some thousands more than Portugal, including the Azores and Madeira; nearly treble the population of Servia; more than double that of Bulgaria; three-quarters of a million more than in Holland; more than Sweden, or Norway, or Switzerland." "And yet," adds the same paper, "this splendid capital, the most populous and wealthy city the world has ever seen, is practically without a Government.

THE annual report of Commissioner McFarland, of the General Land Office, for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1882, has been completed. It shows that disposals of public land under all acts of Congress embraced 12,998,740.37 acres, and of Indian Lands, 310,386.13 acres make the total disposals 14,209,126.50 acres—an increase over disposals of the preceeding year of 3,412,729.85 acres. The amount of money received from all sources in connection with disposals of the public lands was $7,758,561.02, and from sales of Indian lands $634,587.22, a total of $8,392,848.24, being an increase over the previous year of $2,984,044.06. The total area of public lands surveyed in the several States and Territories from the beginning of surveying operations by the Government up to June 30, 1882, is 831,725,863 acres. The estimated area of unsurveyed portion of the public domain inclusive of the Territory of Alaska, is 983,062,759 acres. Judge McFarland says that A repeal of the Pre-emption law would simplify the public business and be in the interest of public economy and good administration. Such repeal would, moreover, remove one of the causes of frauds in land entries, which have approached great magnitude."

THE October returns of the yield per acre of wheat, estimated from results of threshing, as received by United States Department of Agriculture, foreshadows a product in the United States slightly exceeding 500,000,000 bushels, and possibly reaching 520,000,000. The average yield per acre appears to be nearly fourteen bushels, on an acreage slightly less than 37,000,000. There is a reduction of area in the Spring wheat region, and large yield in the great Winter growing belt of the West. Taking the highest figures indicated by these returns of yield, the distribution of the production gives 248,000,000 bushels, or nearly half the crop of the United States, to six principal Winter wheat States—Ohio, Michigan, Indiana, Illinois, Missouri and Kansas. The Spring wheat of the Northwest may make 118,000,000 bushels. The Pacific coast crop, which has been persistently exagerated in commercial estimates, cannot much exceed 44,000,000 bushels. The Middle States produced about 40,000,000 bushels, and the Southern States slightly in excess of 50,000,000 bushels.

The Indianapolis Journal in speaking of the rights and wrongs of conductors or passenger trains, also says of "Carbuncles on railroads" that: "In conversation, a day or two ago, with a veteran passenger conductor, who was once discharged from a road on the report of a "spotter," he remarked that on his death-bed he would solemnly swear that he never took a cent from a railroad company which employed him. He then went on to state that on a road which he run over a few years ago spotters were put on. The very day they commenced operations he was posted by the private secretary of the president, and he told all the conductors on his division of the fact, and he was well satisfied that if any one of them ever had 'knocked down,' as it is termed, they did not during the three weeks the 'spotters' were on; yet every conductor on the division, eight in number, himself included, were discharged on the 'spotters'' reports. This veteran conductor had no trouble in getting a position on another road, and a few weeks after met the general manager who discharged him, and convinced the manager that he was an honest man, and that the spotter was a 'carbuncle' on railroad operations."

A gang of young savages have been at work about six miles northwest of Corydon, Harrison county. A few nights ago they rode a valuable horse of Levi Wolfe to death, and nearly rode to death a horse belonging to James Vibbard. They cut off the tail and slit the nose of another belonging Joseph Pinaire; horribly mutilated a fine hog owned by David Wolfe, and stole half a barrel of brandy and a shot gun from Felisian Pinaire Three young men who are suspected of these savage crimes have skipped out, but the officers are on their track, and hope to arrest them.

One of the worst cases of attempted murder ever known in Connersville, occurred early Thursday morning, Miss Maggie Hammond, formerly of Brookville, but for the past year a domestic in Connersville, gave birth to a large and healthy girl baby, in an out-house in the rear of John Wabright's residence, on Court street, threw it into a vault about eight feet below, and heaved a heavy stone after it, which luckily missed its intended mission, striking along-side the child and falling over on one of its legs. The child was discovered by its cries, Friday morning, washed and dressed and is in a fair way to live. Shortly after the terrible deed, the mother took the southbound train on the Whitewater railroad for Brookville, where she was arrested Friday afternoon by Policeman Massey, of Connersville. Miss Hammond is a woman of about thirty, and a blonde of pleasing appearance.

In accordance with an act passed at the last session of Congress, the Commissioners of the General Land Office is now preparing for publication a volume containing the codified land laws and the history of the public domian of the United States, compiled and prepared by the Public Land Commission, with all the subsequent land laws passed up to the day of adjournment of the last Congress. There will be a limited number of volumes published for general distribution, and many applications for them have already been received from lawyers and persons engaged in the land business, to whom the work will be of much value.

A package was received at the Treasury Department yesterday containing $950,000 in Government bonds, bequeathed by a Hoboken, N. Y., miser, named Joseph L. Lewis, to assist in extinguishing the public dept. The case has been before the courts in New York for some time, a claim having been set for the estate by a woman who alleged that she was the wife of the testator. It was decided, however, that she was an impostor, and that the money belong to the Government. The bonds have been temporarily deposity in the loan division of the Treasury Department, to avait the return of Secretary Folger or his successor. When they have been formally turned over to the Secretary of the Treasury the bonds will be cancelled and destroyed, thus wiping out nearly a million dollars of the public debt.

S. W. Donnelly, Chief of the Division of Accounts in the General Land Office, has just prepared a statement showing the total sales of public lands in the State of Indiana, from January 1, 1817, to June 30, 1882, and the amounts received therefor. A similar statement of each of the other states will be made hereafter. This statement that 16,918,382 acres of public lands were sold in Indiana during this time, for which the government received $21,011,218 42. The largest sales for one year were made in 1836, being 4,155,742 acres, for which $5,974,727.60 were paid. The first year 793,283 acres were sold, which, at $1.25, brought $1,068,792.89. The last sale was in 1878, when only 4 88-100 were sold for $12.60. In the years 1864, 1867 and 1868 no public lands were sold in this State.

The examination of Lieutenant Danenhower was resumed, before the Jeannette board of inquiry, this morning. An interesting feature of the proceedings was the introduction, in evidence of the log-books of the Jeannette and the original muster rolls and charts, with the tin cases in which they were carried by Captain De Long's party through their desperate and hopeless wanderings in Siberia. The papers all bore marks of the severe usage to which they were subjected. Several are almost illegible. The original plans of the Jeannette before the alterations made on her, and the plans showing the repairs and alterations made at Mare Island navy yard, were put in evidence, and were identified by Danenhower.

When asked whether he had anything to say in reference to the affidavits published this morning with the Star Route jury bribery affair, Mr. Merrick said that, in his opinion, it was beneath the dignity of the Government counsel to engage in a newspaper discussion of the matter at this time. The whole subject was under investigation, and in two or three days he expected the special counsel would make a report. Meanwhile, any attempts to forestall public opinion would be unsuccessful.

F. H. Fall, recentely connected with the Department of Justice, and charged with an attempt to influence the jury in the Star Route case, has written a letter to the Attorney General, stating that the defendants in the case have concosted a scheme to have him arrested, and asks to have an opportunity to show the matter up to the Government. The Attorney General replied that if Fall had knowledge of such a scheme, he should present proofs to Mr. Merrick. Fall has not been connected with the Department of Justice since the 17th of July, when he was dismissed for improper conduct.

The Post Dispatch's special from Marshfield, Mo., says: The Sheriff of Laclede county, R. P. Goodall, killed Bob Taylor this morning, in attempting to arrest him, a few miles from Lebanon, on board a passenger train. Taylor is one of three brothers that murdered the Sheriff and Deputy Sheriff of Hamilton county, Tennessee, on the 14th of September last. He has been hiding in the vicinity of Lebanon for some time past, and Sheriff Goodall has been after him two weeks. This morning Goodall encountered Taylor on the train between Marshfield and Lebanon, and stepping up to him, presented his revolver and demanded his surrender. Taylor instantly drew a pistol, but the Sheriff was too quick, and fired, killing Taylor instantly. The body was taken to Lebanon. The Sheriff has telegraph the authorities in Tennessee.

It is thought that another of the Taylor brothers was on the train, as the pistol that fell from the dead man's hand was picked up in the excitement by a man who had passed into another car, and was seen no more.

It is said that $16,000 reward is offered for the three Taylors.

Since the above news came here, the Post-Dispatch has received a special from Chattanooga, Tenn., saying that a noted desperado named Taylor is surrounded near Rockwood, and that a posse has gone out from Chattanooga to assist in his capture. This is probably a brother of the man killed by Sheriff Goodall this morning.

Dublin, October 17.—The Irish National Conference opened to-day. Parnell presides. A letter was read from Egan, dated Paris, tendering his resignation as Treasurer of the Land League, and giving a statement of the fund of the League. The report shows that a total of £244,820 sterling passed through his hands. Of this sum there was disbursed in relieving distress in 1870 and 1880, £50,000; in defense at the state trials, over £15,000, and in expenditures through the General Land League and the Ladies' League, £148,000, leaving a balance of nearly £32,000.

Parnell and Davitt were received with tremendous cheers by the delegates. Nearly all the extreme Irish members of Parliament are present. The attendance of delegates is large.

Parnell, in his address to the conference, corrected the impression that nothing had been done for evicted tenants. He said, since the dissolution of the Ladies' League £62,774 had been sent in relieving them, and that hundreds of families had been placed in a position to avail themselves of the benefits of the Arrears act.

Brennan and Sexton were appointed Secretaries of the conference.

Numbers of letters and telegrams from America, approving of the movement, were read. Letters were received from several Catholic Bishops, apologizing for their absence and expressing confidence in the leaders' movement.

Parnell then submitted a programme for the conference, and reviewed its prospects.

"It is believed that the principal object of the Irish League will be the prosecution of a vigorous agitation for the amendment of the Land act as a preliminary to the abolition of landlordism by purchase. Special stress will be laid on the defination of Mr. Healey's clause so as to secure to tenants the entire value of their past and future improvements on the admission of the lease-holders to the benefit of the act and on the advance of the entire purchase money by the State at a low rate of interest, the principal to be paid during an extended period. Proposals will also be advocated for the purchase of poor, rack-rented estates for the benefit of tenants. The claims of laborers to better dwellings and allottments will be incorporated in the programme. Laborers will be entitled to co-operate in obtaining such improvement in the Land act as will enable farmers to deal generougly with them. The industrial revival will be assisted by local organizations for fostering the demand for Irish manufactures. Other points for the programme are the payment of members of Parliament, the extension of the franchise and the establishment of a system of elective county governments. It is understood that at the conference a deputation from the Home Rule League will announce the dissolution of that body and the resignation of its functions into the hands of the new Irish League, of which national self-government will be the basis."

John Pender, M P, who occupies about the same relation to the United Cable lines that Jay Gould does to the Western Union, and who was elected a director in the Western Union last week, sailed for home, Tuesday. He failed in the accomplishment of the mission which brought him to this country, and it is said he left after a quarrel with Mr Gould, without accepting a place in the directory of the Western Union. His object in visiting America was to obtain from the Western Union Telegraph company a modification of the contract made last spring, by which the Western Union is bound to give all of its cable business to the four ocean cable companies mentioned, and they in turn are bound to give all of their business to it. He desired to have the contract so modified that the cable companies should be at liberty to receive any and all cable business, while the Western Union should still be bound to give all its business to the four companies. It is presumed that he hoped by such a change to head off the building of any additional cables in the interests of the B. & O. The accomplishment of such an enterprise would impair the profits of the present cables, which it is claimed by both sides, are ample for the business, and which, statistics show are capable of returning on the average not over 5 per cent. on the cost or capitalization. It is reported that Mr. Robert Garret, who went to Europe to secure capital for building the proposed cables to connect with the B. & O. system, has not been successful, and that James Gordon Bennett's subscription of $1,000,000, about one-third of the amount required to lay one cable, is all that has been secured for the enterprise.

In Michigan.

William McKinsley, of Pokagon, Cass county, 16 years old, while returning from a hunt, accidentally shot himself through the lungs and died shortly after.

James Kelly, of Owasso, a railroad laborer, was drowned in the river at Jackson, this morning, while drunk.

Henry D. Bennett, Secretary and Steward of the Michigan University, recently accused of collecting $330.61, which he had not passed into the treasury, confessed to the Regents that he had taken the money, put it in the bank at his own credit, and afterwards drew it out and forgot to pay it into the treasury. The Regents were astonished, and left the matters in the hands of the Executive Committee, who heard the argument of President Angell on behalf of Bennett, and finally decided to have a meeting of the full board about the middle of November. Efforts made to hush the matter up have given rise to exaggerated reports, stating that thousands of dollars have been embezzled by Bennett, but the facts are as stated.

Colonel A. W. Slayback, one of the most prominent lawyers of St Louis, and a Democratic politician of national reputation, was shot dead Thursday afternoon by John A Cockerill, the managing editor of the Post-Dispatch, between which paper and the Colonel there had been a quarrel of long standing. About 4:45 o'clock Colonel Slayback, accompanied by W H Clopton, entered the office, and passing directly through the city editor's room, entered the room of the managing editor. Cockerill was sitting at his desk, and the foreman of the composing-room, Victor Cole, and the business manager, John McGuffin, were also in the room. Mr. Cole tells the following story of what happened: "As Slaybrook entered he said; 'You are here, are you?' Cockerell was evidently expecting trouble, for his revolver was lying on his desk. He made some reply to Colonel Slayback, when the latter said: 'Is that pistol for me?' Cockerill replied: 'It is for you if you want it, or when you want it.' At this Colonel Slayback pulled a pistol, a self-cocker, and as he covered Cockerill, McGuffin jumped forward and grabbed the pistol just as the hammer fell, catching the hammer on his hand, between the thumb and forefinger, thus prevening the pistol from going off. At the same time Cockerill grabbed his revolver and fired as he rose. The ball struck Slayback in the left breast, and he fell, dying almost instantly. There was a great commotion, and a rush was made for the room where the tragedy occurred." When outsiders reached the room they found Slayback on the floor, dead, and Cockerill kneeling by the side of him, wiping the blood from his face.

It was expected that counsel for Colonel Cockerill would apply for his release on bail, this morning, but the evidence taken before the Coroner's Jury not being yet written out, and, therefore, not in proper condition to submit to the court, and also owing to the fact that Judge Laughlin, of the Criminal Court, is sick, action in the matter was deferred till Wednesday. No charge has yet been made against Mr. Cockerill, but it is understood the Coroner will swear out a warrant soon. Frank K. Hurd, Democratic Congressman from the Toledo (O.) district, is here, and will act as advisory counsel for Colonel Cockerill. They are old and warm personal friends. It is stated this afternoon that Emery A Storrs, the distinguished lawyer of Chicago, will come here and assist in, if not take charge of the prosecution.

The expected warrant charging Colonel John A. Cockerill with murder in the second degree will be sworn out this afternoon, and the testimony taken before the Coroner's jury will be submitted to Judge Cady, of the Court of Criminal Correction, in the absence of Judge Laughlin, of the Criminal Court, who is sick. Application will then be made by Colonel Cockerill's counsel for his release on bail, and numerous friends will be present to furnish any amount of bonds the court may name.

Charles H. Randall, of Camden, N J, the seventh victim of the railroad disaster of June 29, at Parker's creek, near Little Silver, was burried Friday, at Branching Cemetery, with Masonic honors. At the time of the accident it was supposed that Mr. Randall's injuries were slight, as he remained at the wreck after going over in the fourth coach, rescuing the dead, dying and wounded from the brackish waters of Little Silver-creek. For three weeks after the disaster Mr Randall was confined to his bed, suffering, it was supposed, from spinal injuries. He kept complaining of pains in the head, but at the expiration of three weeks, with the assistance of crutches, he was able to walk about. After his convalescence, Mr Randall accepted a check of $25,000 from the railroad in settlement for injuries. Soon after he suffered a relapse, and his condition became so alarming that all hope of saving the man's life were given up, and Mr. Randall became a mental and physical wreck. On October 2 he was taken to the insane asylum at Blackwoodtown, where he gradually sank from softening of the brain until death ensued, on Monday last. Mr. Randall was about 40 years of age, and for many years followed the calling a journalist. He was one of the door-keepers of the House of Representatives under Lincoln's Administration. He was a native of Camden, N. J. His mother lost her life in the terrible bridge disaster at Tom's river, several years ago, when thirty-three persons were killed by an excursion train from Long Branch, bound for Atlantic City, crushing through the frail bridge.

Philadelphia dispatch:

In the United States District Court Monday morning, Judge McKennan denied a new trial to Joseph R. Black, Thomas A. McDevitt and Christian Price, convicted of star route conspiracy, and sentenced McDevitt to pay a fine of $500 and imprisonment one year, and Price to pay a fine of $100 and undergo sentences for six months from the date of his conviction. The sentence of Black was deferred a few days in consequence of his wife's serious illness.

Postmaster-General Howe says the figures for the past month will show a revenue credit of the Post Office Department of $1,500,000. He is not yet ready to recommend a cheaper rate of letter postage. He will repeat the former recommendation that newspapers circulate free through the mails.

A combination of Protoxide of Iron, Peruvian Bark and Phosphorus in a palatable form. The only preparation of iron that will not blacken the teeth, so characteristic of other iron preparations.
GENTLEMEN: I have used DR. HARTER'S IRON TONIC in my practice, and in an experience of twenty-five years in medicine, have never found anything to give the results that DR. HARTER'S IRON TONIC does. In many cases of Nervous Prostration, Female Diseases, Dyspepsia, and an impoverished condition of the blood, this peerless remedy has, in my hands, made some wonderful cures. Cases that have baffled some of our most eminent physicians have yielded to this great and incomparable remedy. I prescribe it in preference to any iron preparation made. In fact, such a compound as DR. HARTER'S IRON TONIC is a necessity in my practice. DR. ROBERT SAMUELS,
ST. LOUIS, MO., NOV. 28th, 1881. 2104 Wash. Avenue.
It gives color to the blood, natural healthful tone to the digestive organs and nervous system, making it applicable to General Debility, Loss of Appetite, Prostration of Vital Powers and Impotence.

Waterloo,	Oct. 30
Auburn,	Oct. 31

THE Warsaw Union says the republicans of that place have men employed at a salary to work up the saloon interest. No wonder the republicans have a majority in that county.

* * *

BY latest accounts, the vote of the 18th Ohio district goes to the democrats. The irregular votes, of the first count have been given to Wallace, the democratic candidate for whom they were evidently intended.

IF the Spencerville correspondent of the Republican could make up his mind to omit the usual republican formality, of saying "whiskeyite" when speaking of democrats, he need not have his feelings so badly lacerated. He evidently begins to realize how it is himself. If he continues in this state of mind for awhile, he may be able to write an article for the papers, without even thinking of whisky.

PERRY ALEXANDER, of Fort Wayne, a horse-buyer, bought a horse a few days ago for $45 and afterwaed sold it for $65 to a Philadelphia horse jockey. The horse, which was an ordinary bay and suffered from a sore back, was taken by the new owner to the race course, and without any previous training made a mile in 2:36. He was given to a trainer and now trots a mile in 2:24½, and it is confidently asserted that the horse can travel in less than 2:20. The owner has refused $5,000 for the animal, and now Fort Wayne buyers regularly test the speed of every horse they buy.—Ligonier Banner.

THE Republican party of Ohio, led astray by such fanatics as Deacon Richard Smith and Governor Foster, has sowed the wind and it has reaped the whirlwind. The question of Sunday laws and prohibition are not political questions, and yet were taken up by Ohio republicans and became the leading factor in the campaign, to the destruction of the party. The Germans, who held the balance of power in Ohio and who have over and over again saved the republican party, were estranged by its leaders, and mounted the prohibition hobby and rode their party to death.—Chicago Herald.

SUSAN B. ANTHONY and the editor of the Inter Ocean should at once emigrate to Finland, where a religious sect has appeared based upon the fundamental principal of "female supremacy and male subjection." Husbands and lovers bind themselves by oath to wear whatever yoke their partners choose to place upon them, and, furthermore, to make unreserved confession once a week of all delinquencies. A woman who has been chosen by her sister rulers to exercise unlimited authority within the community allots the penalties, which are promptly inflicted by robust and resolute matrons.—Chicago Herald.

IN speaking of the old Maine Liquor Law that was once in force in Indiana a correspondent of the Elkhart Monitor says in speaking of its workings in that county: "The board of county commissioners was convened and appointees made to sell pure and undulterated liquors under the new law. Charles P. Jacobs was appointed for Goshen, and Dr. Chamberlain for the town of Elkhart. These gentlemen furnished their own liquors, while the county furnished the necessary stationery and record books.

Every applicant for liquor had to be registered in the following manner: Kind, quantity, price and the purpose for which it was to be used, to which the applicant had to subscribe his name. The law was all that the most enthusiastic friend of temperance could desire. The sale of cider was prohibited even at the press, unless taken in quantities of not less than five gallons, and none could be drank or used upon the premises where made. Wines and malt liquors were under the same law. The law was too stringent. Public sentiment soon revolted against it. At first it was secretly violated, then publicly, and finally it was utterly disregarded, and that too, long before it was declared to be unconstitutional by the supreme court.

This was the Indiana-Maine law. The intention of its supporters was good, but misdirected. The lesson it taught was not entirely lost in that the duties of the moral teacher is not yet to be dispensed with, and that habits of mankind are to be regulated by legal enactment."

THE Lagrange Standard is commenting on the remarks we made as to the amount of drunkedness at the re-union here, calls it "flinging mud at the union soldiers." Such a remark was to be expected, of course. It is a ready answer for a man who has nothing else to say. But would it not be just as manly, and more in keeping with the character of a man who claims to believe in temperance, if the editor of the Standard had joined with us in trying discountance and discourage, the growing tendency to over indulge in drink at these meetings? Intemperance is to be deplored under any circumstances, whether it is found among those who served their country faithfully, or among those who staid at home. And it certainly would be gratitying to every true friend of the soldier, to see excessive drinking banished from their social gatherings. Let us drop these low flings long enough to assist those who faced peril for their country's good, in order that they may not let these festive occasions draw them into the greater danger—a love of strong drink.

S. P. CONNER, who will be remembered by our readers as the author of a letter published in the Indianapolis Journal last year, denouncing New, Dorsey and "Gray" a man who was to show republicans how to vote and count double ballots, is out in another letter, in which he not only repeats his statements as to the use of money in carrying Indiana in 1880, but states it more fully. He says that not less than half a million of dollars was used in Indiana alone, and goes on to say that such a vast sum was not needed and could not be used for legitamate purposes alone. It was to be used for buying votes, and corrupting the ballot box, and was so used. He says that a safe, was sent to Indianapolis and brought into the New Denison Hotel, the money in it, and three bankers were along to see the money properly distributed.

THE Nickel Plate road at Ft. Wayne is now running trains over its line as seen by the following from the News: "The first time card of the western division of the N. Y. & St. L. R. R. was received at the Fort Wayne office last evening. It provides for a through passenger and freight train out of Buffalo and Chicago each morning. The east bound express leaves Chicago at 8:12 a. m. and reaches Fort Wayne, 153.11 miles, at 1:50 p. m. certainly remarkably fast time for a new road. This train leaves Fort Wayne at 2:10 p. m. The express train from the east arrives at 2:45 p. m. and leaves at 3:05 p. m. arriving at Chicago at 9. p. m. The time card goes into effect at 2:30 Sunday afternoon and freight and passengers will be received and carried on October 23. Of course more trains will be added within a short time."

IF the republican party of Kosciusko county is so intensely opposed to the sale of liquor; if it is the champion of the case of prohibition, why do the leaders hire a man to operate the saloons and the saloon element in this city in the interest of the republican party? If there are those who do not believe that we state the truth in this matter, please let them investigate.—Warsaw Union.

THE Ligonier Banner of last week was a regular double decker, in fact a double paper. The Banner is always good and we are glad to see such evidence of its substantial prosperity.

THE protective tariff divested of the deceitful flummery by which its true character is disguised by political demagogues, is simply a tax levied upon labor for the benefit of capital.

CORRESPONDENCE.

WATERLOO.

Do not forget the County Teachers' Institute to be held here Nov. 18. All our people should prepare to assist in entertaining the teachers who attend the institute.

E. P. Dickinson paid a flying visit to friends in Auburn and in Steuben county last week. He is getting used to his new work on the road and thinks he will like it.

Mr. and Mrs. H. M. Lamport were at Butler last week, from which point they went to attend the funeral of Mrs. Lamport's brother, who lived near Hamilton, in Steuben county.

Several of our citizens attended the Catholic fair at Auburn last week.

Frank Buckland, who is now engaged in the government printing office at Washington, will soon be married to a young lady in New York City. So says the Steuben Republican.

Miss Delia Moore returned last Saturday from Toledo, where she had been called by the death of her brother.

J. D. Campbell and family are visiting this week in Steuben county with Mrs. C.'s parents.

Al. Parks, whose injuries were spoken of last week, is improving.

Mrs. H. Leib and daughter Ola was calling on friends in Butler last Friday.

Sol. Beidler is assisting Harry Fisher in the drug store during the proprietor's absence.

Miss Maggie Bateson has added to her millinery stock a fine line of fancy goods and material for fancy work, such as fancy tidies, felts, embroidery, silks and all kinds of wools, transfer figures, etc.

W. P. Myers arrived here last Friday from Hiawatha, Kansas, having been called here by the death of an infant daughter. Mrs. Myers had been visiting her relatives here for several weeks, and her child was sick only a couple of days, when it was taken away. They have the sympathy of the whole community in this great trouble.

Miss Libbie Bowbly is very low with consumption.

Capt. W. R. Myers, candidate for secretary of state, spoke to a large and appreciative audience.

H. D. Armstrong started Wednesday with an excursion for Columbus, Neb.

ST. JOE.

Mrs. A Zern was visiting at La-Otto, last week.

Solomon Shilling took a car load of hogs to Chicago, Monday last.

Ben Leighty, Nelson Thomas and Aaron Thomas are engaged on the new railroad bridge.

Alf Schell worked one day on the new bridge and then succumbed.

Mr. Lewis, republican candidate for representative, was in town last week. It's no good after the speech of D. D. D. D. will just have a walk away on him.

M. E. Olds took in the city of Toledo last Tuesday, at least one would suppose he did take in a good deal of the town from the stock of new goods that have come to light since his arrival back home. Go and see Mart. It will make your eyes water to see the nice things which he has piled up in his mammoth store room.

Barney Brothers have engaged the services of Charley Meeks, of Lagrange, Ind., to sling dry goods for them for the next few months. Charley knows how it is done, and we have no doubt will be a valuable assistant, especially in the hard work department.

Leighty & Bishop are still on deck with a mammoth stock of dry goods, groceries and notions, which they are closing out as fast as Jake and Mel. can tie them up. Everybody comes to St. Joe to trade because there is no place in the world where goods are sold as cheap as in St. Joe. If you don't believe it ask Dick Barney.

D. D. Moody, the people's next representative, spoke at the school house in St. Joe on the evening of Oct. 18. The citizens turned out irrespective of party and listened very attentively to what D. D. had to say. The speech gave the best of satisfaction and all are agreed that Moody's chances of election are far ahead of his opponent. One of our old-time republicans told the writer today that he was sure that Moody would be elected by a rousing majority and he believed he should be. Hurrah for Dave.

Some of our republican friends are rejoicing greatly over the speech (temperance) of a Mr. Kane who spoke here a few weeks ago to the temperance organization. It is said that he came here to make a temperance speech, but as near as we can learn, he made a speech in favor of Mr. Lewis the republican candidate for representative and, especially against D. D. Moody. We are glad to say that the speech did Mr. Moody no harm, but we think made him several votes. It has leaked out that the reason Mr. Kane goes for Moody is because he gets his little $10. per every speech he makes. Democrats in this part of the county will remember Kane and J. W. Baxter for the part they are playing in this campaign. Does Baxter remember the time when democrats almost (or quite) got down on their knees to get votes for him. Is this their pay? It will be a long note with a big interest to settle in the end.

BUTLER:

Another wreck on the Lake Shore last Sunday. Several freight cars were demolished.

—The M. E. and Lutheran churches netted a nice sum from the Detroit excursion.

Quite a sensation is created in Concord township. Pearson Sechler, a bachelor about 30 yrs. old, a man of considerable wealth, has been sick for a short time. Last Thursday night he wandered off and no trace of him has yet been found.

David Kinsey was attacked by a severe illness soon after his marriage, preventing him from taking his eastern trip.

Our town is overflowing with tenth-rate entertainments. An agent insisted on pasting one of his show bills in a lady's front window, but he did'nt do it.

Bro. Garrison is on the street again.

Mrs. John Hook, of Stafford township died last Sunday.

RENO.

CROW TOWN.

There was a reunion at Bro. Wilkes residence one night last week. Old affairs were forgotten and forgiven and everything was lovely and "the goose hung high," and I think Charley will be left in regard to his fee for legal services.

Mr. Clark's sawmill is doing a large amount of business at present, and will probably continue to until he exhausts over one hundred acres of good timber.

Crops are good on an average, and Mel. Davis has the best crop of corn he ever raised.

Our ditch inspectors are laboring hard, and I think congress should make an appropriation for their benefit as the present salary is small.

Conundrum: What become of Bro. Pendland's lecture?

Information wanted in regard to Clark's iron wedges. He has not found his open rings yet.

We have an addition of three more democratic voters to the population of Crowtown.

THE Lagrange Democrat crows thusly: "O-hi-O, you pretty little lass! It's so nice to tick you under the chin and play with your lovely notion of things. Oh, your just too, sweet for anything—but, oh, you know you do, don't you, you little duckey—roll up nice democratic majorities. Do it again in '84."

—Misses Mary Skelley, Tresse Fry and Mary Baker, of Fort Wayne, accompanied by Lilly McTigh and Chas. Shoub, were guests of the Courier Monday.

—Let each democrat ballot a straight ticket. When a republican urges you to support his ticket, ask yourself if he would vote for you under the circumstances?

—The fair cleared over three hundred dollars. It is said that some of the boys squandered money a little more freely than their bank account would allow.

—Wood is coming in quite freely now, and people are going to look ahead and not run the risk of another wood famine, like the one that caught them last year.

—Milo Gunsenhouser will quit the printing business and handle a patent right. He is a young man well thought of and has many friends who will regret his departure.

—D. T. Smith and the others of his branch of the extensive family of Smiths, have a reunion to-day, at the the residence of his brother, John, southwest of Altona.

—The heavy frosts during the past week have had a good effect in curing the still green corn. It will hasten the husking time, for a great deal of the corn is still too soft to harvest.

—Ernest Manstoffer, well-known to all our citizens, died suddenly on Saturday last after an illness of only a few days. The funeral was at the German Reform church on Sunday.

—C. F. Pierson is now running a repair shop in connection with Knoder & Campbells's blacksmith business. The boys are all nice fellows and they should have a fair share of patronage.

—Mr. Editor.—Allow me to return sincere thanks to my many friends in honoring me with their votes, at the Catholic fair, awarding me the prize given to the most popular young lady.

Louise Henry.

—A few of our subscribers are getting careless and allowing their subscription to accumulate. Remember it is easier to pay a small sum each year, than to pay after it becomes larger.

The proprietors of Ely's Cream Balm do not claim it to be a cure-all, but a sure remedy for Catarrh, Colds in the head and Hay Fever. Price 50 cents. Apply into nostrils with little finger. 2w.

—Jas. Rowley, esq., has been appointed administrator of the estate of James Quince, deceased. Mr. Rowley is a thorough business man and we are right in saying that matters entrusted to his care will receive prompt attention.

—We see by the Dowagiac Times, that our young friend Willie Straub had a fine exhibit of paintings at the recent fair of the Dowagiac Union. It will please his many friends in this county, to see him succeeding wherever he goes.

—The wood shed on the property occupied by Rev. Matthews, caught fire from an ash barrel and had it not been for the timely assistance of the "bucket brigade" both the shed and residence would have been destroyed. Mr. M. and family were not at home.

—The recent amendments to the constitution, have got ahead of several of our citizens in regard to change of location just before election. Many votes will be lost, and for all we can see, no one will be benefited by it. At least such is the case in this county.

—We want to impress upon the mind of all boys that the Courier office is not a place to loaf and talk over sporting transactions of the week. We have mentioned this a number of times and our loafers either can't read or they display considerable gall—one of the two.

—C. C. Shaffer's horse ran away with Elza and Fred. in the wagon Tuesday evening. The thill strap broke and the vehicle coming in contact with the animals hind limbs caused him to become frightened. In turning the corner on Sixth street both boys were thrown out Fred. receiving painful injuries.

$100 Reward—Man Lost.

F. P. Sechler, who has been sick for some time, and at times deranged, escaped from his room at the old Rudolph Sechler place near Orangeville, in Concord township, on Wednesday night, Oct. 18, and has not since been seen. Mr. Sechler is about twenty-eight years of age, five feet eight inches high, dark complexion, dark mustache and hair. It is believed that he left without his hat and possibly without his coat. Parties are out looking for him in every direction. It is feared that in his deranged condition he may have wandered off to a distance from home or possibly may have perished by exposure. A reward of $100 will be paid to any person bringing him home or returning his body, if found dead, to his home at Orangeville, or to S. S. Shutt, Spencerville, Ind.

A Sensible Rooster.

There is no slang about this heading. It means business, for it has reference to a very business like rooster, the property of H. C. Shull, of this place. This rooster, unlike other feathered bipeds of the male persuasion, does not content himself with standing around and putting on style while the hens do the hard work. He don't fool away all his time in dropping his wing, kicking out his foot, and saying soft things to the females of his flock. Not he. When a meal is to be got, he don't stand around and grumble and turn up his nose and ask what they use so much sugar for, or why they can't eat their corn without cracking, or why they can't climb the sunflower stalks and help themselves. He just calls up the crowd and gives them to understand that it his treat, and that he is going to set up the sunflower seeds for them to-day himself. And he proceeds to make his word good. He goes to a sunflower stalk and hits it a whack with his No. 10 bill, and down come the brown seeds rattling to the ground, and the whole family calmly regale themselves in thankful silence. The old gentleman keeps it up in this way until his ideas of patriarchal hospitality are satisfied. And he don't make them stand around in solemn silence, with watering mouths, while he "waits on the plates" either. He keeps the feed rattling down, and only stops now and then to pick up one for himself, when he sees he is getting too far ahead. The above is a fact well known here, and vouched for by the best of authority, and if any one doubts it, let him call and see for himself. If several other old chickens we could name would be as kind to their families as this old rooster, it would be better.

Twice a Week.

That is about the way it seems to be in the wrecking business at the Junction. In last week's Courier we gave an account of a smash-up there on the previous Saturday evening. At that time the old Jackson freight house and a part of the platform were torn to pieces. Not quite a week later, that is on last Saturday morning, the same thing occurred again, and a part of the same platform was newly torn away. It seems that the Jackson freight train was switching some cars just north of the station and allowed a loaded flat car to run down to the crossing with no one to manage it. A B. & O. east-bound freight, loaded with cattle, was at that moment going across, and was struck by the moving flat. The flat had its end torn off and was knocked from the track. It was loaded with the colossal granite monument for the late Governor Williams, of this state, which was going through to Indianapolis. The shaft and plinth of the monument were thrown off, while the base remained on the car. It sustained no injury except a small scale broken from one side of the shaft. Two cars on the B. & O. train were derailed and smashed, and both trucks somewhat torn up as well as wrecking the platform once more. The wreck car from Garrett came down and soon cleared its track, and its trains were soon going over the road again as usual. The Jackson trains were delayed about an hour longer. These were the south-bound passenger train and the pay car. Quite a number of cattle were let out of the broken cars, and enjoyed an unexpected feed on the green grass and a few hours of what was, no doubt, their last chance of rural liberty.

—I would call particular attentenion to a communication elsewhere in regard to Rev. Daniels sermon recently connected with the temperance question. The article in itself acknowledges that such a sermon was delivered, and that the gentleman handled the proposed amendments, etc. I probably used the word "speech" to save a repetition of language. It may be that each minister of that denomination is requested to deliver a temperance sermon during the year, and from the fact that the time for the delivery of this sermon was selected three weeks before the closing of the present campaign I think the benefit of the doubt as to my article should be given to me.

Reporter.

—George W. Swender, of Coldwater, Michigan, has been spending a few days with his father, J. Swander. He reports good crops in his part of the country, especially of potatoes; of the latter, he raised 123 bushels on a piece of ground five rods wide and twelve rods long.

HANDSOMELY ARRANGED.

A Courier Reporter Shown through J. C. Henry's Drug Store.

Two Departments Largely Stocked.

The sale room on the first floor is used for the display of drugs and retail notions, a complete stock of which is always ready for patrons to select from. The room is large and commodious and the style, arrangement and taste shown by Mr. Henry is indeed remarkable. The jars that occupy the shelves on either side are of the latest pattern and the show-cases look new, bright and beautiful and each article upon the inside is so gracefully placed that they look as though nature had grown them there. The

is attended to by Charles Jackson who is thoroughly acquainted with the duties appertaining to this important position. His long experience, steady habits and attentive business ways make him the right "boy" in the proper place. In the second story we found a large and fine display of comprising everything generally on sale in that line of trade. He also has a handsome notion wagon on the road, drawn by a span of large black horses and presided over by Hiram Weyer—an Auburn boy by birth.

Mr. Henry's business ability and enterprise cannot be questioned, as everything that he is at all interested in shows that spirit of life and vim found in the successful business men of to-day. The Courier wishes him happiness and prosperity through his business and private relations of life and ask our readers, one and all, to deal with so worthy a gentleman when goods in his line are needed.

The New Railroad.

A CONTINUATION OF THE THREE GREAT I'S.

A party of our citizens attended the railroad meeting at Bourbon, Tuesday of this week, to look up Auburn's interest in the new railroad. The delegates from here, were N. Ensley, J. E. Rose, L. Bowers, D. J. Swartz, Joseph Abright, D. D. Snyder and J. A. Barns. They found the people of Bourbon wide awake to their interests and enthusiastically in favor of putting the new road through at an early date. To go into detail. The Iowa, Indiana and Illinois railway, also known as the "Three I's" is already in operation in the three states named, making an extensive line eastward through Streator and Momence, in Ill., and crossing the Cincinnati & St. Louis road at North Judson, in Starke county, Ind. It is this road, that the people of Bourbon are trying to have extended through northern Indiana. As projected, the extension will start from North Judson, and run through Bourbon, Leesburg, Wolf Lake, Port Mitchell, Swan, and terminate at Auburn. This will bring it into town from the southwest going between Cedar Creek station on the Wabash, and Garrett on the B. & O. The plan as laid down by the Bourbon people is to organize a company in accordance with the laws of the state, have a certain amount of stock subscribed, a president and directors appointed and then proceed to secure the right-of-way, and subscriptions or other aid sufficient to grade the road bed. Then a land improvement, company, the name of which we have forgotten, will proceed to build and operate the road. This will give the I., I. & I. an eastern terminous in Auburn, and first-rate connections to all points east of here. This would give its eastern shops a location in Auburn, and make it an object for our people to assist the project. If the shops are not to come here, then it would be merely the addition of another road. As the delegation from the county had no definite instructions, it was left to the people of Bourbon to hold another meeting and take such steps as they think best. Then a second meeting will be called to meet along the line, so the matter stands now. A.M. Jackson and C. R. Wiley, of Wolf Lake, attended the meeting, and at Bourbon the matter is in the hands of Col. Wm. Sears, Dr. Sam'l France, S. E. O'Brien and others, who represent quite an amount of capital.

—We consider it a part of our duty to say to the democratic voters of the county that D. Y. Husselman's physical infirmities and condition have been so that it was impossible for him to make much of a canvass. We hope, however, that all the boys will remember him when they cast their lottery ticket next month.

—We have received the last number of Ridley's Fashion Magazine, a quarterly for the ladies. It is a fine work and will be appreciated by those who feel an interest in matters belonging to the department of fashion. The price is fifteen cents a number, or fifty cents a year. Address, Edward Ridley & Sons 309 Grand st., New York.

Lost.—A small black dog with a white spot on the neck, and bearing a tag "No. 280." Any person giving information where he can by found will be liberally rewarded.

H. A. Winslow.

—Rev. Kelso, pastor of the Lutheran church here, went this week to attend the Lutheran Synod at Three Rivers, Michigan. He was accompanied by N. McIntyre and G. B. Monroe, of Sedan, who are lay delegates to the Synod.

The Catholic Fair.

As had been advertised, the fair began on Monday. A fair audience was in attendance the first night and listened to Mr. Husselman's address, which was well spoken of. No other addresses were made during the week, as it was found that the audience was too much absorbed by the business of the fair to listen to an address. The arrangements for the fair were carefully made, and it proved a complete success. Many articles had been donated by members of the church and friends, both in this place and Fort Wayne. Some of these were sold singly, some by numbers and some of the most valuable were voted away to those whose friends were disposed to pay for the most votes. Votes were rated at ten cents each. On Wednesday evening a gold headed cane was voted away. The contestants were Henry McIntyre, S. H. Snyder, Geo. Lanning and James Eldridge, Mr. McIntyre being the successful man. On Thursday evening was the contest over the lady's gold watch. Miss Louie Henry, Miss Jennie Cowan and Miss Neva Bell received the support of their friends, Miss Louie Henry carrying off the prize. On Friday evening came the contest for a gentleman's easy chair. D. D. Snyder got it after a lively contest, in which he and Dr. Ford and F. E. Davenport were interested. The last contest was Saturday evening. There were two prizes voted for. An upholstered chair for the married lady receiving the most votes, and a platform rocking chair of walnut for the second choice. The contestants were Mrs. J. L. Davis, Mrs. J. A. Barns and Mrs. Isaac Ochs. Mrs. Davis received the first prize and Mrs. Barns the second. The room was full nearly every evening, and the fair passed off quite pleasantly. We understand the net receipts were several hundred dollars.

—George Larimore came over from Avilla last week to make arrangements about getting some of our painters to go over there and assist him, as he is having more work than he can do alone. As present he is giving a great part of his time to carriage painting, and we learn he has done some nice work in that line. We believe he will be a success in his profession, and the good people of Avilla will do well to give him their patronage.

—S. G. Searight, of Butler, was in town last week. He is the lucky inventor of the popular stove drum or heater that bears his name, and is doing a rushing business in selling territories and rights to use it. He is manufacturing them as fast as he can, but is unable to keep up with the demand. It is getting to be an object to save fuel.

—Remember the following dates and give Representative Moody crowded houses. He speaks to-morrow night at Butler; October 28 at Garrett; the 30th at Waterloo, and the 31st at Auburn. He stirs political matters up in a lively manner, and it will benefit all to hear him.

—Rice & Son took a view of the old Granger Hall building as it moved down Fourth street this week. Workmen, horses and all are taken while at work.

Auburn, Ind., Oct., 23d, 1882.

—Mr. Barns:—By action of the quarterly conference of the M. E. church we were appointed a committee to make a correct statement in regard to the sermon delivered by Rev. Daniels on the subject of temperance at the M. E. church, Oct. 15, and misrepresented by your reporter in the last issue of your paper wherein you say: "Our reporter has been reliably informed that Rev. Daniels delivered a republican speech from the pulpit of the M. E. church. He took his text from the proposed amendments and urged his congregation to vote for the republican party."

In the first place, the rules governing the ministry of the M. E. church require a sermon each year at each appointment on the subject of temperance, so that he only discharged his duty as a minister and as a foundation for this sermon he took as a text the fifteenth verse of the second chapter of Habakkuk, instead of the proposed amendments, and delivered a very able gospel temperance sermon, in which he clearly showed it to be the duty of everyone that wished to do right, to do so at all times and in all places, from principle, from a sense of right, regardless of party associations. He gave no advice to polical parties, neither as to the proposed prohibitory amendments, although making some remarks on the subject of prohibition, and we suggest that your reporter and informant compare the reading of the text with the proposed amendments.

I cheerfully add my testimony to the value of Ely's Cream Balm as a specific in the case of my sister, who has been seriously debilitated with Cattarrh for the past eight years, having tried ineffectually other remedies and several speciality doctors in Boston. She improved at once under this discovery, and has gained her health and hearing, which had been considered incurable. Robert W. Merrill, secretary of the Phœnix manufacturing Co., Grand Rapids, Mich. 42-2w.

—The Alexandre's Comedy Co., is a "snide" concern. They came here with out any paper and we furnished them posters, dodgers and dates and when we presented our bill they were busted financially. Printers are generally termed "dead heads," but the plain facts are that we pay more for our show tickets than anyone else.

JESUS OF NAZARETH.

Were it only a myth this wove,
On a lost world's threadbare Hope,
Which could but our longing prove
With the tyrant death to cope,
Still it were sweetest best,
Of dreams dreamed under the sun,
Making men's lives so blest,
By making men's hearts to be one,
There sorrow and gladness meet,
And the crossing of wills it there,
And the living that makes death sweet,
And the dying that makes life dear.
This is the foot of the Cross,
In the perfect type of its kind.
Man learns his gain in a loss,
And his loss is a gain to find;
The life that is freely spent,
And eager itself to give,
To bring to a brother content—
In a love like this men live.
While the life that itself would save,
Setting self all things above,
Dies, ere it reaches the grave,
In the dismal death of love.

A Story of the Fresh-Air Fund

Written for the New York Tribune.

I.

"It's a harum-scarum idea," said Miss Reliance Roxbury, as she stood among the currant bushes at the garden fence. "A most ridiculous idea! I wonder what this gushing American people will do next?" and she gave an emphatic twitch to her purple calico sun-bonnet.

There was a faint murmur of dissent from a little woman on the other side of the moss-grown fence.

"Now—of course you don't agree with me," continued Miss Reliance, as the clusters of pearls and rubies flew into the six-quart pail at her feet. "You're so soft-hearted that your feelings are forever running off with your common sense. You never say a word about the national debt, or the condition o our navy, but let anybody start a subscription for sending blanket shawls to Brazil or putting up a monument to Methuselah on the meeting-house green, you'll give your last quarter And now, you're going to open your house to a lot of little ragamuffins from New York!"

The motherly brown eyes on the other side of the fence were fu'l of tears, and a pleasant voice replied:

"It makes my heart ache to think how the poor things suffer, crowded together in dirty streets, with never a breath of a clover field or a glass of milk. If you'd just read about it, Reliance, you'd think it a blessed privilege to give the a bit of our sunshine."

"I'd as soon have a tribe of Zulus on the place," said Miss Reliance, "and if you'll take my advice you'll save yourself lots of trouble."

Mrs. Lane stopped her work for a moment and said:

"'Liakim and me are all alone now, Reliance. One by one, we've laid Kate and Sarah and baby Lizzie over there in the old burying ground; and Jack is in Colorado, and Richard in Boston, and we get hungry sometimes for little feet. When I began to read about the fresh-air fund it kind of sent a thrill all over me, and 'Liakim he reads about it every day, before he ever looks at the Egyptian war, and he wipes his glasses pretty often, too. Then, when we heard the parson say that a party would come here if places could be found for 'em, 'Liakim spoke right off for four, and they'll be here next Tuesday, and I'm going to make it just as much like heaven as I can."

"You'll make yourself sick, that's what you'll do, Amanda Lane," replied Miss Reliance, "but if you want your garden overrun and your silver spoons stolen, and your house full of flies, and your nerves prostrated, why it's your own fault. I must go in and get my jelly started."

Miss Roxbury went up the path between the sunflowers and hollyhocks, entered the large, sunny, airy kitchen, and sat down the pail of currants for Hannah, the house-maid, to pick over. Then she hung the purple-calico sunbonnet on the nail that for forty years had been devoted to that purpose, and went into the cool sitting-room to rest in her favorite chintz-covered rocker. Miss Reliance Roxbury had been for twenty years, with the exception of a gardener and house-maid, the sole occupant of this ancient stone dwelling, that had stood for more than a century beneath its elms and maples, the pride of the village of Lynford. She was a stern woman, who liked but few people, and had a horror of children, dogs and sentiment. The village boys, with a keen perception of her unsympathetic nature, called her "Old Ironsides."

She was proud of her birth and of the substantial property that had fallen to her at the death of her father, old Judge Roxbury.

She was a member of the Presbyterian church, and paid a high rental for the Roxbury pew, but with that considered that her pecuniary obligations to the cause were at an end. As a general thing, she had not allowed convictions on the subject of giving to trouble her, but somehow, ever since Sunday, when the pastor stated the work of the fresh-air fund and made a fervent appeal for "these little ones that suffer," she had been subjected to numerous vague but uncomfortable sensations. She rocked back and forth in the spacious sitting-room that no fly dare to invade, and noted the perfect order of the apartment. From the china shepherdess on the mantel, to the braided rugs at the doors, everything occupied the same position as in the days of Miss Roxbury's girlhood. There was torture in the thought of having the table-cover pulled away, of seeing the shells and prim old daguerreotypes disarranged on the what-not, of having sand tracked in by small feet over the faded Brussels carpet, and her pet verbena bed invaded by eager young fingers.

Surely, religion and humanity could not demand such sacrifices of her.

"Please, ma'am, the currants is ready to be put over," said Hannah, at the door.

Miss Roxbury rose at once, glad of another channel for her thoughts, but, amid her weighing and measuring, and her careful calculations of pints and pounds, the strange impression did not leave her mind.

After the crimson syrup had been poured into the row of shining tumblers on the table, she returned to her chintz-covered rocker, and took up the Bible to read her daily chapter. Opening it at random, her eyes fell on these words:

"Then shall He answer them, 'Inasmuch as ye did it not unto one o these—'"

Miss Roxbury read no further on that page, but hurriedly turned back to Chronicles, which she felt was perfectly safe ground. But, mingled with the long genealogical tables, she saw other words between the lines, so that the Israelitish records read thus:

"The son of Elkanah, the son of Joel, the son of Azariah. ('Ye did it not.')"

"The son of Tahath, the son of Assir, the son of Ebiasaph, the son of Korah. ('Ye did it not.')"

Finally the whole page seemed to resolve itself into these four monosyllables.

She closed the Bible and put it in its accustomed place on the table, bounded on the north by the lamp, on the south by the match-box, on the east by Bunyan's "Pilgrim's Progress," and on the west by a bunch of worsted roses under a glass case. She was restless, miserable, tormented. She endeavored to read the "Life of Napoleon Bonaparte," but even the thrilling story of the Russian campaign was lacking in interest, compared with her own inward conflict between duty and the cold selfishness of a lifetime.

She did not enjoy the dinner, although the butter-beans were from her own garden, and the black raspberries were the first of the season.

She could not take her accustomed afternoon nap, and for the first time in years the Daily Tribune was unopened. She even put it out of sight in the china closet. A wonderful new design in the Rocky Mountain pattern could not fasten her attention.

She ordered the horse and rockaway and drove four miles after wild cherry bark, for which she had no need as her garret was already a great herbarium.

At last the dreary day came to its close, but was succeeded by an equally uncomfortable night. Amid frequent tossing and waking, Miss Roxbury dreamed of thin little hands stretched out to her in piteous appeal, and of a sad, wonderful voice that said with infinite reproach:

"Ye did it not."

The Rev. Joseph Adler was surprised soon after breakfast the next morning by the appearance of Miss Reliance Roxbury in the parsonage porch. She brought a basket of raspberries, and said:

"I won't come in this time, thank you. I just wanted to say I'll take one—one of those children."

II.

"Mamma, is it mornin'?"

"No, Dot, go to sleep."

The child turned restlessly on the miserable straw pallet in a corner of the small, hot room. It was after midnight, and in summer, but there was a fire in the stove, for the woman at the pine table was ironing by the light of a glimmering tallow candle.

There was no breeze, but in at the one window came stifling, poisonous odors.

Pale and faint, the mother bent over her work, and smoothed the dark calico dress as carefully as if it were the finest muslin and lace. She had worked from early dawn until dark at her daily task, button-holes at four cents a dozen. A cup of tea and a crust o' bread had been her sustenance. For Dot there was a bun and an orange.

The dress was finished and hung on the only chair in the room, with several other articles, A hat of coarse white straw, with a blue ribbon twisted around it, a pair of bright stockings, a tiny handkerchief with a bit of color in the border. All were pitifully cheap in texture, but dear in patient toil and loving sacrifice. Dot was going to the country for two long, blissful weeks, and the mother could cover the expense of the meager outfit by some extra deprivation during the child's absence. She turned toward the pallet. Dot's violet eyes had opened. Her golden curls were tangled by the tossing of the little head on the pillow. Her thin, pinched features were flushed with feverish excitement.

"Mamma, is it mornin'?"

"No, darling."

The woman blew out the light, and threw herself on the pallet. Tiny fingers crept eagerly into her palm.

"Mamma, tell me more about it," pleaded Dot.

"Darling, it is years and years since mamma saw the country, but it was just as I've told you. Wide, clean streets, with big trees and blue sky and flowers."

"Oh, oh!" murmured Dot, "Does you 'spose they'll give me one fower, mamma? I found one on the westite once—a 'ittle w'ite fower. A lady dropped it."

"Yes, dear, you'll have all the flowers you want. Don't talk any more to-night."

The sky was already white with the dawn. The mother did not sleep. As the light of another day of misery crept into the room, she raised herself on one elbow and looked long at her child, restraining an impulse to snatch it to her heart, then softly rose, and after bathing her face and her hands and kneeling in prayer for endurance, took her work and sat down by the narrow window. A few hours later she stood amid the bustle of the Grand Central Depot with Dot clinging to her dress. A crowd of wondering, expectant children were being marshalled into line to take their places on the eastward-bound train.

"Come," said the kind gentleman in charge, to Dot.

Dot kissed her mother "good-by," and laughed even while the tears ran down her face, as she entered the ranks of the odd procession.

"Oh, sir!" said the mother as she turned away, "take good care of my baby. I've nothing else in the world."

III.

There was an unusual stir in the village of Lynford. The railway station was thronged with people, and surrounded by vehicles awaiting the afternoon train.

The Rev. Joseph Alder and the ministers of sister churches conversed together on the platform.

"A glorious charity!" said the Baptist minister, raising his hat to wipe the perspiration from his brow.

"I expect that these poor children will be a great blessing to our people," said the Methodist minister, "in broadening the sympathies and warming the hearts of some whom have been oblivious to all interests save their own."

"Yes," replied the Rev. Mr. Alder, "I have a practical illustration of that, not a stone's-throw from where we are standing."

The "practical illustration" consisted of the Roxbury rockaway drawn up amid the other conveyances, with Miss Reliance on the back seat, in a state of mind in which newly-fledged philanthrophy struggled with a terror of ragamuffins. She had come to the conclusion that her visit to the parsonage had been made during an attack of mental aberration; but the word of a Roxbury was as immovable as the historic granite on which Zephaniah Roxbury stepped from the Mayflower in 1620, and the last representative of the race would not falter now, although seized with dire apprehension whenever her eyes rested on the verbena bed.

It was with a grim determination to brave the worst that she awaited the train that afternoon, but when the locomotive appeared on the bridge below the village, the thought of the dreadful boy who was coming to invade her peaceful domain nearly overcame her, and her impulse was to order the hired man to drive home as quickly as possible. She could appreciate the emotions of a Roman dame at the approach of the Vandals.

As the train stopped at the station the people crowded forward to welcome their guests. Miss Roxbury peered anxiously from the rockaway. It was not a very appalling sight. A group of pale little children, tired, dusty and bewildered. Many eyes overflowed as the train moved on and left these wistful faces, pinched by want and misfortune, in the midst of the kindly villagers.

"Here, Miss Roxbury, is a wee lamb for you," said Mr. Adler.

Miss Roxbury had not observed his approach in the crowd, and gave a start of surprise as he stood before her. As she looked, there was a curious sensation under the left side of her crape shawl, and her cold gray eyes grew misty.

The "dreadful boy" had changed into a tiny girl of six years, as frail as a snowdrop, whose coarse attire could not mar the loveliness of her dark violet eyes and hair of tangled sunbeams. The little creature stretched out her arms to Miss Roxbury, who reached forward and took her into the rockaway, the ancient springs of which creaked with astonishment.

"What is your name?" said Miss Roxbury, feeling strangely awkward as they drove along.

"Dot," said the child. "You hasn't kissed me yet, has you?"

Miss Roxbury bent and kissed the child. The coach creaked louder than before. The touch of the child's mouth thrilled through the iron nerves of the woman with a sensation inexpressibly delightful.

Miss Roxbury had imagined her life to be a happy one. She now discovered that she had mistaken selfish isolation for happiness. She was beginning to be happy for the first time in fifty years. Dot was too tired to be very talkative, but she leaned against Miss Roxbury with a look of quiet wonder and content in her eyes.

"Is I goin' to stay here?" she asked, as the rockaway stopped at the Roxbury gate, and she surveyed the old stone house with wood-bine clambering over its gray walls

"Yes, child."

Dot's face grew luminous. A bath, a bountiful supper of bread and milk and a walk in the garden kept her joyful until twilight, but at bedtime came the longing for her mother.

"I wants my mamma—my own mamma," she said.

Then Miss Roxbury gave full vent to the instinct that can never be utterly destroyed in a woman. Taking the child on her lap in a restful, soothing way, and talked so cheerfully that the shadows fell from the violet eyes, and Dot, nestling close, said: "I love you."

Miss Roxbury had not only begun to be happy; She had begun to live. with the the coming of this sweet child heaven was changing the dull prose of her existence into celestial rhythm, Her cold, loveless nature in the presence of this tiny girl was already becoming Christ-like in its tender ministry.

Dot offered her evening prayer and was put in Miss Roxbury's own stately bed.

"Good night, dear," said Miss Roxbury, with a kiss.

"Dood night," said Dot, burying her face in the great bunch of white roses she had brought to bed with her; "I feel zif I'd died an' gone to heven."

Miss Roxbury passed a wakeful night but not a restless one. Her mind was filled with plans, and then it was such a pleasure to lie and listen to the soft breathing at her side, and occasionally to tuch the little hand on the counterpane, still holding the treasured roses.

The next day Dot ran nearly wild with delight. She reveled among the daisies in the deep, soft grass, and it was pitiful to see how small thing could harm her hungry mind. God's commonest gifts were unknown to her in their bounty and purity. Sunshine, sweet air, flowers and bird-songs were enough to make her happy, and when she found the brook that danced across the meadow her delight was unbroken. After a day or two Miss Roxbury took took the morning train down to Bradleyville to do some shopping. She was gone until night, and all the way home she thought of the glad voice that would welcome her, and her face grew so radiant with the new joy in her soul that when she alighted, laden with parcels, at the Lynford station, old Deacon Bennet failed to recognise her until she had passed him.

"Wall, I declare," he said, "Reliance looks as if she'd diskivered a gold-mine."

Miss Roxbury reached home, and soon had the "gold-mine" in her arms.

After tea the parcels had to be opened. There were paper patterns, rolls of muslin, embroidery and blue flannel, a pair of child's slippers, dainty hose, bright ribbons and a large doll.

"Oh, oh, oh!" was all that Dot could say, but her tone expressed more than the most extensive volume on philanthropy that ever was written. The village dressmaker was installed in the house for a week. The Rocky Mountain patch work was consigned to the seclusion of the spare-room closet, and Miss Roxbury developed a taste in Mother Hubbard dresses and ruffled aprons that was truly marvelous.

In the meantime she wrote a letter to Dot's mother, to which Dot added a picture of the cat, which, although not absolutely true to nature, resembling in fact the plan for a house, was great satisfaction to the young artist. There came no reply to this letter.

Dot's cheeks were getting rosy, and her step buoyant.

"If it wasn't for mamma," she said "I wouldn't want to go back forever'n ever.

When Mr. Knox, the gentleman in charge of the party, called to see that Dot would be ready at the appointed time, Miss Roxbury exclaimed almost fiercely;

"I can't let her go. I need her. Why may I not keep her?"

"I don't believe her mother would part with her," said Mr. Knox.

Miss Roxbury was silent for a few moments, and looked out on the lawn where Dot was swinging in a hammock with the doll and cat.

"It will be a dull house without the child," she said, "but I will bring her to the station."

IV.

When the morning of Dot's departure came, Miss Roxbury arrayed herself in her second-best black silk, put a few articles in a satchel, filled a small basket with fresh eggs, new biscuit, a pat of butter and a bottle of currant wine, and said to Hannah:

"I may be gone two or three days. Have the east chamber thoroughly aired and dusted before I get back, tell Hiram to take a peck of peas down to Mrs. Adler, don't forget to see if those canned strawberries have worked or not, and be sure the front door is kept bolted, and put that last brood of chickens in the other coop, and keep a news paper over the geranium slips in the afternoon."

"Yes, ma'am."

"And, Hannah, be very careful to keep out the flies, and get Hiram to fix the well-curb. He is so apt to forget things."

Dot was bathed in tears as she mounted to her place in the rockaway.

"Isn't I comin' back?" she said.

"I hope so, dear," replied Miss Roxbury, who appeared pre-occupied and anxious, and scarcely heard Dot's chatter on the way to the station.

"Why, Miss Roxbury," said Mr. Adler, as he assisted her to the platform, "you are a veritable fairy godmother. This rosy, dainty maiden cannot be the same bit of humanity that I held in my arms a fortnight ago. You will miss her, will you not?"

"I shall go with her to New York, anyway," said Miss Roxbury, "and I don't mean to come back alone, either. Mr. Adler, I hope God will forgive me for the empty house I've had all these years."

"An empty house means a lonely heart," he replied. "I'm glad you're going with the child."

That afternoon Miss Roxbury and Dot, attended by Mr. Knox, wended their way through a dark alley in one of the most squalid districts of New York city, and climbed flight after flight of rickety stairs in a rear tenement.

The heat, the filth, the scenes of misery were indescribable. Miss Roxbury felt as if she were on the confines of the bottomless pit.

Dot darted down a long passage and disappeared in a room beyond. The friends followed and beheld her clasped tightly in the arms of a wan figure that lay on a pallet. The woman had fainted.

"Mamma, mamma, look at me!" pleaded Dot, and began to cry.

There was no water in the room, and Mr. Knox took a cracked pitcher from the shelf and went with Dot in search of some. Miss Roxbury knelt beside the woman, who was only about thirty years of age, and had been very attractive as a young girl. There was a gleam of gold on her left hand. Her hair was sunny like Dot's, and her features delicately shaped. The letter that Miss Roxbury had written lay crumpled and tear-stained on the pillow.

While Miss Roxbury gazed the woman opened her eyes. They were beautiful eyes, but sad with want and a struggle against despair. She tried to sit up and moaned:

"My baby—please give me my baby!"

Just then Dot returned and carried the pitcher of water to her mother, who drank long and eagerly; then holding out her arms to Dot, said feebly to Miss Roxbury:

"Oh, madam, will you take care of my little girl? I think I'm going to die."

"You're not going to die—not a bit of it," said Miss Roxbury, pouring out some wine into a teacup, "but I'll take care of you both. There, drink this and you'll feel better right away. How long since you've had anything to eat?"

"Day before yesterday," was the faint reply. "I had to stop work four days ago."

"Now, Mr. Knox," said Miss Roxbury, slipping her purse into his hand, "just step out to the nearest grocery and order some kindling wood and tea and sugar. I'll poach a nice fresh egg for this poor soul, and we'll see about getting her out of this place."

"Trouble," said Miss Roxbury. "I'm all alone in the world, and I've a house with twenty-four rooms in it, and plenty to do with, and what I've been thinking of all these years I can't say. I've been a crusty, cold, disagreeable old fossil, Mrs. Winthrop, and when I come down here and find 'olks starving to death and crowded like cattle, I wonder the good Lord's had any mercy on me. Don't you worry another mite. Here's the fire-stuff already."

Miss Roxbury rolled up her sleeves; put an apron over her silk skirt, and while Mr. Knox built a fire and brought water to heat, she bathed Mrs. Winthrop's face and hands, and brushed out her hair.

"Thank God! why, I'm better already," said Mrs. Winthrop with a rare smile.

"Of course you are, child," said Miss Roxbury, "We'll see what good food and mountain air will do for you yet."

A few days later found an occupant in the great east chamber of the Roxbury house.

Mrs. Winthrop sat in an easy chair before the open window inhaling the fragrance of the blossoming honeysuckle that nodded to her through the casement.

The morning sunlight fell across her bright hair and peaceful face.

Dot hung over her shoulder, and threw daisies in her lap.

Down by the garden fence stood Miss Roxbury, talking with her neighbor, Mrs. Lane.

Mrs. Winthrop smiled from her window, and there came an answering smile from the depths of the purple and calico sunbonnet.

"So you're really goin' to keep 'em?" said Mrs. Lane.

"Yes, I've adopted both of 'em," replied Miss Roxbury: with a Te Deum in her voice, "and I've sent for half a dozen little girls to stay until cold weather."

"Well, it does beat all," said Mrs. Lane, wiping her eyes on the corner of her checked gingham apron. "I 'spose I needn't ask you now, Reliance, what you think of the Fresh air Fund?"

"What do I think of it?" said Miss Roxbury, gravely. "I believe it's been the means of saving my soul. I should have gone into the next world holding my head pretty high, and considering myself better than most folks, and the Judge would have said, Reliance Roxbury, I gave you a large house and a long bank account. What have you done with them? Then how my empty rooms and Grandfather Roxbury's gold pieces would have stood up against me. And He would have said: "Ye did it not unto Me. Depart from Me," and what answer could I have made him? "It is very true," she continued, as Dot came flitting down the path like a fairy, "of such is the Kingdom of Heaven."

The Cats of Cairo.

Gentleman's Magazine.

Among the curiosities of Cairo is an amateur branch of the Humane Society for the especial benefit of poor Puss. A curious legacy was some years ago left by a wealthy burgher to enlarge the permanent income of the Cadi, on condition of his nourishing and cherishing all the unclaimed cats in Cairo. Like most Mahomedans he must have shared the feeling which made the Prophet cut off the wide sleeve of his robe sooner than disturb a favorite cat who had fallen asleep thereon. Consequently a large court-yard has been devoted to their especial benefit; and here the "nice, soft furry creatures" lie and bask in the sun, and are fed at stated intervals, and altogether have a very good time of it. It is a curious fact, however, that although daily additions are made to this large feline home, the inmates rarely amount to more than fifty. This (in the absence of sausage machines) is a very remarkable problem. I suppose that a candidate for the office of Cadi has to produce a medical certificate to prove that he is not troubled with that unconquerable aversion to dear old Puss with which so many of the masculine genus are afflicted.

The said aversion was one day turned to excellent account by one of our mutual friends, whose next neighbor in chambers made himself odious by practicing on a cornet, or big fiddle, or some such instrument of torture, in spite of the civil entreaties of our friend, who was nearly wild with headache. At last, exasperated beyond endurance, he sallied forth and invested in a large packet of valerian, which he sprinkled on the low roofs below the windows. Of course, in half an hour all the cats in the neighborhood had assembled, and crazy with delight, issued cards of invitation to all their acquaintances, and very soon the army of cats, each more mad than its neighbor, were dancing and scrambling, fighting and miauling, till the barbarian with the musical ear rack was tearing his hair in a frenzy nearly as wild as the cats. His neighbor was so delighted at the success of his little joke that his headache was cured. Meanwhile a shower of rain washed the valerian into the court-yard below. Then every one who walked across the court brought in particles thereof on the soles of his feet; and the cats found their way upstairs by scores, even into the chambers of the cat-hater, who, on the whole, was very fairly punished.

They seem to have the same affection for very young nemophila, and come and lie down and roll on it in the most aggravating way. Speaking of cats, it is not startling to hear that the cats of London—the real household pets—are said to number 300,000, without any sort of calculation for houseless wanderers, whose nasal yells disturb nocturnal peace? The amount annually spent on purchasing horse flesh from the cat's meat men in London is said to be £100,000. This, according to vulgar notions, should be a proof of the folly of elderly spinsters, who are generally supposed to have a monopoly of feline affections. The great cat show in London a few years ago, however, betrayed a very different state of domestic matters, the male exhitors being so numerous and so successful that they carried off thirty-two prizes; fifteen more were secured by cat-loving matrons, while to the much maligned old maids there were only awarded four prizes.

Logging in Nevada.

A chute is laid from the river's bank up the steep mountain to the railroad, and while we are telling it, the monster logs are rushing, thundering, flying, leaping down the declivity. They come with the speed of a thunderbolt, and somewhat of its roar. A track of smoke and fire follows them—fire struck by the friction with the chute logs. They descend the 1,700 feet of the chute in fourteen seconds. In doing so they drop 700 feet perpendicularly. They strike the deep water with a report that can be heard a mile distant. Logs fired from a cannon could scarcely have greater velocity than they have at the foot of the chute. The average velocity is over 100 feet a second throughout the the entire distance and at the instant they leap from the mouth their speed is 200 feet per second.

A sugar-pine log some times weighs ten tons. What a missle! How the water is dashed into the air! Like a grand plume of diamonds and rainbows the feathery spray is hurled to a height of 100 feet. It forms the grandest fountain ever beheld. How the water foams and seethe, and lash es against the shore! One log having spent its force by its mad plunge to the deep waters, has floated so as to be at right angles with the path of the descending monsters. The mouth of the chute is perhaps fifteen feet above the surface of the water. A huge log, hurled from the chute, cleaves the air and alights on the floating log. You know how a bullet glances; but can you imagine a saw-log glancing? The end strikes with a heavy shock, but glides quickly past for a short distance, then with a crash like the reverberation of artillery, the falling log springs vertically into the air, and, with a curve like a rocket, falls into the water a long distance from the log it struck.

A Kansas story is about three mice that rolled an egg down a stairway without breakage. One held the egg in a close embrace, while the others rolled him like a ball from one step to another, always managing to let him strike on his back, thus protecting the egg. How the man who told this lie got down stairs is not known.

A contemporary asks: "How shall women carry their purses to frustrate the thieves?" Why, carry them empty. Nothing frustrates a thief more than to snatch a woman's purse, after following her half a mile, and then find that it contains nothing but a recipe for spiced peaches and a faded photograph of her grandmother."

"Remember," said the venerable Brother Gardner, as he brought the proceedings of the Lime Kiln Club to a close the other evening, "Remember, as we percolate homewards, dat while a pusson may have a voice like a tornady an' a mouth like a woodshed, de man who winks with his left eye allus gets de bes' glass of soda water."

At a company, the following question was put: "How does the little ground-squirrel dig his hole without throwing any dirt about the entrance?" When all had given it up, except an Irishman, that witty guest said: "Sure, do you see, he begins at the other end of the hole!" One of the guests asked: "But how does he get there?" "Ah!" said the Irishman, "that's your question. Can you answer it yourself?"

AN ANIMATED LIVER PAD.

What Made a Christian on Probation Have a "Hot Box."

Peck's Sun.

The bad boy was coming along, on the way home from Sunday-school, with a clean shirt on and a Testament and some dime novels under his arm.

"What has got into you, and what has come over your pa?" asked the grocery man. "I see he has braced up and looks pale and solemn. You haven't converted him, have you?"

"No, pa has not got religoin enough to hurt him yet, but he has got the symptoms. He has joined the Church on probation and ma said pa had got to be on trial for six months before he could get in the Church, and if he could get along without swearing and doing anything bad he was all right. She said she thought a person, when they was on a probation, ought to be a martyr, and try to overcome all temptations to do evil, and if pa could go through six months of our home life, and not cuss the hinges off the door, he was sure of a glorious immortality beyond the grave. She said it wouldn't be wrong for me to me to continue to play innocent jokes on pa, and if he took it in all right he was a Christian, but if he got in a hot box, and flew around mad, he was better out of the Church than in it."

"There he comes now," said the boy, as he got behind a sign, "and he is pretty hot for a Christian. He is looking for me."

"You ought to have seen pa in Church this morning. You know he wears a liver-pad. Well, on Saturday my chum and me was out on the lake shore and we found a nest of little red ants, and I got a pop bottle half full of the ants, and took them home. I did not know what I would do with the ants, but ants are always handy to have in the house. This morning when pa was a dressing for Church, I saw his liver-pad on a chair, and noticed a hole in it, I thought what a good place it would be for the ants. I don't know what possessed me, but I took the liver-pad into my room, and opened the bottle, and put the hole over the mouth of the bottle, and I guess the ants thought there was something to eat in the liver-pad, 'cause they all went into it, and crawled around in bran and condition powders inside of it, and I took it back to pa, and he put it on under his shirt, and dressed himself, and we went to Church. Pa squirmed a little when the minister was praying, and I guess some of the ants had come out to view the landscape o'er. When we got up to sing the hymn pa kept kicking as though he was nervous, and he felt down his neck, and looked sort of wild, the way he did when he had the jimjams. When we sat down pa couldn't keep still, and I like to died when I saw some of the ants come out of his shirt bosom and go racing around his white vest. Pa tried to look pious and resigned, but he couldn't keep his legs still.

"When the minister preached about the worm that never dieth, pa reached into his vest and scratched his ribs, and he looked as though he would give ten dollars if the minister would get through. Ma she looked at pa as though she would bite his head off; but pa, he just squirmed, and acted as though his soul was on fire. Well when the minister said amen and prayed the second round, and then said, a brother who was a missionary to the heathen would like to make a few remarks about the work of the missionaries in Bengal, and take up a collection, pa told ma they would have to excuse him, and he lit out for home, slapping himself on the legs and the arms and on the back, and he acted crazy. Ma and me went home after the heathen got through, and found pa in his bedroom, with part of his clothes off, and the liver pad on the floor and pa stamping on it with his boots and talking offul.

"'What is the matter?' says ma, 'Don't your religion agree with you?'"

"'Religion be dashed,' says pa, as he kicked the liver pad. 'I would give ten dollars to know how a pint of red ants got into my liver pad,' and he scowled at ma as though he would kill her.

"'Don't swear, dear, says ma, as she threw down her hymn book, and took off her bonnet. You should be patient. Remember Job was patient, and he was afflicted with boils.'"

"'I don't care' says pa, as he chased the ants out of his drawers. 'Job never had ants in his liver pad. If he had he would have sworn the shingles off a barn. Here you, says pa, speaking to me, 'you head them ants off running under the bureau. If the truth was known I believe you are responsible for this outrage.' And pa looked at me kind of hard.

"'O, pa,' says I, with tears in my eyes, 'Do you think your little Sunday-school boy would catch ants in a pop bottle on the lake shore, and bring them home, and put them in the holes of your liver pad, just before you put it on to go to church? You are too bad.' And I shed some tears. But it didn't do any good this time. Pa knew it was me, and while he was looking for the shawl strap I went to Sunday-school, and now I guess he is after me, and I will go and take a walk down to Bay View."

The boy moved off as his pa turned the corner, and the groceryman said, 'Well, that boy beats all I ever saw. If he was mine I would give him away."

Indiana Counterfeiters.

The largest capture of counterfeiters ever known in the State was made at Tipton Wednesday night. About a year ago a young man in Tipton named R. D. Hobbs, informed the secret service department of the government that counterfeiters were operating in that section of the State. He collected considerable evidence and six months ago William Kennock, a regular detective for the government, was sent to Tipton to work up the case. As soon as he could get within range of the counterfeiters he gave out to them that he was a paper money counterfeiter himself. By this means he was taken into close confidence by the gang. He made various purchases of spurious coin from them at intervals, and thereby accumulated evidence. In the prosecution of his work he was assisted by Hobbs, and both were under the orders of Special Agent Rathbone. Having obtained all necessary evidence, arrangements were made to arrest the entire gang at once. To this end, United States Marshall Foster, with Rathbone, Kennock, Deputies Fisk, Barnecio, Hart, Whiteman and Griffin went to Tipton Wednesday. Kennock had it arranged that the counterfeiters should be in town at night. They all came according to engagement. The officers were stationed in an alley. Kennock got the gang separated and brought them by twos to the alley, where they were immediately nippel by the officers in ambush. The game was very well played, and not one got away. The captives last night included James Small, Jacob Masters, Christopher A Masters, William Shop, Jacob B Johnson, A A Smith, Jasper N Wright, George King, Joseph F Small, Charles Booth, John T Small and Lorenzo Haworth. These men were brought to the city at noon, Thursday, and lodged in jail. Two days ago Rathbone, Kennock and Hobbs arrested James Campbell, Harvey Gerpester and William Crull, members of the same coterie, who were on a train going to Logansport ostensibly on a hunting trip to Cass county. These men have been in the city ever since, but they have been kept concealed from the reporters. Evidence having been secured going to show that John Keating, a saloon keeper, of this city, was mixed up in the operations of the counterfeiters, he was arrested by the police this morning on a telegram from Rathbone. The man Haworth lives in Hamilton county and is a son of Isaac Haworth, who was sent to prison for counterfeiting, by Judge Gresham, some months ago. His attorney, who is in the city, says that Haworth is guiltless. The counterfeiters are mostly farmers, although other vocations are represented. Shope who is a lawyer, and Johnson, one of the leaders.

She Wasn't as Familiar with Cows as She Might Be.

A good story comes across here from the Seaside House, where a gay company are staying and passing away the time delightfully. Among the guests of the house is the son of a wealthy stock breeder of Eastern Oregon, whose father is possessed of "cattle upon a thousand hills." The young man is quite reduced by malaria and spends much of his time on the porch, snuffing the cool sea breezes. Of course the young man has great expectations and is regarded as a grand prize in the matrimonial lottery.

One of the young ladies in the house, who is very highly cultivated as a musician and linguist, resolved to show this youthful "broadhorns millionaire" that she possessed other accomplishments than those taught at St. Helen's hall. Accordingly, one morning last week, just as the bunch-grass youth took his station on the front porch, the young lady came out where the cows were nibbling the grass on the lawn. She was dressed in a polka-dot calico gown and a gypsie hat, and a prettier dairy-maid never was seen, as she tripped across the lawn with a tin pail in one hand and a milking stool in the other. Selecting one of the herd which stood more quietly than the rest, she walked up and began patting the animal on the neck, without noticing that the bovine had rather short horns and a curly forehead as well as a heavy crest.

She patted this one and said "So bossy."

"Boo—oo—oo—oo," responded the bovine animal of the beef persuasion.

"So boss, suke, sukey," pleaded the young lady.

"Boo—oo—oo—oo," reiterated the proprieter of the powder horns.

The young lady put down her stool and took her seat. Just as she was about to place the pail between her prayer-bones the invalid on the porch broke into a loud guffaw, while the patriarch walked off to join the sisters of the flock as the young lady sought the seclusion of her boudoir, where she gave way to an uncontrollable flood of tears. Thus perish all our hearts' fondest hopes! Thus is the soul left desolate and bare!

The young man from Heppner returned to Astoria that afternoon and took the steamer for San Francisco the next morning. The young lady will never recover from this rude shock to her delicate nerves—in fact she thinks of entering a convent on her return to Portland. In the long and weary years of celibracy to which she is now doomed, memory will bring back to her the grassy lawn, with the clear sky overhead, cloudless as the smile of the Infinite himself; and the deep blue sea stretcheng far away dotted with a thousand white winged messengers of commerce, bearing their peaceful errands to and fro. And as her saddened heart recalls the halcyon picture of that fair July morn at Clatsop,

The eye that strains to watch
Will tell, through falling tears,
How passing fair they shone,
How dusk have grown the years.

A Louisiana Jail.

Cincinnati Gazette.

To northern eyes it must appear as a very strange structure, built as it is of logs, and with walls three feet thick. So often have prisoners escaped that many peculiar precautions have been taken to prevent it. Between the log walls, which are double, is arranged a row of upright poles, so if some poor wretches in confinement should succeed in sawing through one of the walls they would strike the poles, and as these are not fastened at the top they would keep drooping down just as fast as the man kept sawing. The sheriff calculated that a carpenter with all his tools could not saw a hole through those walls in twenty-four hours. Doors are invariably a prison's week points, but in this Louisiana jail that difficulty is avoided by having nothing but trap-doors in the roof. A stairway runs up the outside of the building, by which the prisoners ascend, and then they are dropped down into one of the four large rooms beneath. They are fed in the same manner. The sheriff takes their rations, which he said consisted of "hog, hominy and molasses," upon the roof and then lowers it down. The windows of the institution are quite small, and covered with three grates, in addition to an iron fender, with spikes, on the outside. In order to prevent any one from "scratching out," the floor has been constructed in an unusual way. The ground on which the jail stands, and for some distance outside the walls has been removed, and to the depth of four feet filled in with large stones, which are firmly cemented together. On top of this stone platform two sections of logs have been transversely, which are securely fastened together by means of numerous iron spikes. Finally, resting on the logs is four inch planking, which is fairly studded with nails. In spite of these many precautions, prisones frequently, by help of outside parties, make their escape; but now, as the country is becoming more and more settled and the desperadoes are being thinned out, such occurrences are growing rare.

Javanese Gamelang and Dancing.

London World.

As an Autumn novelty we are to have a troupe of Javanese gamelang and players and dancers, consisting of "fourteen gentlemen and four ladies." The gamelang, the reader will doubtless require to be told, is an orchestra consisting of a series of gongs, from the double-bass instrument five feet in circumference to the diminutive treble of as many inches in breadth. The small gongs are arranged on stands according to certain scales understood by the Javanese, and all are beaten with drumsticks of varying shape. There are also several bamboo harmonicons, and good orchestras comprise as well the plaintive suling (a small bamboo flute) and the rebab (one-stringed fiddle); but I am unable to say whether these instruments will be found in the company that is shortly to make its bow at the royal aquarium. The gongs cost a deal of money, and give forth very mellow sounds, which, heard from a distance, remind the traveler of his village bells. The rebab is also at times a times a very expensive instrument, and fetches a high price for much the same reasons that violins do in Europe. It usually finds a place of honor in the reception hall of Javanese Princes wealthy enough to afford such a luxury, which far from all are. The serimpis, or female dancers, are, of course, as gorgeously attired as funds will admit of, and their garments are of a shape worn by no one else, defying description by means of European similes. The singing, being Eastern, is, of course, nasal, and overladen with exasperating slow shakes and runs. The dancing is merely a post ring in slow time, grace being given to the movements by means of a long silk scarf (slendang), which if waved in the air and twined about the dancer's person. That the performance will satisfy our musical taste I do not anticipate; but it may be curious to learn what sort of harmony it is that pleases the educated Javan, and even soothes him in his hour of sickness. So recently as last year a splendid gamelang, which costs as much as £3,000, was sent to Holland, at the expense of the late Mangko Negoro, Prince of Solo (Java), to play before the King. Although the thing was done better than would have been possible in other hands, the success attained was very qualified indeed.

"Without Any Beard."

London Temple Bar has this: "The King of Spain sent an Ambassador to the Pope—a young man of high extraction—with a special mission. The Pope, informed that a special Envoy of the King of Spain demanded an audience, imagined that he would receive an aged Minister, covered with stars and venerable with white hairs, ect. Instead of which in walked, with light, elastic steps, quite a young man. Haughty and irritable, the Pope looked at him, and at last said: 'Are all the old diplomatists in Spain dead that the King sends us a young boy without even a beard?' ('Um jeune homme imberbe?' 'Holy Father,' said the indiggnt Spaniard, 'if the King, my master, had thought that honor consists in a beard, he would have sent you a goat, and not a nobleman like myself.'"

To which the Cincinnati Commercial:

"This anecdote reminds us of an incident in the history of early Methodism in Northern Ohio. A preacher had been appointed to a new circuit, and wore on his first round a fashionable broadcloth frock coat, which his tailor had innocently provided for him. This became a source of grievance to the homespun leity, and it was finally resolved to make it a matter of discipline. So at the first quarterly conference charges were prepared in due form, and the offending minister notified to be present and make answer. Entering the room where the Presiding Elder and lesser magnates were assembled, the preacher stripped off his coat, hung it on the back of a chair, and pointing to it said: 'Since it is the coat that offends, try it. Could I preach any sounder gospel in robe or cassock It seems to me it is not the manner of the coat, but the manner of the man of in the coat that should be considered.' And there the trial ended."

Rough Lesson to a Bank Depositor.

Toronto (Can.) Mail.

A practical lesson was taught to a bank depositor a few days ago in the Queen street branch of the Dominion Bank. It appears he called to deposit about $5,000, which he laid on the counter, and then turned round to speak to an acquaintance. On again facing the counter the money was gone, and consternation reigned supreme. The depositor accused a painter, who was at work near the counter, of abstracting the money, and threatened to call in constable if it were not at once given up. While proceeding to carry out his threat he happened to look toward the counter, and to his amazement he saw the missing package of money lying in the exact spot where he had laid it. One of the bank officals explained the mystery by stating that on entering the office from a back room, and seeing the money so carelessly displayed, he picked it up and carried it away to teach the depositor a lesson to be more careful in the future and then quietly returned it. An apology was tendered the accused painter, and all unpleasantness was removed.

Catharine Cox, of Fayette township, Vigo county, is in jail at Terre Haute, charged with infanticide. The complaint was made by Hanna Cox, her sister. The accused protests that she is innocent, stating that the death of the child was the result of an assault made upon her by her father, John Wesley Cox, before the child's birth, and that it lived only a few minutes after being born. Her husband is named Christburg, but she does not live with him.

On the 2nd inst. steamers carrying 360,000 bushels of wheat left New Orleans for foreign ports.

THE COWBOY DUEL.

How Six Fought it Out—One of the Most Remarkable Encounters on Record.

Particulars of the duel which The News gave in outline in its telegraphic columns last week are given by the Denver Republican. The trouble arose between Howard and Kelley, two cattle owners, whose droves became mixed while on the trail. They agreed to settle it by picking six on a side of their cowboys, and place them in line on horseback fifty yards apart, to give the word "fire," and let the result settle it. The proposition was hailed with delight by the men of each side, and volunteers were numerous. There was no time lost in preparing for the duel, which was to be the greatest affair of the kind ever known. The men of the opposing sides retired to their camps and coolly made preparations for the feast of death. They groomed their horses, oiled and cleaned their revolvers, and putting their saddles on with care rode out to fight. Kelley's men were armed with Winchester revolvers, 38 and 44-caliber, long barreled, and Howard's six carried Colt's improved. Each man knew his weapon and his horse, and each were fully aware of the fact that the men standing so grimly in front of them were equally well equipped. The opposing duelists were drawn up in line facing each other at 3 o'clock in the afternoon. The sight was one which few men have looked upon. Fifty yards apart stood, like statues, two lines of men. Horse and rider almost one. Every duelist grasping a huge, glistening revolver in each hand, with the reins in his teeth or hanging loosely, for these wild, fierce dare-devil riders of the south guide their horse, with their knees, as the scarcely more savage Indian does. Around about carelessly in range of stray bullets, were the friends of both parties, mounted on their horses watching the fight and to see that no advantage should be taken; at either side the chief, who had sent these men out to die. Over all brooded a death-like silence, while on all the swelling, rolling, silent plain shone the gold of the bright September sun. If a painter could catch that picture it would be a thing for the coming civilization to wonder at. The man who was detailed to give the word which was destined to create a whirlwind of death started forward. At the first move there was a shiver of life along both lines, but it was not a shiver of fear. Each man straightened himself, grasped his pistols the firmer and singled out his opponent. The umpire lifted his hand and suddenly on the still air came the cry of doom, "fire!" At the word twelve pistol shots rang out. Three of Howard's men threw up their hands and fell from their horses, while only one of Kelly's men fell. Kelly's men, not heeding their comrade's death, sped straight toward the three men in front of them. The latter dropped their pistols in their bridle hands and pulled their horses up, while their five enemies came riding swiftly on, pouring a hail of bullets in from a pistol in either hand. The Howard men saw the odds they were too great, and turning swiftly they ran, turning in their saddles as they flew and bravely returning the fire. In three brief minutes the duel was fought and won, and four dead men lay upon the ground. Frank rode up to Howard and said; "Now you and I will settle with each other." "No," replied Howard, as he looked sadly at the dead men, "I am satisfied." "Very well," said Kelly, and orders were given to exchange the cattle.

A Fearful String.

Louisville Commercial.

A peculiar case of poisoning was developed yesterday in the case of Mar. Conrad, the tobacconist, who lives on Market street, near Thirty-fourth. attached to the house in which he lives is a very large yard. For some years back Mr. Conrad has been much interested in floriculture, working in his garden every morning and evening. Early yesterday morning just before breakfast he was trimming some dead sprigs from a small rose-bush in one corner of his yard, when he heard something hiss. He naturally looked all about him for the source the strange noise. He thought that some one of the family was concealed in the bushes trying to frighten him. Seeing no one about he went on with his work, but, still the strange noise kept on. He arose from his work several times, thinking that he would catch sight of the person playing the prank. He had trimmed the whole bush and was preparing to answer the call to breakfast, when he discovered down near the root of the bush another dead twig. He stopped to cut it.

On account of the thick foliage of the neighboring bushes he had to cut the twig without seeing it. He took hold of the dead member and had just gotten the clippers upon it when he felt a painful sting in the fleshy part of the right hand, and at the same time his ear marked the cessation of the strange noise. He jerked in his hand upon feeling the prick, but to his great horror there came along with, and fastened to it, a large mottled snake with a head on it like a shovel. The snake measured about to feet in length and about six inches round the largest part of its body. It had sunk its teeth into his hand and still held its grip. So tightly had it fastened upon him that no amount of shaking or pulling could induce him to drop off. He ran to the house with the snake dangling from his hand. He rushed into the dining-room. At the sight of the snake the women ran shrieking from the room, and it was some time before he could obtain assistance. At first every one thought that he was trying to frighten them, but one look at his livid countenance served to destroy all such thought of jokes and sport. Almost every conceivable scheme was tried to loosen the hold of the reptile, but without avail. The reptile's tail was cut, his head beaten, and his whole body dipped into boiling water, but still he held on to the terrified man. A large crowd soon collected, and an old colored woman, experienced with all kinds of crawling animals, volunteered her services. She said he would never let go till it thundered, and accordingly set about to make some of it artificially. But before this could be successful, she said that a hole must be made for him, for unless he saw shelter convenient, he would hold on forever. She procured a large stocking and held it close to his head, with his tail aloft, while a man in the next room beat a base drum. The first thump that was given the snake loosened his hold like a flash of lightning and he dropped into the stocking, where he was killed.

From the time he bit to the time he released his hold one whole hour was consumed. Mr. Conrad's hand began to swell and change color, turning to a bright yellow tinge. Dr. Dekerty was called in When he arrived Mr Conrad's whole arm was swollen. He was unconscious, frothed at the mouth, twitched violently in every muscle, suffering excruciating pain, and showing every symptom of blood poisoning. Proper antidotes were administered, and for a while his life was despaired of, but at last accounts he was still living and considered out of danger. The reptile was a spreading viper.

Diving for Alligators.

From the Florida Times.

Jim Russel, the son of the Maj. Russell, famous during the Florida war, now makes a precarious living in South Florida as a guide to visiting sportsmen. For a bonus of $2 Jim will dive into the current of the muddy St. Johns and bring up alligator. He actually brings them out of their holes. Strange as this may seem. They dig holes in the river banks just below the surface of the water and crawl into them. Jim dives down, crawls in rapidly and seizes the saurian by the tail, who startled, immediately backs out. Jim holds on, keeping his legs stiff till clear of the bank when he darts away, and the 'gator rising to the surface for an instant to see what is the matter is immediately slain by waiting gunners in the boat.

The adherents of Don Carlos, in Spain, have decided to depose him, because of his wicked course of life, and will make his son, Prince James, the head of the Legitimist party.

SIMMONS LIVER REGULATOR

BAD BREATH!

Nothing is so unpleasant, nothing so common as bad breath, and in nearly every case it comes from the stomach, and can be so easily corrected if you will take Simmons Liver Regulator. Do not neglect so sure a remedy for this repulsive disorder. It will also improve your Appetite, Complexion, and General Health.

PILES!

How many suffer torture day after day, making life a burden and robbing existence of pleasure, owing to the secret suffering from Piles. Yet relief is ready to the hand of almost any one who will use systematically the remedy that has permanently cured thousands. Simmons' Liver Regulator, is no drastic violent purge; but a gentle assistant to nature.

CONSTIPATION!

Should not be regarded as a trifling ailment—in fact nature demands the utmost regularity of the bowels, and any deviation from this demand paves the way often to serious danger. It is quite as necessary to remove impure accumulations from the bowels as it is to eat or sleep, and no health can be expected where a costive habit of body prevails.

SICK HEADACHE!

This distressing affliction occurs most frequently. The disturbance of the stomach, arising from the imperfectly digested contents, causes a severe pain in the head, accompanied with disagreeable nausea, and this constitutes what is popularly known as Sick Headache.

Cathartic Pills

Combine the choicest cathartic principles in medicine, in proportions accurately adjusted to secure activity, certainty, and uniformity of effect. They are the result of years of careful study and practical experiment, and are the most effectual remedy yet discovered for diseases caused by derangement of the stomach, liver, and bowels, which require prompt and effectual treatment. Ayer's Pills are specially applicable to this class of diseases. They act directly on the digestive and assimilative processes, and restore regular healthy action. Their extensive use by physicians in their practice, and by all civilized nations, is one of the many proofs of their value as a safe, sure, and perfectly reliable purgative medicine. Being compounded of the concentrated virtues of purely vegetable substances, they are positively free from calomel or any injurious properties, and can be administered to children with perfect safety.

Ayer's Pills are an effectual cure for Constipation or Costiveness, Indigestion, Dyspepsia, Loss of Appetite, Foul Stomach and Breath, Dizziness, Headache, Loss of Memory, Numbness, Biliousness, Jaundice, Rheumatism, Eruptions and Skin Diseases, Dropsy, Tumors, Worms, Neuralgia, Colic, Gripes, Diarrhœa, Dysentery, Gout, Piles, Disorders of the Liver, and all other diseases resulting from a disordered state of the digestive apparatus.

As a Dinner Pill they have no equal.

While gentle in their action, these Pills are the most thorough and searching cathartic that can be employed, and never give pain unless the bowels are inflamed, and then their influence is healing. They stimulate the appetite and digestive organs; they operate to purify and enrich the blood, and impart renewed health and vigor to the whole system.

Invisible Poison.

HOW IT WORKS ITS WAY INTO THE BODY AND HOW TO COUNTERACT IT.

One of the great scourges of the present year in all parts of America has been malaria. This is a trouble so treacherous in its nature and so dangerous in its results as to justly cause apprehension wherever it has appeared. But there are so many erroneous ideas upon the subject that a few words are in order at a time when people are subject to malarial influences.

Malaria, which means simply bad air, is the common name of a class of diseases which arise from spores of decaying vegetable matter, thrown off from stagnant pools, or piles of vegetation undergoing decomposition. These spores when inhaled with the breath or taken into the system with water soon enter the blood and germinating there find a foothold whereby the whole system is poisoned and the various functions disordered. When the germ theory of disease was first advanced it was supposed that these spores were of animal nature, and like the bacteria in diptheria were propagated in the blood, but they are now conceived to be of vegetable origin like the fungi found on decaying wood or in cellars. The source of this state of the air is generally swamps or stagnant pools, which, partially dried by the hot sun, sent forth vapors loaded with this malarial poison. These vapors descend to the earth in the night, cooled by the loss of temperature, and breathed by sleepers are readily inhaled. Hence persons living near stagnant pools or marshes are liable to be afflicted with chills and fever, and such localities are never healthy, though they are more so when the streams flowing into them are pure, and also when the water is high. Again the drainage of houses, slaughter houses, barns, etc., is a fertile source of malaria. One will often notice in coming into the neighborhood of one of these sluggish streams that pass through almost every village a most villainous smell caused by the offensive refuse which communicates its bad oder to the atmosphere, especially in hot days. This absorbed into the system by the lungs or taken in through water, which also absorbs it from the air, poisons the blood and deranges the whole system. This poison is also developed in force in wells and springs when they become low, and the result of drinking these is the same as breathing the poisonous air. In a time of drouth the great quantity of vegetation that dries up in the meadows, stubble fields and pastures, the corn fields and forest leaves produces the same effluvia. On the prairies when large tracts of prairie ground are turned over, the decaying vegetation is a widespread cause of malaria.

The evils which follow malarial poisoning are almost infinate. Disease of a malignant and dangerous nature, accompanied by symptoms the most distressing are certain to manifest themselves and life a burden so long as this poison remains in the system. The indications of malarial poisoning are loss of appetite, shortness of breath, pains about the heart, wasting of strength and flesh, despondency, nervousness, chilly sensations, unaccountable lassitude, dull pains in various parts of the body, headaches, dizziness, a coated tongue and dry mouth, night sweats, muscular debility, puffing under the eyes, an unusual color, odor or sediment about the fluids passed from the system, etc. Any one of the above symptoms may be an indication of malarial poison in the body which necessitated immediate and careful attention.

But if malarial poison could not find a lodgment in the human body, it would be just as harmless as the oxygen of the air. The great difficulty is that, after being absorber into the system, it produces obstructions in the stomach and lungs, clogs the circulation of the blood, affects the kidneys, liver and other organs, and brings on disease of a most dangerous character. There is only one known way by which these diseases may be avoided or cured after they have once made their appearance, and that is by keeping the great purifying organs of the body in perfect health. These organs are the kidneys and liver. No one whose kidneys and liver are in perfect condition was ever afflicted by malarial poison. And when these organs are disordered, they not only permit, but invite, these diseases to make their inroad into the body. It is now admitted by physicians, scientists and the majority of the general public that one medicine, and only one whose power has been tested and proven, has absolute control of, and keeps the kidneys and liver in constant health and hence prevents malarial sickness. This remedy is Warner's Safe Kidney and Liver Cure, the most popular medicine before the American people, and sold by every druggist in the land. It fully counteracts the evil effect of malarial poison in the system, and not only banishes it, but restores the members which that poison has weakened. How well it does this can be learned from the following:

Kansas City, Mo., June 26, 1882.—Moving from the state of New York to the western country, I was attacked with malaria and general debility. I had lost all appetite and was hardly able to move about. I had tried a great many remedies, but nothing bettered my condition until I began using Warner's Safe Kidney and Liver Cure, which seemed to help right away, and I feel as well as I ever have in my life. It is a blessing to people in this malarial country. C. F. William, 1412 Grand Ave., of William & Co., hardware.

This great remedy has proven its power in innumerable cases, and is to-day more extensively used in malarial districts, whether in cities or in the country, than any or all other remedies for the cure of the same class of disease. No one can afford to trifle with the first symptoms of malaria, but instant care should be taken to check it on the start before its evil influence overshadow the life.

Silver Ore in Illinois.

GREAT EXCITEMENT IN WOODFORD COUNTY, CAUSED BY A RECENT DISCOVERY.

Bloomington, Ill., Oct. 12.—About a week ago, Dr. Tribbey, a prominent farmer living near Secor, in Woodford county, while walking about his farm in the evening, discovered some one wading in Panther Creek, a small stream emptying into Mackinaw River. The person had a dark lantern and seemed to be searching for something in the swollen stream. He was suffered to depart, and his return was watched. It turned out that he was prospecting for silver, and if reports, believed to be correct, may be relied on, he has already made a valuable discovery. Dr. Tribbey reports that 500 pounds or more of ore, 60 per cent. silver in combination with copper, have been taken out of the stream, and that the whole bed seems to be composed of a like material. Property owners have grown wild over the discovery, and the whole country is full of excitement. Panther Creek is now high, but when the freshet subsides sufficiently the stream will be dammed or diverted, and a company already formed will begin mining. There are said to be traces of ancient mining operations, and implements of mining have in the past been found in the sand of the stream.

TESTIMONIALS.

Gentlemen: Your buggies have given me entire satisfaction, both in style and durability I have used them for the past three years. Your recent improvements on road wagons I consider the best in the market.
JAMES H. RAMBURG.
Frederick Maryland.

Dear Sirs: We have used buggies of your make that have been in use three years, and no buggy we have that cost twice the amount has given better satisfaction.
JAMES H. ALEXANDER.
Johnstown Pa.

Gentlemen: We have used the Columbus Buggy Company's work for the last five years and can conscientiously recommend it as strictly first class as to style, material, workmanship and durability. Your buggies have given better satisfaction than any other make of vehicles we had in use for the last ten years
PALMER & WHITTAKER.

Gentlemen: It gives me pleasure to state that I have been selling your buggies and carriages for four years, and can safely recommend them to any one in want of a buggy or carriage. Yours Truly, J. L. GRIBBLE.
Macomb, Illinois,

Gentlemen: With over fifteen years experience in building buggies, wagons, &c., I do not hesitate in saying your buggies and carriages are strictly first-class in workmanship, material and proportions, filling a long-felt want for a reliable article that can be sold at a price lower than any ordinary manufacturer can produce and sell the same quality of Work at. Yours, etc. I. S. KRECK, Connensville Pa.

Gentlemen: I have used your Brewster side bar buggies for four years, together with buggies that cost me $300 and $350, and your buggies were the first that went out, on account of being side-bar. They have not cost me $5 for repairs, and those I have sold of your make have given good satisfaction. I think that you make the cheapest and best road wagons that are made in the United States for the money.
Respectfully, P. H. HAMLIN, Lawrence Kansas.

Dear Sirs: We have been using your buggies for the last four or five years. They have given entire satisfaction. I think they are the best buggies made for the money.
W. B. GRIMES & CO., Liverymen Whitehall Illinois.

Gentlemen: We have been handling your work for two seasons, and have in every instance found your buggies first class. We never have had one of your jobs returned to us for repairs; neither have we had a single complaint on account of work not being perfectly satisfactory. Very Respectfully, H.P. BUCKLEY & CO., Springfield, Illinois.

Gentlemen. I have no hesitancy in saying that the buggies manufactured by the Columbus Buggy Company are the best work for the price I have any knowledge of. In not a single instance has there been any dissatisfaction on the part of any one of my customers.
FRANK L HALL.
Owensboro, Ky.

Dear Sirs: For the past two years we have used your buggies side by side with other makes in both our stables, and are perfectly satisfied with the strenght, durability and workmanship compared with others. As fast as our stock in livery is used up we shall replace them with your manufacture, knowing from experience that it is the best we can do. Respectfully,
SWEET & FULLANSBEE,

DIED.

An old and respectable citizen passed away October 20, 1882, at St. Johns, DeKalb county, Indiana,—Abraham Reever. He emigrated from the state Maryland in the year 1843, locating in Butler township, where he shared the hardships of a pioneer life. His family consisted of a wife, two sons and one daughter, having a son and daughter born since living in Indiana. With his faithful companion Catherine, they managed to clear up their farm and support their family, all of whom have since passed away, except a son and daughter, George Reever and Sarah Lung. After Catherine had passed over the river of death, he was married to a widow lady by the name of Rachael A. Reed, of Jackson township, after which he bought a house and lot at St. Johns. Abraham Reever was born in Carroll county, Maryland, September 3d, 1808, and died October 20, 1882—aged 74 years, 1 month and 17 days. His funeral was attended by a large number of friends and relatives. His remains were interred at Cedar Creed cemetery, Rev. Rhodes, of Churubusco officiating. Y.

Communicated.

The canvass opened in Newville last Saturday evening by Hon. D. D. Moody, democratic candidate for representative of DeKalb county. He delivered an able and logical address on the political issues that divide the parties at the present time, and especially on the subject of the amendments, and particularly on the prohibitory amendment, by showing that although he voted for the amendment in the first place, he was not bound to vote for it on its final passage, as this was necessary in order to give the people a chance to express their opinion on this matter at the next election, and he showed very clearly that it was not what the people wanted, and that it would not be for the best interests of a majority of the people, and that it would not stop the use of liquor as a beverage; and he elucidated very clearly, that if it passed the legislature it should be submitted to the votes of the people at a general election, as this was what the makers of the constitution intended, as shown by their address to the voters on the adoption of the constitution. He also showed the record on other bills passed by the last legislature, and that his votes were all in the interests of the people. And hence the people will be voting for their own interests when they vote for his election. But the republicans say this would be voting for free whisky; but we think this is a mistake. And this is not all the mistakes that they have made, for they say free whisky was what carried the election in Ohio. Now, if this is so, then they must have carried it by the same means at the last election; and this could not be, as they are the "great moral party" that neither sells nor uses free whisky only on funeral occasions, and this was only free to the ones who attended the funeral, but the people footed the bill allowed by a republican congress, to the amount of seven thousand dollars. Now they ought not to object to Ohio having a little free whisky, as this was a funeral still larger than Garfield's party. And we may need a little on the 7th of November, so you had better vote for Moody.

NEWVILLE.

A Reproductive Comet.

The present comet in the eastern sky, which can be distinctly seen by every one at early morning, is certainly the most remarkable one of all the modern comets. Prof. Lewis Swift, director of the Warner Observatory, Rochester, N. Y., states that the comet grazed the sun so closely as to cause great disturbance, so much so that it has divided into no less than eight separate parts, all of which can be distinctly seen by a good telescope. There is only one other instance on record where a comet has divided, that one being Biella's comet of 1846, which separated into two parts. Applications have been made on Mr. H. H. Warner by parties who have noted these cometary offshoots, claiming the $200 prize for each one of them. Whether the great comet will continue to produce a brood of smaller comets remains to be seen.

Shooting Sap-Suckers.

A COMMON AMUSEMENT FOR BOYS IN NORTHERN GEORGIA.

[Maurice Thompson in St. Nicholas.]

Several of the smaller American woodpeckers are sap-drinkers; but only one kind ever pecks holes for the purpose of getting at the sap. He is named by naturalists Centurus Carolinus. He is a very cunning bird. One of his habits is to move around the bole of a tree just fast enough to keep nearly hid from you as you walk around trying to get a good look at him. This he will continue to do for a considerable length of time, but, finally, getting the tree-trunk fairly between you and him, he takes to his gay wings and flies in such a line as to keep hidden from your eyes.

Usually he says good-by with a keen squeal as he starts away. Down in the mountain valleys of northern Georgia I used to amuse myself with watching the little half naked negro boys trying to shoot sap-suckers by means of their blow-guns. Such a blow-gun as they had is a straight reed or cane about six feet long, through the whole length of which a smooth bore is made by punching out the joints. The arrow used in this gun is made of a sharp piece of canewood, not longer or larger than a knitting needle, with a ball of cotton lint bound on the end opposite the point. The arrow is blown out of the gun by the breath from the shooter's mouth. It flies with so great force that I have seen a bird killed at a distance of forty yards. Some of the little negro boys are skillful in using the blow-gun, and as sly as cats in creeping up close to a bird before shooting it. In our northern states, when the winter is very cold, and all the maples, ash and hickory trees are frozen so that their sap will not flow into our bird's pots, the sap-sucker is compelled to depend upon the cedar trees for food, since their resinous sap is not affected by the cold. Often I have seen him pecking away at the gnarling hole of an evergreen when the thermometer stood 10 degrees below zero, and the air was fairly blue with winter's breath. Even in Georgia it is sometimes so cold that he chooses the pine trees, finding between their bark and the underlying wood a sort of diluted turpentine, upon which he feeds. While busily engaged pecking his holes on cold, windy days he is not so watchful as in fine weather. At such times I have seen a little negro "blow-gunner" stick three or four arrows into the soft bark all around the busy bird before it would fly, and have been just as much surprised at the boy as at the bird; because, if it was strange how the bird could be so busy as not to notice an arrow "chucking" into the tree close by him, it was equally strange how that little negro could "stand it" to be out so long in such a cold, raw wind with nothing on but a shirt.

Pleasant Chapel Items.

Mrs. J. J. Werrbaugh has been on the sick list.

Wesley Wycoff and family called on friends at this place last Sunday.

Mr. W. Walker and wife, residents of near Hicksville, Ohio, were visiting his sister, Mrs. Werrbaugh, of this place.

O. Z. Hubbel has been seen at Pleasant Chapel of late.

Hon. D. D. Moody addressed the people of Troy township last week. He is a good democrat and means business.

F. D. Oberlin, candidate for county commissioner, called on friends in this vicinity last week.

Mr. and Mrs. Adams are visiting their daughter, Mrs. Rose, and family. Mr. Adams is from Shelby, Ohio. He thinks Indiana is just the place.

Mrs. Oliver Heshiser is visiting friends around Pleasant Chapel this week. Mrs. H. was a resident of this place some years ago.

The roads are in good condition and the people seem to enjoy them.

The farmers are not troubled this fall in packing apples, as the crop is a small one.

Mr. Shaffer, of Edgerton, Ohio, and his accomplished sister Callie, Mr. Grube and Miss Morningstar, of Syracuse, N. Y. were the guests of Minnie Stewart Werrbaugh during last sabbath.

Eighty-Five Dollars Lost.

"You do not tell me that your husband is up and entirely cured by so simple a medicine as Parker's Ginger Tonic?" "Yes, indeed, I do," said Mrs. Benjamin to her neighbor, and after we had lost eighty-five dollars in doctor bills and prescriptions. Now my husband feels as well as ever. 44-4w.

A Fatal Mistake.

HOW A BLUNDERING JUDGMENT MAY BE RESPONSIBLE FOR THE MOST SERIOUS RESULTS.

Mr. Edwin Booth said recently that he supposed his lungs were affected, having a persistent cough until he saw Dr. Mackenzie, of London, who found that this symptom arose from a disturbance of the liver.—N. Y. Herald.

The above item, which has been going the rounds of the press, is of no special significance other than to the personal friends of Mr. Booth, except that it brings to light a truth of the greatest importance to the world. Few people pass through life without the affliction of a cough at some point in their career. In most cases this is considered the result of a cold or the beginning of consumption, and thousands have become terrified at this revelation and have sought by a change of air and the use of cough medicines to avert the impending disaster. It may safely be said that more than half the coughs which are afflicting the world to-day do not have their origin in the lungs but are the result of more serious troubles in other organs in the body. "Liver coughs" are exceedingly common and yet are almost wholly misunderstood. Arising from a disordered state of the liver they show their results of congesting the lungs. In fact, the efforts of the liver to throw off the disease, produce coughing even when the lungs themselves are in a healthy state.

But it is a mistake to suppose that such delicate tissues as the lungs can long remain in a healthy condition when they are being constantly agitated by coughing. Such a theory would be absurd. Consumption, which was feared at first, is certain to take place unless something is done to check the cause. This must be plain to every thoughtful mind. It stands to reason, therefore, that the only way in which "liver coughs" can be removed is by restoring the liver to health.

In this connection another fact of great importance becomes known, which can best be explained by the relation of an ancient event. Mr. W——, a wealthy cattle dealer of Colorado, became greatly reduced in health and came east to Chicago for the purpose of being cured. He consulted Dr. J.——, one of the leading physicians of the country on pulmonic subjects and began treatment for the cure of his lungs. But his cough increased while his strength decreased. Finally he determined to consult another physician and applied to D. B.——, after a careful examination he was informed that his lungs was perfectly sound, while his kidneys were in a most terrible condition. He had all the apparent symptoms of consumption but he was suffering from the terrible Bright's disease. The symptoms of consumption are often the sure indications of Bright's disease.

The above truths regarding coughs have been known by the leading physicians for several years but the public have never been informed of them. They are serious facts, however, and should be understood by all, so that dangers which might otherwise prove fatal may be avoided. They clearly prove one great truth which is, that the kidneys and liver are such vital organs that their health should be constantly guarded. The distressing, hacking cough, which is often dreaded as the forerunner of consumption and the wasting strength which accompanies it, in all probability may arise from weakened or diseased kidneys or liver, to restore which would cause returning health. How this most desirable end may be attained has long been a problem, but few people of intelligence at the present day have longer any doubts that the popular remedy known as Warner's Safe Kidney and Liver Cure has done more to correct, relieve and restore these organs than any other preparations ever before known. There are hundreds of instances which have occured within the past three months where individuals have believed themselves the victims of consumption, when, in reality it was deranged kidneys and liver, which this remarkable medicine has completely cured, as witness the following statement:

BUFFALO, N. Y., July 6, 1882.—I believe it to be a fact that thousands of cases of so-called consumption can be successfully treated by simply using Warner's Safe Kidney and Liver Cure as directed. I was one of the "given up to die" persons—had every symptom of the last stage of consumption—bad cough of four years standing, night sweats, chills, etc. A season south did no good, and the fact was the case looked discouraging. I took Warner's Safe Kidney and Liver Cure, and in three months I regained over twenty pounds, and my health was fully restored. W. C. BEACH.

Foreman Buffalo Rubber-Type Foundry.

There are thousands of people in America to-day who believe that are the victims of consumption and destined to an early grave and who are trying to save themselves by the use of consumption cures but are growing worse each hour. Let all such persons stop, and calmly consider whether they are not seeking to check a disease in the lungs when it is located in the kidneys and liver. Let them treat the disease in its original stronghold and by the remedy which has been proven to be the most effective and then look for the return of health and happiness which such treatment is sure to bring.

There appears to be some hope for the Indian, after all. The Cheyennes of the Powder River region, who once made it their chief busines to burn powder in hostile demonstrations against the whites, have settled down quietly to farming on the Little Muddy, and are getting along well. They no longer maintain their tribal relations, each family occupying a farm and "going it alone." Last year they raised good crops, and this summer, besides farming, they have built thirty houses, and stables for their horses. Although the season has been very dry, they have raised enough produce to last them over the winter, and keep in good order their 300 head of fine cattle. Strange to say, these Indians are strictly honest. Their credit is first-class at the stores of Miles City. Still more strange is the statement, coming from good authority, that "they have never been known to tell a lie about anything." Probably, as they become familiar with the methods of Caucasian civilization, this peculiarity will gradually disappear.—Times-Star.

There is something peculiarly appropriate in holding elections in October. Not only is the silent dropping of the ballots in the box symbolical of the falling of withered leaves, but there is that in the general decay of vegetation suggestive for the utter goneness and going-to-pieces-ness of some candidates. Then, too, the defeated man can go out in his desolation and commune with nature and kick himself all over the dry and withered woods, and mingle his sobs with the wailing winds.—Times-Star.

The Hon. David Kilgore, a life-long republican, in recently speaking of Captain William R. Myers, the democratic for secretary of state, said: "I have known my friend, Captain Myers, for a great many years. We soldiered together in the army, and I shall support him, and I ask you all to do the same, for he is a good man." There are many soldiers in Porter county who will take Mr. Kilgore's advice and vote for Captain Myers,—Valpo. Messenger.

THE new building enterprises of the cities of New York and Brooklyn during the past three months foot up in value $14,000,000. Of this sum New York expends $9,674,316 for new structures, and about $1,000,000 for alterations. Adding to these figures those for the first half of the year, the aggregate expenditures for architectural improvements in the two cities since January 1 is, in round numbers, $48,000,000.

THE United States Signal Service warnings of the October cyclone detained hundreds of vessels in ports on the Atlantic coast, and prevented the jeopardizing of property to the value of nearly $5,000,000. It is stated that the men employed in the signal service cost the Government less than $450,000 a year, which is a small sum in comparison with the great benefits of the weather-warning service.

THE heirs of Philly Francois Renault lay claim to most of the town of Peoria, and a lawyer is now there offering to clear the titles of possessors for a consideration. The heirs claim under an old French grant executed by the French King in 1723. In 1875 this same claim was advanced by McMullen Brothers, of Chicago. In 1875 Hon. Enoch P. Sloan made an exhaustive search into the validity of these claims, and pronounced them valueless.

HON. JOHN R. THOMAS, member of Congress from the Cairo (Ill.) District, while addressing a political gathering at Carbondale, the other night, was stealthily approached from the rear of the stage by a drunken assassin, armed with a formidable looking knife. Mr. Esme Bush, of Carbondale, took in the situation, and, leaping upon the stage, knocked the desperado down. He regained his feet only to attack an innocent bystander with the knife, inflicting dangerous wounds. The ruffian was finally overpowered and jailed.

A WASHINGTON special says: "It is proposed, during the coming Fall, to establish a system of frost warning for the benefit of the tobacco growing interests of the country; also a similar service for the benefit of the orange growers of Florida. At the solicitation of those interested in the cultivation of wheat and other grains in the northwest, it is contemplated to establish a service similar to that now in operation for the benefit of the cotton interests.

WHEN the supply of coal gets short elsewhere, the world can turn to China for "black diamonds." Baron Richthofen shows that in that country the supply of antharacite coal is not less than 680,000,000,000 of tons, and the bituminous coal supply is just as large. The Baron thinks that, taking what is left in other parts of the world with the Chinese area, we need not fear a fuel famine. He thinks that the supply in the Chinese province of Shansi alone will last the world about [illegible] years.

THE National Liquor Dealers' and Manufauturers' Protective Association met recently in secret session at Milwaukee. The first thing done was to change the name of the association to "The Personal Liberty League ot the United States," to be composed of the various State Protective Associations, and of the National Brewers' and Distillers' Associations, the management to be in the hands of an executive committee of one from each State, one from the distillers, and one from the Brewers' Association; the annual dues to be $250 for each State society and $150 for each society in the Territories. The usual resolutions declaring in favor of temperance and against prohibition were passed.

Gloves, Old and New.

From the Queen.

Gloves were articles of Oriental dress, for according to Xenophon they were worn by Cyrus the Persian: and Athenæus speaks of a celebrated gourmand who came to a banquet with gloved hands, that he might eat more rapidly than his fellow-guests, who had to wait until the viands were cool.

In ancient times a glove was employed as a token or pledge of faith in the making of contracts—a sort of substitute for the hand itself—being cast down by one contracting party, to be taken up, as sealing the agreement, by the other.

Before the union of England and Scotland, the Borderers having once pledged their faith to an enemy, regarded its violation as a grave crime; and, when such a breach of honor occurred, the injured person rode through the field at the next Border meeting, holding up a glove on the point of his spear—as a pledge of faith—and proclaimed the perfidy of him who had broken it. To wipe out such a stain, often the criminal was slain by his own clan.

Passing over all mention of the gloves worn by knights with their mail armor, or having overlapping plates of steel, I will name a few of those of which some note has been made in history.

A fur-lined glove, worn by Henry VI., is still preserved in the old mansion that gave him shelter after the disastrous battle of Hexham (1464). The son-in-law of Tunstall, and "esquire of his body," Sir Ralph Pudsey, kept him in concealment at Bolton Hall, Yorkshire; and there, when he left his faithful host, he also left a boot, spoon and glove. The latter is of tanned leather, lined with hairy deerskin, turned over at the wrist as a deep cuff.

The embroidered gloves of Cœur de Lion lost him his liberty at one time, and might have cost him his life. He was lying in concealment in an enemy's country, and his page carried them very indiscreetly in his pocket—though, perhaps, for their better sayfet when sent by his royal master to obtain food in the neighborhood of Vienna. How it happened does no appear; but they were seen, and recognized as being only suitable for a crowned head to possess. The same night the King was captured by the Duke of Austria, and sold by him to Emperor Henry VI. for 60,000 pounds of silver. Anne Boylen seems to have been very particular about her gloves, and it is recorded that her royal predecessor used to delight in making her play cards without them, that some little blemish in the shape of one of her nails might offend the eye of the King. Queen Mary and her sister Elizabeth took pride in this article of dress. It is said that the latter was extravagant in the extreme about them, and that a marvelous pair was at one time presented to her that was inclosed in a walnut shell. She even retained her glove when playing the virginal. One "payr of gloves embrawret with gold," is recorded as having been sent to her sister Mary as a New Year's gift before her accession, and "ten payr of Spanyshe gloves from a Duches in Spayne" came to her a year afterward, while at about that time "a pair of swete gloves" were also presented to her from Mrs. Whellers.

The degradation of any exalted personage in the middle ages was expressed by the deprivation of his gloves—just as a glove was presented to him in the ceremony of bestowing on him lands of honors.

The enormous quantity of so-called kid gloves is greatly in excess of the amount of leather afforded by the skins of all the young goats annually killed to supply the demand. There has long been quite a trade carried on in Paris by the gamins in rat skins, who have much profitable sport in catching them at the mouths of the great drains of the city. Our real kid skins come from Switzerland and Tuscany, dispatched from Leghorn.

Understood the Nature of an Oath

Arkansaw Traveler.

"Do you know the nature of oath?" asked a judge, of a colored woman.

"Yes, sah; I reckon I does."

"You know, then, what it is to swear?"

"Yes, sah; I reckon I does."

"Hold up your hand and swear."

She held up her hand and ripped out an oath which almost took the judge' breath.

"I will send you to jail for this, you miserable creature."

"For what, jedge?"

"For using profane language in this court-room."

WASHINGTON.

The county court room was crowded Friday morning with a large number of sightseers, cranks, loafers and other persons with very little to do, whose curiosity prompted them to hear the proceedings in the Schoville insanity case. The Schovilles, Geo. and Mr. Frances Schoville, the little daughter Bertha and the grown daughter, Mrs Harper, and her husband, W H Harper of the Pacific elevator, were all there, sitting at the same table. Joel Henry Wells sat at an adjoining table, and some women appeared elsewhere in the court room.

George W Scheville the defender of Guiteau, was the first witness sworn. He testified that he had been a prosecuting lawyer for thirty years. When he first knew the respondent, she was but 12 years of age. He had first met her at Freeport, Ill. Four years later, when she was 16 years of age, they were married. From the time of their first acquaintance to her 30th year, she appeared frank and open in her manners and actions, and she was very much attached to the witness and to their family. Her religious opinions were of an intense order, and were very orthodox. The witness knew pretty well. He next told of traces of insanity which he had discovered in the Guiteau family, from the grandfather of the respondent down to the respondent herself. No signs of insanity had been shown by her father until about 1866, when he plainly showed evidence of hereditary insanity. The respondent, Mrs Scoville, the witness said, had been told by her uncle when she was 15 years old, that there was insanity in the Guiteau family. She said this was the first time she had heard of it.

About ten years had elapsed after they were married before witness noticed any peculiar change in the character or habits of his wife. During the sickness of her son in 1869, in Oak Park, near Chicago, a physician had been called, and for some time afterward she had continually talked of this doctor. She made frequent visits to his office in this city, and when they had removed to Chicago she made endeavor to have the witness to take a house near that of the physician. Respondent had confessed to the witness that she was in love with the Doctor, and afterward denied that any such confession had been made. It was shortly after this that her insanity increased to a great degree, and she had fits frequently. She became violent, and suffered much, both in mind and body. She was nervous, irritated and exacting, in the extreme. She often attempted to leave the house. From year to year these peculiarities increased, one of her idiosyncracies being to make confidants of all of the servants and help about the household. She seemed to want to own something—the house, the furniture, etc.

The official returns show that the falling off in the exportation of dairy products continues. During the month of September only 622,026 pounds of butter was sent abroad, against 1,694,556 pounds the same month last year. The falling off in cheese was over 8,000,000 pounds. The same rate of diminution is apparent in tallow and provisions.

A telegram just received here, announcing that the Oregon Legislature on Friday night elected John M. Dolph United States Senator, says the balloting continued until just before the hour for the final adjournment of the Legislature. John M. Dolph is a native of New York, and went from Missouri to Oregon in 1862. He is now 54 years of age, and a State Senator. He is a man of large wealth, and is regarded as one of the most eloquent speakers in the State. He is Grand Master of Masons and of Odd Fellows, and is Vice President of the Oregon and Transcontinental Railway company.

NEW YORK.

The Immigration Society of this city finds as the result of the first year's rate that of 48,000,000 acres in California belonging to the United States, fully 20,000,000 are suitable for agricultural purposes. These lands are found in nearly every county in the State. The society is distributing pamphlets and circulars throughout the United States and Europe which call forth numerous letters of inquiry. During the current week immigrants arriving by overland railroads number 866. Letters received during the week from twenty-five different States bring inquiry from Belgium, Germany, France, England and other countries.

The court of inquiry which was called to inquire into the cause of the loss of the British ship Bremen, on Farrallone island, find the evidence conclusive that the fog signal on the island was not blowing, before or at the time the vessel went ashore. If it had it would have averted the disaster. The court found a slight error in the judgment of the master of the Bremen in directing the course of his ship, but it was not grave enough to justify it in dealing with his certificate.

Mrs. Hamilton Fish was out riding on Monday when the kingbolt of the carriage broke and the vehicle turned, throwing Mrs. Fish violently to the ground. Her condition is comfortable.

The sale of Chicago dressed beef in the markets here still continues to be opposed by many of the butchers and wholesale men, since it materially interferes with their profits. All sorts of absurd stories have been circulated by these men to injure the new enterprise, but they have failed, and the Chicago beef is in growing demand. Firms here have announced their intention to embark in the same business, and it is predicted that by Christmas beef will be as cheap in this city as it was before the present upward turn in prices.

Mrs. Langtry, the celebrated "Jersey Lily," who arrived from Europe Monday morning, drove immediately to her hotel. She was seen by a reporter, and expressed satisfaction at being in New York. "It reminds me so much of Paris," she said, "and the flowers are esthetically beautiful."

Knoxville, Ten., dispatch.—Friday morning, a few minutes after 10 o'clock General Joseph A. Mabry, Major Thomas O'Connor and Joseph A Mabry, Jr., were killed in a shooting affray. The difficulty began Wednesday afternoon by Gen. Mabry attacking Major O'Connor and threatening to kill him. This was at the fair grounds, and O'Connor told Mabry that it was not the place to settle their differences. Mabry then told O'Connor he should not live. It seems Mabry was armed, and O'Connor was not.

The cause of the difficulty was an old feud about the transfer of some property from Mabry to O'Connor. Later in the afternoon Mabry sent word to O'Connor that he would kill him on sight. This morning O'Connor was standing in the door of the Mechanics' National Bank, of which he was President. General Mabry and another gentleman walked down Gay street, on the opposite side from the bank. O'Connor stepped into the bank, got a shot-gun, took deliberate aim at General Mabry, and fired. Mabry fell dead, being shot in the left side. As he fell, O'Conner fired again, the shot taking effect in Mabry's thigh. O'Conner then rushed into the bank and got another shot-gun. About this time Joseph A. Mabry, Jr., son of General Mabry, came rushing down the street unseen by O'Connor until within forty feet, when Mabry fired a pistol, the shot taking effect in O'Conner's right breast, passing through the body near the heart. The instant Mabry shot, O'Connor turned and fired, the charge taking effect in young Mabry's right breast and side. He fell pierced with twenty buckshot, and almost instantly O'Conner fell dead without a struggle. Young Mabry tried to rise, but fell back dead.

The whole tragedy occurred within two minutes, and neither of the three spoke a word after being shot. General Mabry had about thirty buckshot in his body. A bystander was painfully wounded in the thigh, and another in the arm. Four other men had clothes pierced by buckshot. The affair caused great excitement, and Gay street was thronged with a thousand people.

General Mabry and his son Joe were uitted only a few days ago of the murder of Moses Lusby and Don Lusby, father and son, whom they killed some weeks ago. Will Mabry was killed by Don Lusby last Christmas. Major Thomas O'Connor was the wealthiest man in the State.

Springfield, Ill., dispatch:

A sad accident occurred Thursday afternoon on the Mendota and Clinton Railrord, which will, it is thought, be attended with fatal results to two young lives. As the engineer on the freight train turned a curve three miles west of Walnut, he noticed that two children were on the track. He whistled for brakes, and did everything in his power to stop the train and signal the children to get off the track, but they seemed unconscious of the danger, and he with such a heavy train could only succeed in checking the rate of speed from twenty to about twelve miles an hour when the train reached the innocent victims and passed on. The conductor and engineer say the suspense was terrible, as the children were a quarter of a mile off when first discovered. As soon as the train was brought to a stop they backed up and found that one of the childred, a little 8-year-old son of Mr. Clayton Knight, had his right leg crushed to atoms below the knee, and the other, a little 8-year-old daughter of Mr P Kelley, was caught by the cowcatcher and thrown quite a distance from the track. She had no marks save a few bruises about the head and face. She appeared conscious when picked up, but went into a swoon immediately after, and has since died. It is thought the boy cannot live. It appears the children wandered from their homes, only about fifty yards from the track, and, crawling under the fence got onto the railroad. The parents, hearing the alarm signals of the train, and noticing the absence of their children, rushed out, and were witnesses of the horrible spectacle of the train rushing over their little ones.

A Port Townsend dispatch says the steamer Idaho has arrived from Alaska. Business is improving at Sitka. The United States steamer Adams is now at the station. Rich placer mines have been discovered. The Douglas island party of prospectors have arrived at Iunean, from Yukon river. They report a mild climate and good digging.

The Revenue Cutter Corwin arrived at Sitka, October 13, from an extended cruise in the Arctic. At Kadiak, the fur company reported a successful season. At St. Lawrence Bay over one hundred decomposed bodies of natives were found. The survivors said the mortality was caused by starvation. At Northhead, it was learned that the Indians had found the body of Master Putnam on the ice with a revolver by his side, and the skeleton of a dog and broken sledge near. All was well at Point Barrow signal station. Lieut Ray had made a sledge journey of fifty miles inland, and one hundred miles eastward, and discovered a large unknown river, apparently as large as the Missouri, but could not judge of its depth owing to the ice. Indians near the signal station are showing signs of discontent. The party are well and able to take care of themselves. Several whalers were spoken. The catch is very small. The body of Bishop Nestor, drowned from the Fur company's steamer, some months ago, was recovered. The season is very open.

Stillwater, Minn., dispatch:

Tuesday night a farmer named Klingbite, feared as a desperate character, arose from his bed and attacked his sleeping wife with a long sharp knife, cutting her in a horrible manner. A son of the two attempted to prevent the murder of his mother, but was himself stabbed to the heart by the fiend, and dropped dead. Another son hurried to the city and informed Sheriff Holcome and Chief of Police Shortall, who went to the scene of the ghastly tragedy. They found Klingbite hid under the eaves of his barn, in the hay, still armed. They clubbed him with a pole and attempted to drag him out. Suddenly the murder rushed upon the officers, knife in hand. Shortall fired upon him, shooting him through the body, but this did not stop him. Holcomb felled him with a blow from his billy, and a terrible struggle followed. Holcomb was badly cut in the hand, and the desperate man was about to burry his weapon in the Sheriff's body, when he missed his aim and drove it deep into the floor of the barn, the blade breaking off short. The officers at last overcome him, and brought him to the jail here, where he now lies dying, the shot through his body being of a fatal nature. The wounded woman is in a critical condition. Klingbite has before killed two men, and deserved a term in the Penitentiary for each murder.

Hong Kong, China, October 23—The greater part of Manila has bee destroyed by a typhoon. Business is suspended here, owing to the terrible cyclone of October 20, which caused great destruction to buildings and beached thirteen vessels.

London, October 24.—Parliament reassembled to-day. Previous to the assembling of the House of Commons the advanced Irish members held a meeting. They were chiefly occupied in arranging petitions referring to the imprisonment of E. Dwyer Gray. Lord Mayor Dawson, of Dublin, has a hundred petitions to present in the House.

In the House of Commons Lord Randolph Churchill, Conservative, contended that the present sitting was irregular. After the Appropriation bill had received the Royal assent, he moved an adjournment of the House, in order to protest against an Autumn session.

A heavy gale is raging in England. Teregraphic dispatches from the continent are delayed by the storm. Considerable damages has been done in many parts. The country rivers are overflowing their banks.

3 p. m.—The wind and sleet storm which visited London early Tuesday morning is still raging, and meager dispatches report snow and hail storms in various parts of England. Telegraphic communication is so seriously interfered with that no estimate of the damage can yet be given.

Cairo, October 24.—It is stated that the capital of Kordofan has been besieged for forty days. Its capture is expected. An attack on Khartoum will follow.

London, October 25.—The blue book of Egyptian affairs, which has just been issued for the month of July, shows that De Freycinet notified England that France would not be able to join England in its offensive hostilities in Egypt, until the French legislature first gave its consent, and that this was not likely to be given.

Baron Giero, in his circular note to the Russian ambassadors, expressed to them his desire to maintain European concert. The facts had revealed that serious inconveniences would result from any system of Anglo-French control, and to perpetuate by force such a measure would be a work of doubtful character and result.

Prince Bismarck expressed his desire to give his support to England and France, but would not issue any mandate upon the subject, fearing thereby to give the question greater proportions than it had yet assumed.

Signor Maniel, Minister of Foreign Affairs for Italy, in his answer to the invitation to his government to join in the protection of the canal, said: "Italy having joined in the identical note which Turkey had formally accepted, it would be a contradiction of the policy already announced to intervene in any other way at this juncture."

In July Arabi Pasha indirectly sounded Earl Granville respecting the terms of submission which would be granted him. He made a direct offer to disband the leaders of the rebellion, and for himself to accept banishment. The secretary of the foreign department refused to agree to anything save complete submission.

Philadelphia dispatch:

A mortar heavily charged with bombs and other fireworks, which were being used in the celebration of the Penn centennial at Fairmount park Tuesday evening, exploded, mowing down the surrounding spectators like the discharge of cannister into a regiment.

The display of fireworks took place at a point a little above the Green street entrance to Fairmount Park, at the foot of Lemon hill, the frames for the exhibition of the set pieces being placed in an open place fronting the park. The attendance was larger than upon any similar occasions since the centennial. The exhibition began with a shower of rockets, followed by a rain of gold stars, and then the first of the set pieces burst into view in hundreds of flaming jets and colors. It represented the Welcome lying at archor on the sea. More rockets, pollychrome stars, trees of gold and silver, waterfalls of amber, and then a loud explosion resulting in a haze of thick smoke filling the air. This was speedily chased away by a storm of brilliant rockets in myriads.

The explosion came from a large mortar that was being used to throw display bombs into the air. The ten-inch bombs required a charge of seven and a half pounds of powder, and were propelled high into the air. The first of the ten-inch bombs had mounted skyward, burst into stars which were gradually disappearing, when the second was seen to ascend. Those in close proximity to the mortar felt a shock that had not affected them before, and some of them felt something more than a shock. There were so few comparatively that there was fortunately no panic, and most of the thousands who had been within a stone's throw of a dreadful accident went to their homes in ignorance of the tragedy. Even the vigilant park guardians were ignorant of the extent of the tragedy, and for some time the words, "A woman rather badly injured," satisfied all inquiries.

Sergeant Swank was slowly patrolling along the Reading railroad when he heard the explosion. Something flew by him in the air and landed with a ghastly thud on the hill, probably one hundred feet above him. With a few bounds he reached the top of the hill. There, lying dead upon the ground, was a woman over whose corpse lay the body of an insensible man. Raising the latter, he found that the top of the woman's head had been literally torn off by some object with rough edges. Two large pieces of boiler iron, apparently one or two feet long and irregularly formed, was found, the larger covered with blood and human brains, and it was evident, from its position, that it had scalped the woman.

Some who were not in this vicinity were also hurt, and one man, William Love, of 1042 Stockes street, who was standing near the fore bay, nearly three squares distant, had his leg badly injured by a piece of the broken mortar.

The following persons have died from the effect of wounds received at last night's explosion, in addition to those already named: Sydney Thompson, colored, aged nineteen; an unknown man, whose body in the morgue was torn almost beyond recognition. The death of Dorothea L Moeller, aged seven, and of Henry Bowyer and wife Kate, are momentarily expected.

Mendota, Ill., dispatch:

A young lad named Beale stole a horse from the barn of Mr. Frank Shipley last Monday night, and then stole a wagon and harness from Mr. Clark and decamped. He was followed up yesterday and captured with the property in his possession, being brought before the Police Magistrate was bound over to the Criminal Court in bonds of $500. The young culprit is only about 12 years old, and this is his second offense in horse-stealing.

Dr. HARTER'S
A combination of Protoxide of Iron, Peruvian Bark and Phosphorus in a palatable form. The only preparation of iron that will not blacken the teeth, so characteristic of other iron preparations.
GENTLEMEN: I have used DR. HARTER'S IRON TONIC in my practice, and in an experience of twenty-five years in medicine, have never found anything to give the results that DR. HARTER'S IRON TONIC does. In many cases of Nervous Prostration, Female Diseases, Dyspepsia, and an impoverished condition of the blood, this peerless remedy has, in my hands, made some wonderful cures. Cases that have baffled some of our most eminent physicians have yielded to this great and incomparable remedy. I prescribe it in preference to any iron preparation made. In fact, such a compound as DR. HARTER'S IRON TONIC is a necessity in my practice. DR. ROBERT SAMUELS,
ST. LOUIS, MO., NOV. 25th, 1881. 801 Wash. Avenue.
It gives color to the blood, natural healthful tone to the digestive organs and nervous system, making it applicable to General Debility, Loss of Appetite, Prostration of Vital Powers and Impotence.

Auburn Courier.

AUBURN, INDIANA, NOV. 2nd, 1882

SINCE the Ohio election, all the republican papers, are declaring: "We are not in favor of prohibition." They are evidently acting under instructions from headquarters. How do temperance people like this?

REPUBLICANS are at the old know nothing dodge again. "No one but Americans can rule America" they say when speaking of the German vote that made so great a change in Ohio. They don't care much for Germans unless they vote the republican ticket.

THE Steuben county papers speak highly of Judge Lowry and the favorable reception he is meeting at the hands of the people of that county. Look for a good report from that county. The Judge has made a number of speeches there within the last few days.

GLASGOW wants a higher tariff so that we shall pay more for all the articles, we use. He will vote that way if elected. Judge Lowry will vote for a tariff only high enough to get means to carry on the government. That's why he's going to get such a big majority.

VOTE for Judge Lowry. Don't forget that a desperate effort is being made to secure the next house of representatives, for the republicans, so they can control the "counting in" of the next president if it becomes necessary to them. Every petty grievance should be forgotten in view of this fact.

W. H. DILLS, democratic candidate for judge, was in Butler Monday. He is looking after his interests, of course, and met some very warm friends here. Mr. Dills is a DeKalb county man, has been a practicing attorney for many years, and is as competent for the position of judge as any man in the three counties comprising the district, and the people will be perfectly safe in placing him on the bench.—Butler Review.

WHAT this country needs is a tariff that will produce, just money enough to add to our other revenue, and make a sum large enough to carry on the government. A tariff that goes higher than this is an unnecessary burden placed upon nine men out of ten, in the United States, in order that the tenth man may grow rich off of the burdens of the nine. The people are beginning to understand this.

WHAT became of the great necessity for a protective tariff, since the election two years ago? How quiet it has been kept since then! There don't seem to be any tariff needed until two weeks before the election. The rest of the time, the workingman may take care of himself. In fact the only benefit there is in a protective tariff, is to help a few demagogues into office, when votes are needed to do it.

DURING the war, a high tariff was necessary, to raise the vast sums of money necessary to keep up the expense of the government. Now, we have nearly enough revenue from other sources. Why should we longer tax the people, for money the government does not need, and which in many instances it does not get. Give us a tariff low enough for revenue, only.

THE Press of last week says: "Before Bro. Barns became an editor, he made some pretensions, in the direction of being a temperance man." We would also add, that at the same date he speaks of Bro. Baxter was not a temperance man. While we were doing what we could, in a humble way to reform both democrats and republicans alike, Bro. Baxter and several others who are now temperance men on the "outside," stood around and "snuffed" while the good work went on. We might also, add that the editor of the COURIER is still a temperance man, both in theory and in practice, and not one of the kind who can walk up to the bar, and take a glass of beer with the jocose remark that, "this is the way I take my prohibition."

REPUBLICAN bosses, are again on the eve of an election trying to scare workingmen into the belief that, democratic success means cheaper wages and hard times for laboring men, especially for mechanics, and those who work in factories. They said the same thing two years ago, claiming that democratic success meant low tariff, which would reduce wages. But republican success, they said, meant plenty of work at high wages. Well, the republicans succeeded in carrying the election. How did their promises pan out? Did the employes get higher wages? Of course not. The bosses of the different factories went on just the same as before, and got their employes just as low as they could. And there has never been, in the history of our country, so many men thrown out of employment, or so many men on the strike, as has been the case in the last two years. Yet high tariff men are now playing the laboring men the same trick.

—Dr LaRue will positively cure habitual constipation of the bowels. tf.

THE republicans are always claiming to be the poor man's friend. So, to show their friendship, they believe in putting the highest possible tariff on the necessaries of life, and the lightest on the luxuries of the rich. On each $1.00 worth of the following articles, used especially by the poor, the tariff is:

Rice	85 cents
Salt	65 cents
Woolen undershirts	90 cents
Blankets	88 cents
Woolen clothing	56 cents
Flannel	85 cents
Sugar	60 cents
Molasses	62 cents
Table cutlery	50 cents
Cups and saucers, plain	40 cents
Glassware	60 to $1.00
Paint	60 to $2.28
Calico	55 to 60
Spool thread	75 cents
Iron	50 to 90

On the diamonds of the rich, it is only 10 cents on the dollar.

Indiana and Pacific Railroad.

The second meeting in the interest of the new line was held at Leesburg, in Kosciusko county, on Tuesday, October 31, 1882. The meeting was called to order at two o'clock p. m. by J. A. Barns, and on motion, Dr. R. A. Curran was elected president of the meeting. J. A. Barns was made secretary. The president then briefly stated the object of the meeting, and expressing the belief that the project would meet with the hearty support of the people all along the proposed line. Dr. France, of Bourbon, was then called upon to read the articles of the association in order that the meeting might understand fully the work before it. He and Mr. Sear then answered a variety of inquiries on the subject and the articles were then, on motion of A. T. Kist, adopted by a vote of those present who expected to assist in the work. Mr. Sear also added that after a company was organized under the laws of the state, the survey would be made at once, and then the work of building the road would be done by a company known as the "New York, New Jersey and Western Construction Co." A recess was then had to give an opportunity for those who wished to subscribe stock. After some further explanations, the stock was all subscribed. A meeting of the stockholders was then called and thirteen directors were elected, as follows: DeKalb county, D. D. Snyder and J. A. Barns; Noble county, A. M. Jackson, John Thumma and H. A. Shambaugh; Kosciusko, Benj. Yohn, O. T. Johnson, C. D. Rippey and H. B. Stanley; Marshall, R. A. Curran, Samuel France, Wm. Sear and Joel Parker. Stockholders' meeting was then adjourned and a meeting of the directors called. The following were elected officers: President, Wm. Sear; vice-president, D. D. Snyder; secretary, Samuel France; treasurer, H. B. Stanley; executive committee, D. D. Snyder, A. M. Jackson and C. D. Rippey. It was then announced that another meeting would soon be called by the president, at which more complete preparations for future work could be completed. Meeting then adjourned.

J. A. BARNS, Sec'y. R. A. CURRAN, Pres.
Leesburg, Ind. Oct. 31, 1882.

ED COURIER:—Next Tuesday the next legislature of this state will be chosen. No U. S. senator is to be enacted, yet very important legislation is to be elected. The office of representative is not a remunerative one, yet to an agricultural people it is of more importance than that of congressman, for while congressional legislation does not directly affect the people, state legislation applies directly upon the tax-payers. To represent a county in the legislature, one must be a practical parliamentarian, energetic and influential—a ready speaker—and his knowledge of law must be such as to enable him to draft bills, sustain them by arguments and engineer them through both houses, through personal influence. The representative who can not command the foregoing traits, is not a true representative, and has no business in the halls of legislation. We often hear that "Mr.—can't make a speech, but he can vote all the same, besides he is a clever fellow." Do you know what these clever fellows are called? They are called "stock" or "silent members." Out of the 100 members of the last house, there were 63 silent members. Sixty-three clever fellows who sat for ninety days drawing six dollars per day for simply saying "yes" or "no" when the roll was called. They were all "clever fellows," but out of their places. In the legislative contest in DeKalb county, I do not know all the contestants, but having been connected with the last legislature, occupying a position in which I had the opportunity of observing the doings of all the members, I can unhesitatingly say that Mr. Moody, the nominee of the democratic party, possesses all the necessary qualifications to make him a leader in the legislative body to which he aspires. It is a notorious fact that eleven members did most of the work two years ago. These were called the "Big Eleven" and Mr. Moody was one of them. The Brevier report will show that Mr. Moody had a voice in every important question before the house. When the bill to increase the circuit prosecutors' salaries to $1,500 per year came before the prosecutors in their convention they had "fixed up" the machine so nicely that not a member raised his voice to defeat the steal. Mr. Moody alone arose and denounced the measure as a job, and through his efforts defeated the jobbery. When the enemies of the school system attempted to abolish the office of county superintendent, Mr. Moody defended the system with his voice as well as with his vote. In conclusion, if the people of DeKalb county want to be represented by a man of influence, and if they desire to see their county honored with the speakership of the next house, then let them return Mr. D. D. Moody to the legislature. I am not a resident or a voter of your county, but I want to see the ablest men in the next legislature for the representative of DeKalb county or any other county is not only a representative of his county but of the whole state. For many years past my county has been misrepresented and don't wan't our neighbors to imitate us.

A NEIGHBOR.

E. B. Gerber, democratic candidate for joint representative, was in town Monday making himself known. He found many of his old-time friends and acquaintances wherever he went. He will be remembered as the scholarly gentleman who assisted in getting up our first county map quite a number of years ago. He was in Butler and Waterloo the same day he was here. He created a most favorable impression wherever he went, and the people are making up their minds to vote for him, in many instances, regardless of party. We predict his election by a large majority, for the people are beginning to see that we need an experienced and able business man in the legislature to represent three great counties.

THE bosses of shops, and the owners of manufactories, do not share with their employes, the additional profits they derive from a high tariff. They pocket the profits and grow rich, while their employes are daily growing poorer. What a nice thing a protective tariff is.

D. D. Moody spoke in Agricultural Hall Monday on the political issues of the day.

Mrs. Jonathan Spencer who has been such a great sufferer from rheumatism for several years is much improved in health this fall.

By an accident at Crane & Duncan's machine shops last Monday, Mr. Lydecker lost the second finger of his left hand.

The new "Y" they have been putting in at the crossing is completed and ready for use.

Two engines for the Chicago Milwaukee & St. Paul Ry. went west over the Lake Shore, last Friday.

DIED.—At her residence in St. Joe, Ind. Oct. 26, 1882, Mrs. Ephraim Boyle, aged 46 years, 11 months and 29 days. Deceased was born in Ashland county, Ohio, Oct. 27, 1835, and removed with her parents to DeKalb county, Ind., in 1842, when she was married to Mr. Ephriam Boyle, of Concord township, and has since lived in the immediate neighborhood. She was a member of the Methodist church, having been converted under the labors of Ezra Conn, about twelve years ago. She was a faithful and devoted member of the church of God, a kind neigabor, a fond and loving mother and an affectionate wife. She was the mother of eight children, half of whom precede her to the spirit land. She leaves a husband and remaining four children, six sisters, two brothers and many friends, relatives and neighbors to mourn her loss. Truly, our worldly loss is her heavenly gain.

Our dear mother has gone at last,
To a home far brighter than this,
Where all her sorrows and troubles are past,
And she reigns in eternal bliss.

But we are sad. Oh, how we miss thee!
We cannot feel thy hand upon our brow;
We cannot hear thy voice nor kiss thee;
How sweet were life if thou wert with us now.

And still we miss the in our dwelling—
Morn, noon and night appear and disappear—
And still our hearts with grief are swelling,
Because our dear mother is not here.

'Tis hard to give thee up, dear mother;
'Tis hard to part from thee;
But we will be content, dear mother,
When we think how much happier you must be.

Rest, dear mother, rest;
Rejoice in thy glad release,
For God hath called thee home
To rest in His kingdom of peace.

And when our trials here are past—
Our labors all are o'er—
We'll meet thee, dear mother, there,
Upon the shining shore.

CARD OF THANKS.

To the people of St. Joe and Vicinity who so kindly assisted us in our bereavement and during the illness of our mother, also to the choir who furnished the music, and to the ladies who prepared the beautiful wreath, we tender our sincere and heartfelt thanks

MR. E. BOYLE AND FAMILY.

—The Nickel Plate road was opened for business last Tuesday, and regular trains are now running. It is believed that the road has been sold to some of the great trunk lines—either the Wabash or Lake Shore.

Soldiers Take Notice.

The Union Soldier's Association will meet at their hall in Auburn, on Saturday night, Nov. 11, to take in consideration whether to disband or not, as this subject was suggested at our last meeting. All members are requested to be present.

2t. CHARLES ECKHART, Sec'y.

Notice to Builders.

I will receive sealed bids according to plans and specifications, now on file in my office for the building of a school house in district No. 1, in Sedan, until Saturday Nov. 25, 1882. Reserving the right to reject any or all bids. F. F. FRANKS, Trustee. 3t.

Grand Holiday Excursion to the Valley of Virginia, via B. & O. R. R.

On Tuesday, Nov. 15, 1882, the B. & O. R. R. will sell round trip tickets to Harrisonburg, Va., and return, from all principal stations on its Trans-Ohio division, at extremely low rates, and make the tickets good returning on all regular trains for ninety days. This will be one of the most delightful excursions ever given. The far-famed mountain scenery now draped in its autumnal attire and the great Shenandoah Valley will fill all lovers of the beautiful with exquisite pleasure, whilst the long length of time given enables old Virginians to visit their friends and relatives, and hunters to enjoy their favorite sport. No one should miss this golden opportunity. Call on the B. & O. ticket agents and get rates and time on excursion train from your station.

—"The fire might just as well go out right now as any time, for, I tell you, we can't elect anybody," was the remark of a well known local republican one day last week.

—The dance last Thursday evening went off as on other like occasions. We overheard several rising young men remark that they would rather play pool than dance. Pool is good exercise if one don't pocket the cue too often.

—Waterloo girls communicate their love for our boys on postal cards. That's enterprising; it shows economy, and a girl of that kind will just suit the average Auburn boy—after their tailor bill is paid money is a very essential point with them.

—John Blaney stands against the wall and says that he hauled a log that scaled 1977 with his team of horses. If John wasn't a good, solid democrat we would measure the log, but boys who vote this ticket are always reliable and keep first-class teams.

—Our rooster is so confident of a glorious victory that the old fellow is hard to manage. The devil has to stand over him with a club when a democratic candidate comes into the office—he would crow himself to death if satan did'nt stop him.

—Geo. Weamer has purchased the state of Michigan for the privilege of selling the Searight stove damper. It is a big invention, there is no mistake about it, but the idea of two "prints" selling them is enough to give away all the patent right men on the road.

—Ora Shaffer has organized a band composed of six instruments. They make nice music, and can easily control complimentary tickets to most any traveling theater that has no orchestra. Any citizen in the south end can give information as to where they practice.

—Rev. McCord preached at the Presbyterian church last Sabbath, and will probably be engaged to dispense the gospel to that congregation the coming year. It will be remembered that this gentleman delivered a sermon here at the time the church was dedicated and many of our citizens were very much pleased with his address.

—Maj. Spriott introduced Mr. Moody Tuesday evening. The Major talked a short time but his feeble voice could not be heard by those in the rear part of the room. His effort was appreciated, however, and these who heard his voice once more remember the days long ago when the old gentleman was a power in the land.

—It is considered very ungentlemanly among printers to have any one who can read type look over the gallys in a printing office before publication day. There are several galoots in town who have annoyed us in this manner off and on, and we hope they will swallow this item and digest it carefully for future reference.

—The boys at the Republican office "lithographed" Gov. Williams' monument, that was on the wreck train at the Juction last week. They put the inscription below the structure instead of where it belonged, and also made it top-heavy, which probably caused so many cars to "roll over." It may be, however, that it was intended for a burlesque, and in this case "all is well that is done well."

—Wright Armstrong was sent to the reform school last week for being an unruly boy. Now, that beats us. We never new that Wright was a bad boy, and we have yet to talk with one man but who agrees with us. His advantages in life were nothing to speak of, 'tis true, and it may be the making of him when he matures into manhood. Auburn is jam full of boys who are much worse, in every way of life, than he was and need a place of reform just as badly.

—Hon. D. D. Moody made an excellent speech here Tuesday evening. The court room was filled with an attentive audience, who listened earnestly during the whole address. Mr. Moody, presented the subjects he treats, especially the prohibition matter, in light that enabled his hearers to understand more fully, all the tricks and dodges which it is intended to cover. The sophistries of his opponents, were thoroughly exposed, and his hearers went away feeling pleased that they had heard both sides of the question.

—It is necessary for us again to say that the loafing indulged in at this office must be stopped. The COURIER likes to entertain visitors but we expect them to use some judgment in how long they make their stay. It has been the custom lately for a number of boys to make this headquarters to handle over all the gossip afloat in the town, at our expense. We pay our hands promptly and expect them to perform a day's labor, and it is trying for a compositor to set type and listen to the pedigree of another fellow's girl at the same time. We have no objection to boys coming on an errand, but we want all to bear in mind that they must not talk to the compositor while at work. We mentioned this last week but it seemed to have no effect, and if the practice is not stopped hereafter we will give them away personally—take the choice.

—Dr. LaRue will positively cure all skin diseases, including old sores and ulcers. tf.

VOTE STRAIGHT

STAND FIRM TO THE TICKET BOYS.

WE'RE TOO SOLID THIS TIME.

Every Man on the Ticket will be Elected.

JOIN THE WINNING PARTY.

Before another issue of the COURIER the election will be over, and we earnestly beg of our many democratic patrons to vote straight and stand firm to the ticket. There is nothing gained in voting for a republican although he may be a particular friend. Our party is at stake, and the principles we advocate should be made known at the polls on election. We have two hundred majority, or over, in this county and if we all do our duty and stay by the good old party as we should there is no question but that we will have a grand walk away from the tricky republicans who would use most any means to secure our vote. Lay aside personal matters and get satisfaction in some other way. We may have some feeling toward one or another of the candidates on our ticket that causes us to hesitate when we come to vote. At this time we should remember many of our warm, personal friends are interested in the candidate that we are about to scratch, that our party principles are at stake, that our manhood should be brought into question and other matters of justice, right and principle all be considered before a ticket is criticised. If we had any direct way whatever of injuring one individual by erasing his name from the ticket then there would be some satisfaction in scratching; but this is not the case. In an indirect way we damage our party, do a wrong to our best friends and nine times out ten our vote is wasted and we pass on down the rugged path of life without satisfaction and a guilty conscience. Again we ask every friend of democracy to cast their ballot for the good of the party, and may God speed the day when the republican party together with its thievery, corruption and fraud will be trampled under the feet of all honest men and known no more.

McNabb's Factory Burned.

A DESTRUCTIVE FIRE AT THE JUNCTION.

As the west-bound B. & O. train pulled into the Junction last Thursday night, a little after midnight, the train men discovered a suspicious light in McNabb's heading factory, and at once blew the alarm. C. C. Shaffer, who had come in from Ohio on the train, aroused Mr. McNabb, and a crowd gathered around the blazing factory, only to find themselves too late to do any good. The whole establishment was soon in ashes. The machinery was nearly all ruined, but the engine was saved by the constant efforts of the men to keep its supports from burning away and letting it fall over into the fire. The heat was intense, as the building was full of dry stock and shavings. It is supposed that the fire caught from the furnace and then ran into the sawdust in the pit. McNabb and James McDowell had worked until nearly eleven o'clock and had then gone to bed, leaving the factory, as usual, in charge of the night watch. It is supposed he fell asleep, or in some way the flames got a start before he was aware of it. The loss falls heavily on Mr. McNabb, who is an industrious and energetic man. He will lose about $7,000, as there was no insurance Charles Beugnot loses two car loads of heading worth about $600. The loss will be felt here by all, as McNabb gave employment to quite a number of hands. Papers are being circulated or subscriptions to set Mr. McNabb up in the factory once more, and our citizens are subscribing liberally. Let the good work go on.

The New Telegraph Line.

They are putting up the new line of telegraph now. The work is moving west from Hicksville along the Newville road, and the poles are now up to within two or three miles of town. Load after load of fine cedar poles go through town every day. They were unloaded at the Jackson and Wabash depots, and then taken out on the road by teams. This will make a line entirely independent of those now running along the railroads. We learn there will be an office opened here and in each of the other county seats through which the line goes. This will give our business men a good chance for news and market reports.

—The ladies of the M. E. church will give an oyster supper at Hebel's Hall on next Tuesday evening. Supper from half-past five until ten o'clock. Vocal and instrumental music will be furnished. A cordial invitation is extended to all.

—J. D. Rowley, administrator, will commence the sale of the personal property of the late James Quince, at St. Johns, November 18. The sale will continue until the goods are all sold.

LOOK ON THIS PORTRAIT GALLERY!

A Finer set of Men Never Graced a County Ticket.

Gentlemen, the Victory is Surely Yours!

Hon. D. D. Moody, candidate for representative, is just the man for the intelligent people to send to the legislature. He has had experience in the affairs relative to this position, is a good speaker and a man who labors hard for the best interests of the community he defends. There is no use sending a man who lacks life and ambition, can not make a speech and could be talked into most anything.

For county clerk D. Y. Husselman asks your support. Dan., as he is familiarly known, was raised in old De Kalb and has been a staunch democrat since his 21st birthday. Being unfortunate by a disease in the hip he has had more than his share of ups and downs. Now is the time for his more fortunate companions and friends generally to assist him, and place him in a position where life will be more agreeable and pleasant to him. His opponent dose'nt need office.

Thos. H. Tomlinson, for Auditor, is a gentleman whom the democracy of this county can feel proud of. He has a clear party record and has the ability to conduct the affairs of the office in a pleasing and satisfactory manner. We bespeak for him the support of the people and especially of the democracy. The other fellow cannot get there, and in view of this fact don't waste your vote.

Lafayette J. Miller, who has served so faithfully and honestly as county treasurer, is again the chosen candidate of his party. Lafe is truly a capital fellow, ever sociable, pleasant and loves a good joke. He is one of the most liberal gentlemen in the state, always giving his money willingly and freely to churches, benevolent societies and all enterprises that are of value to the interests of the people—the boys will all stay by him we are sure. His antagonist is quite different in many respects.

—John W. Boyle, the candidate for sheriff, is very highly spoken of by every one. His election is a fixed fact and acknowledged so by many of the opposing party. Wilmington township, his present home, will give him almost a united support, while his many friends throughout the county will rally to his support on the morning of election. The republican candidate has a poor show.

John Butt, for recorder, is well known to almost every voter of the county and no man can say aught against him. He is accommodating, enterprising and affable in his everyday pursuits of life. As a business man and penman he has few superiors, and the fact of his being an early settler here we should be glad have a chance to give him this honor in his declining years.

Jay J. Van Auken, the next county surveyor, comes before the people as a tested man; that is we have tried him. Men of both parties acknowledge him to be the most correct surveyor we ever had, and as this is a very important office to the interest of land owners, our farmers and townspeople, irrespective of party, should give him their united support. He is not only a good surveyor, but is also a clever, genial and sociable gentleman, enterprising and a firm believer and advocate in the principles of democracy. Flint will never get there, Eligh.

J. J. Latson, the sterotyped candidate for coroner, will, of course, "take his seat" again. He is a man worthy of a more important office; but never mind, uncle Jimmy, you may be sheriff one of these days. What do the people want of Cowan—he would'nt do at all. Every time he would get broke he could furnish himself with a "stiff" and what could we do about it? There is no use talking we must elect Mr. Latson.

J. Sewell, B. D. Thomas and O. H. Widney are our candidates for commissioners. They are known througout the county to be honest, intelligent and worthy citizens, and will act as guardians over our county affairs equal to any trio of men that could be selected. Give them the straight democratic vote and all is told.

W. H. Dills should be elected judge. His legal experience and advantages together with his even temper, and quiet manners fit him for the office. Mr W. H. Dills is an old resident of this county and has fought many a hard battle for his party during spirited campaigns. Give him your full support.

Our space will not allow us to comment upon the state ticket, and we think it unnecessary to do so, as the election is as sure as the rising and setting of the noonday sun.

—Miss Jennie McClellen of Waterloo, now at Ann Arbor, Mich., was married at the latter place on Thursday Oct. 26, to Mr. Don. A. Garwood, of Waterloo. The young couple start out in life with prospects unusually brilliant and the best wishes of a large circle of friends. They will make their future home in Waterloo.

—Dr. LaRue will positively cure rheumatism. tf.

Rally, Boys, Rally

Give us a Clean Sweep Next Tuesday.

No Election Ever Looked so Encouraging.

We are Bound to get There, Eli.

From general hearsay we are led to believe that the democratic ticket will be elected throughout with a good majority next Tuesday. Many republicans have become entirely discouraged and openly acknowledge that we have them by the "horns."

The democratic candidates have all made a thorough canvass and feel confident of being elected. Moody has labored earnestly for both himself and the party and has made a great change in people who have been misled by wire-working republicans and their "one case" organs.

We have the confidence of all voters and their is no question but that we are the winning party, unless the election should be run by money, and other illegal means.

—The Record calls on all those who keep late hours and are dissipated to vote the republican ticket. They usually do that anyway. We remember being kept awake nearly all night two years ago by a couple of republican orators who got on a bum with some of their friends after their speech was over. There was not a democrat in the crowd, and they howled, sang and swore till after three o'clock in the morning. And they voted the republican ticket, too. So the Record need not fret about that class of men. It will get them anyhow.

—There was a spirited suit before the road commissioners Monday and Tuesday over the proposed reservoir at Butler. The Wabash road wants a reservoir to enable them to get water enough for use in their engines, and some of the people object to having a pond raised near them. It is not settled yet.

—When John Baxter asks you to support the "prohibition candidate" for the legislature, tell him to pay Bill Groscop for the drinks he set out during John's campaign, look over the bill he paid Chris. Baker at the Junction, ask the Garrett boys how many drinks they had at his expense, and so on.

—Oh, October,
Thou disrober
Of the bushes and the trees,
Blow thou lightly—
Shine thou brightly
On us mortals, if you please!
There are many—
Oh! too many—
Who've yet got no overcoats;
Please remember
In November
They expect to sell their v—oats.

—What did Hubbell and Dr. Dodge want of that bottle of whisky when they started from here to go to Garrett to make a temperance political speech last week? We are in favor of submitting this question to the people right now.

—Speak always according to your conscience, but let it be done in terms of good nature, civility and good manners. Don't try to swap off human beings who are equal in every respect to yourself, and in some a little more.

—James McDowell and G. W. Link have been active in assisting their former employer, Mr. McNabb in getting subscriptions for a new outfit. His men all speak highly of him.

—J. E. Beugnot, manager of the Pacific saloon, has added a fine and attractive lunch counter. Farmers and others can get a meal cheap by calling in. He also keeps fresh oysters.

—Geo. Grund and wife take their meals at Hollister's, but room in the house where they have lived during the summer. They don't "jump" George out of his vote.

—What do you think of a candidate whose neighbors of the same party will not support? The republican party has a man of that kind.

BULLETIN BOARD.

This is the Way it Will Stand After the Votes are Counted.

HURRAH FOR US DEMOCRATS!

Moody will lay his opponent in the shade five hundred strong.

Husselman looms up so far ahead of Ezra that it will take a full sized blackboard to get the total.

Tomlinson gets away with his man in the neighborhood of three hundred votes.

Miller makes a grand walk-a-way and carries about four hundred majority.

Boyle "handcuffs" his opponent entirely, and walks into the county hotel with handsome odds.

Butt cleans the table, and Thad. knows how it is himself. His majority runs way up into the hundreds.

VanAuken can't eat for laughing. He received enough votes to elect a half dozen men.

Latson gave Doc. Cowan the worse dose he ever sampled, and he'll keep on practicing medicine.

The commissioners are all ahead of their ticket, and thank their republican friends very much for remembering them.

Dills went in like a race horse, and his majority was astonishing, owing to the large republican vote in the district.

Reynolds gets away with Peterson a great many more than was anticipated.

Gerber as joint representative, and Hubbell's prohibition dodge didn't work worth a cent.

—Jimmy Baxter's horse has been heated in over driving and injured its eyes badly. It may recover, but we doubt it somewhat.

—Barney & Erick, at Spencerville are selling goods in their line very cheap. Our readers in the vicinity of that place should call on them.

—Fifty dollars reward is offered for the return of Billy Little's ax. There is no use looking about Bill Stahl's shop for it, because it isn't there.

—Dr. C. G. Hartman and Thomas Story of Avilla, were at the railroad meeting at Leesburg, to represent the interests of their lively little town.

—We hear it whispered that a high-toned wedding is soon to come off either here or at Waterloo. As yet the talismanic pasteboards of invitation have not been issued.

—Our old-time friend John Thumman, of Wolf Lake, attended the railroad meeting at Leesburg this week, as did also, A. T. S. Kist, of Warsaw. Mr. Kist is father to Mr. Kist who once edited the Butler Record.

—The new telegraph line is meeting some opposition on the part of a few who live along the line. They object to having the poles put up on the highway. The case is still pending.

—Come and hear about grand old England, her palaces, cathedrals, abbeys and the differences between England and America humorously described. Nov. 4.

MR. EDITOR:—On the 24th day of October, was the occasion of a very pleasant wedding, at the residence of Mr. Amos Smith, in Steuben county. Mr. Charles E. Shuman and Miss Sadie Smith were united in the holy bonds of wedlock. The ceremony was performed by Rev. F. F. Christine, of Waterloo. A large number of friends were at the marriage, making it a joyful occasion. The happy couple received many nice presentt. May the blessings of the Supreme Director be with them in their journey through life. Y.

DIED.—Elizabeth Boren, wife of Edward Boren—born in Harrison county, Pa. Jan. 30, 1825, and died in DeKalb county, Ind., Oct. 24, 1882—aged 57 years, 8 months and 24 days. Mrs. Boren, with her husband, moved to this county in 1846, and was among the first settlers of Jackson township, and saw many dark and gloomy days in an early day. She has been a member of the United Brethren church for a number of years, lived an exemplary christian life and died in a living faith. She was a kind mother, a generous neighbor and one highly esteemed by all. The funeral services were conducted by Rev. H. Elson.

TO O, HONEST TO SUCCEED.

"Sir, I have here a little thing
Quite touching in its way;
That tells of rippling water
And the smell of the new-mown hay;
The bashful maiden's witching smile
The lowing of the kine,
The meadows spangled o'er with flowers,
The sunset most divine,
Are also pictured by the use
Of softly sounding words,
And over all there comes the sweet,
Low twittering of the birds."

'Twas then upspoke the editor;
"Your scheme is good," he said;
"On the rippling water racket
You are really quite ahead.
But the spangled meadow business
And the blushing country maid
Have long since been copyrighted,
And therefore I'm afraid
That your story will not answer;
But if you could only make
The maiden sweep the parlor
It will simply take the cake."

The poet man was much downcast,
The lustre left his eye;
He rose to go, and sadly said:
"I cannot tell a lie."

A MIDSUMMER FREAK.

"Hands wanted at White's dairy farm, Eltingville." We were sitting in the phæton in front of Lavaud's hotel, at Rossville, when this sign, hung out on the walk, met our eyes.

I looked from it to Baby; Baby, with a little laugh in her blue eyes, returned my gaze. We understood each other.

"Let us go," she said, as we drove off.

"Now?" I asked.

"Nonsense! Of course not; but we can drive home, hunt up some old dresses and old shoes, make a couple of sun-bonnets, and to-morrow morning, when Harry goes away, harness up the box wagon and try our luck. It will be lots of fun."

Now, be it distinctly understood that my audacious friend was "wooed an' married an' a'," while I was a single young woman, accountable only to myself for my misdeeds.

"And Harry?" I asked.

"We will tell him when we come back."

"But," I urged again, "what do you imagine we will have to do? I have only the the vaguest notions of farm work. My knowledge has been principally derived from story books, and I am afraid their suggestions are, to say the least, unpractical. Is it to husk corn, or pare apples, or—r—"

"Pick potatoes, most likely," broke in Baby, "Never mind what it is; we can steal away and go home if we do not like it."

"Very well," I said, and it was settled.

Harry took the 7 o'clock train next morning, with an unsuspicious heart, and his wife and I went home to begin our adventure.

Titus was ordered to harness up the box wagon while we dressed. Two straight, plain calico skirts were put on and viewed with much complacency. My jacket was a loose one, borrowed from Sarah, the cook; Baby had ripped the ruffling off one of her own. Her sun-bonnet was blue, mine a bright pink. Our hair we plaited in two braids down our backs; our shoes were a miracle of holes—I gave a fleeting thought to Baby's high French heels. Farm women did not usually wear them, I thought but I said nothing.

We laughed till we were exhausted at the figures we made, but decided, thanks to the sun-bonnets, that we were pretty well disguised.

Away we drove in high glee, amid the laughter of the servants, who were by this time pretty well used to our pranks.

"We will be back for the 5:30 train," shouted Baby, as we turned out at the gate.

"Baby," I said, when we were on the Annadale road, "do you know where it is?"

"Which; the farm, or Eltingville?"

"The farm."

"No, but we can ask."

And ask we did, and no little amusement we created, as we drove into the inn-yard, put up the horse, and proceeded the rest of the way on foot—a wise suggestion of Baby's. It would not look right, she said, for working-women to drive up in their own wagon. Of course I acquiesced.

I wonder did there ever present themselves at any place two such remarkable little figures as turned in at White's dairy farm?

We went passed on for two fields and and met no one; as last we came across a man with a spade on his shoulder.

"Is this White's dairy farm?" asked Baby.

"It be," was the answer.

"Where do they want people to work?" demanded I, ashamed to let Baby do all the talking.

"Oh, you want a job, do you?"

Baby's sun-bonnet drooped and quivered. I knew she was speechless.

"Yes," I said; "where do we go?"

"To that red building over there. Just down that path and then to the right."

We thanked him, and ran on till we came to a great red building, a sort of barn, with wide open door, and within men and women, apparently hard at work sorting and packing fruit.

Baby gave my arm a triumphant squeeze. We could do that.

A few turned and stopped their work, looking at us curiously, but the rest kept on, occasionally exchanging a jest with one another.

A young man stood in his shirt-sleeves—marvelously white they were, too—with his back towards us, giving orders to a cartman who was loading a wagon. In a moment he turned and regarded us with a broad stare of astonishment.

"Sir," said Baby, with her eyes on the ground; "we heard you wanted hands: can you give us any work?"

Alas! Alas! Baby was more than half a French woman, and, as the clear, crisp, un-English tones fell on his ear, the look of suspicion on his face became one of certainty.

"Will you come this way?" he asked, leading us out at the opposite doorway. "What can you do?" he added.

"Anything," I said, as confidently as I could.

He showed us a pile of fruit which was to be sorted and put into baskets, and walked away to the first comers.

Baby and I fell to at once. She knew what she was about, and I worked under her directions.

"Oh, Min," she said, in a whisper, "we're in a nice scrape if he finds us out. Harry will be so angry."

"Let us steal away," I whispered back; "we can do it in a little while."

Still we kept on, half laughing, half dismayed, for a couple of hours, when our master, as Baby persisted in calling him, came back. He might have been any age between 25 and 30—tall, straight, and handsome. I saw him glance at Baby's white, slender fingers, where—horror of horrors!—shone a diamond, which, from sheer force of habit, she had forgotten to remove.

He looked somewhat surprised at the quantity of work we had done.

"You are getting along famously," he said, in an amazed tone. Then: "Will you be so good, as to follow me?"

Men did not generally speak in that way to hired help, but we could not in prudence refuse; so we followed him to a little garden, where, under some trees that screened them from observation, we found a bench and rude table.

"Will you wait here?" he asked, and touching his hat, went away.

"Well," I cried, sitting down, "if this does not beat everything! What does this mean?"

"It means that he has found out who we are," answered Baby, dejectedly. I wish we had not come."

"Never mind," I said consolingly; "it is an adventure, anyhow; a little more than we bargained for, that is all."

Just then back came "our master," carrying a tray which he deposited on table before us. Our astonished eyes took in wine, milk, a cold chicken, fresh butter, and slices of home-made bread.

"Mrs. Lester," he said, turning to Baby, "will you forgive me for recognizing you? But it was almost necessary; the men might have been rude, and it is better that you should go home now. You are wondering, I dare say, how I came to know you, but I have seen you quite often driving around the country with your friend. My name is Roger Carlyle."

Baby laughed till the tears ran down her cheeks.

"Mr. Carlyle," she said, "I am infinitely obliged to you. We saw the sign yesterday at Rossville, and thought we would come for the fun of the thing. But I had no idea we were to have such an adventure. I have an idea that you are masquerading yourself."

"Well, I am," he acknowledged. "I am acting to-day for my uncle, who owns the place. But will you not eat something? You must be hungry."

We were starving, and did full justice to the nice luncheon. While we were eating he went to the inn for the horse, and brought him round to us.

"Good-by," said Baby, as he gave her the reins; "and be sure you come and see us. Mr. Lester will be glad to thank you."

He laughed and promised.

"O Baby!" I said, when we were well on our way, "What a scrape!"

"Pshaw!" returned Baby. "It was plenty of fun; nevertheless, we will not do it again."

As the 5:30 train came in, two irreproachably dressed young ladies sat in a pony phæton, waiting for Harry Lester.

We told him all about it after dinner, and though he scolded he had to laugh, particularly when we donned our costumes to give him an idea of the effect.

One good thing came out of it all—our friendship with Roger Carlyle. He came over as he had promised, and gave Harry a very ludicrous account of our proceedings.

Did it ever lead to more than friendship? How curious are! Pesbaps.

Porterhouse Steak.

Burlington Hawkeye.

At the restaurant—"This is the porter-house, is it?" asked the sad passenger, sitting at the corner table in the restaurant. "Yes, sir," said the waiter, with the weary air of a man who was tired of having to tell the same lie a thousand times a day, "porterhouse steak, sir; same as you ordered, sir."

"Do you cut porterhouse steak from between the horns this year?" asked the sad passenger, with the intonation of a man who wanted to know. "Sir?" said the waiter. "It seemed to be a trifle tenderer last year," the sad passenger went on with the air of a tired man indulging in pleasant reminiscences of the past, "but I remember, now; it was cut a trifle lower down then. Last year you cut your porterhouse steaks from the curl in the forehead, and the sirloins from the shin. But I think this comes from between the horns. I used to live in a boarding-house where they cut the porterhouse between the horns, and this one reminds me of them.

"Animal dead this steak came from?" "Dead," echoed the astonished waiter, "of course, sir. He was butchered, sir."

"Butchered to make a Roman holiday," sighed the sad passenger. "He would be more likely to make a Roman swear. Well, it was time he was killed. He hadn't many more years to live on this earth. Ah, here is the brass tip from one of his horns. Dropped into the steak, no doubt, while you were slicing it off. What do you do with these steaks when the guests are through with them?"

The waiter looked puzzled. "Why, sir," he said, "they hain't nothing left of 'em when customers gets through with 'em sir." "Possible?" said the sad passenger, "what became of them?" The waiter looked nervous. "What?" he said; "the customers eat them up." The sad passenger looked up with an air of interest. "Incredible," he exclaimed; "can not accept your statement without proof. They may hide them under their chairs, or secrete them in their napkins, or then may carry them away in their pockets to throw at burglars, but I can not believe they eat them. Here, let me see one of them eat this, and I will believe you. Trust me, good waiter, I——"

But the waiter pointed to a placard inscribed "Positivly no Trust," and went to the cashier's desk to tell the boss to look for that man at the corner table, as he didn't seem satisfied with his steak and had asked for trust.

THE WICKEDEST

And the Wealthiest Woman of Egypt—How She Got Rid of an Uncongenial Husband—An Austrian Doctor's Three Weeks of Luxurious Slavery — Lieutenant Goll's Tragic End.

The New York Times printed the following history of the Princess Elmineh, sister of the late Khedive who is the richest and most noted woman in the East, has great influence with the fellah population, and hers is one of the prettiest, and is certainly the richest, of the palaces of Cairo. She is the largest land owner in Egypt, and having received a European education, makes good use of her income. She is now what the French call passee, being a little over forty years old, and the hot Egyptian sun, combined with a life of dissipation and unrestrained enjoyment, have played havoc with one who, ten years ago, was called the "Star of the East."

Egyptian, like Turkish women, are married by their parents without their wishes ever being consulted, so that, as a rule, there is no pretense of love or even sympathy between them. Thus was the Princess Elmineh, at the age of sixteen, given away to a Turkish Pasha, noted only for his wealth and dishonesty, being old, ugly and ignorant. The wedding took place in Constantinople, where the dowry of the Princess was estimated at $80,000,000.

The Princess received a liberal education; she speaks three European languages, plays the piano, sings well, and is in most respects an accomplished lady, and in thirty days she had seen enough of her husband to despise him and to treat him with contempt. No Turk dare enter his wife's private apartment if she reverses her overshoes, which every Turkish woman wears, and leaves them outside her door, and the Princess Elmineh availed herself of this privilege during the two months she remained in Constantinople. At the expiration of that time the doctors advised her to pass the winter at Cairo, whither she went, accompanied by her husband, and where she has remained ever since. Immediately on arriving in Egypt she laid herself at the feet of the Khedive, telling him that she preferred death to living with her husband, who was in every respect her inferior, and begged him to protect her. As she was a favorite of his he appointed her husband to the Generalship of Souakin, on the Red Sea, and, as he never arrived there, it is presumed that he was poisoned on the way, this being the ordinary method by which the Khedives have, from time to time, silence their foes. The Princess having thus freed herself, commenced a life, which for romance, cruelty, profligacy, adventure and dissipation has not often been surpassed. The old Shoubra Palace, extending from the Shoubra road to the Nile, was pulled down and the present magnificent structure erected in its stead, containing eighty rooms, all of which are decorated and furnished in the most extravagant fashion. Shortly after the Princess had taken possession of this seraglio, many curious and incredible rumors were afloat in Cairo, which at the time were only whispered, but which subsequent events proved to be true.

TRAPPING A DOCTOR.

There was in the service of the Khedive a handsome young Swiss officer named Goll, who had been in the Pope's Swiss Guard, and the Princess, happening to see him one day on duty at the palace, became enamored of him, and next day asked the Khedive to transfer him to her service, which he did. The main gate to her palace was then pulled down, and over a large archway a beautiful Swiss chalet was built. Lieutenant Goll took possession of it as the Princess' Master of Ceremonies. From that time they seemed inseparabler. Wherever the Princess went young Goll accompanied her, and those who called to pay their homage to the great Elmineh were introduced by him. He had the management of all her estates, became enormously wealthy, and in a short time developed into a public character. He went to Switzerland one summer, and returned accompanied by his sister, who became the Princess' companion, a unique position for a Christian to occupy. About four years after this it was rumored that Goll had formed an attachment for a French actress named Ernestine Leduc, and those of his friends who knew the Egyptains well advised him to be cautious, as their vengeance was terrible. He, however, paid little or no attention to the warning. Goll suddenly disappeared, leaving no traces behind him, and at the same time Ernestine Leduc was found strangled in her apartment. Inquiries were made about him at Cairo, and the Princess offered $5,000 for information that might lead to his discovery, although she caused the rumor to be spread that he had murdered Ernestine and then fled. Ten days later the banks of the Nile overflowed, and the mutilated body of young Goll was deposited by its waters in a field adjoining the palace. The hands and feet were tied together, the eyes had been torn from their sockets, and the heart had been pierced through and through. The Swiss Consul demanded an inquiry, which, like most proceedings of this sort in the East, was wholly a formality. Goll's sister was never again seen in Egypt, though she subsequently appeared in her native town, where she lives, but when asked about her brother she is wont to say that the subject is too painful for conversation.

LIEUTENANT GOLL'S TRAGIC FATE.

During the following seven years Cairo was startled by frequent disappearances of young gentlemen belonging to the best native and European families, and these remained unexplained until the following incident occurred: A young Austrian doctor named Canelli had been in Cairo about a year. He had been a military surgeon in his own country, and, besides being a thorough master of his profession, was handsome, gay and dashing. One afternoon as he was driving on the Shoubra road, the fashionable promenade and drive in Cairo, he saw a veiled Turkish lady making signs to him from her carriage. He mentioned this to a friend, who told him it must have been the Princess Elmineh, and that he had better avoid her. Soon after that, and at short intervals, Dr. Canelli received numerous gifts from an unknown benefactor. They took the shape of flowers, fruit, jewels, and even horses and carriages, and he was at a loss to know whence they came. At about 11 o'clock one night, as he was preparing to retire, he heard a carriage rattle into his yard at a break-neck pace, and a minute later his servant appeared before him, accompanied by an elegantly attired eunuch, who said that his master, Kiamil Pasha, had been suddenly taken ill, and that he had a carriage waiting for the doctor down stairs, as not a moment was to be lost. Dr. Canelli dressed, rushed down stairs, and jumped into the carriage. After going some distance the vehicle stopped, the door was opened, and the eunuch who up to then had been sitting by the coachman, entered, and at the same time another eunuch, who must have been waiting in the road, entered by the opposite door, holding a lantern in his hand. The carriage immediately went off at a tremendous pace. All this took place in far less time than it takes to relate. The Doctor saw that his case was helpless; the looks of his black companions convinced him that resistance would be useless. The carriage went on rapidly for ten minutes and stopped under an archway. A gate was closed behind them, and Dr. Canelli saw at a glance that he was in the seraglio of the Princess, a prisoner, and resolved to make the best he could out of the situation. He was taken to the Swiss chalet, which had been built for poor Goll, and as everything in it was perfect, he made himself as comfortable as he could under the circumstances.

The eunuch administered to his wants, and after a careful examination of his surroundings he ate a dainty little supper which he found ready for him on the table, and without undressing laid himself down on the perfumed bed. He rose early the next morning, bathed and breakfasted, and, finding that he was under no restraint, strolled into the beautiful garden. He was, however, closely followed by a eunuch who said his name was Kerim Aga, and on approaching the outer gate on his return, was politely advised to take shelter from the sun in the chalet. He passed the day in looking over the many well selected books that were at his disposal, and in vain attempted to draw the eunuch into conversation. The most singular thing of all was that besides his attendant, he had not seen a human being on the premises, and, considering that there were a hundred slaves in the Princess' employ, he came to the conclusion that this man Kerim Aga was her only trusted slave, and that the others were employed elsewhere, so that they should not see him. As a matter of fact, during the whole of twenty-four days that he was a prisoner in the Palace, Kerim Aga and the Princess were the only persons he saw. At 7 o'clock that evening the eunuch told him that the sick patient wished to see him. They descended into the cellar of the chalet, and an iron door being opened by the slave, they entered a well illuminated underground passage, and after going some two hundred yards, mounted a small staircase, at the top of which Kerim Aga, opening another iron door, told the Doctor to enter and disappeared. Dr. Canelli found himself in the Princess' private apartment, where he was welcomed by her in person. The Doctor has since said that Heaven itself could hardly surpass the three rooms comprising this suite, and in beauty, grace and elegance he doubts if any celestial being surpasses the Princess Elmineh. For three weeks which to him appeared but as so many days, did Dr. Canelli remain in the apartments. The more he saw of the Princess the more he thought the world had misjudged her, and he determined to become her champion the day she gave him his liberty, which he imagined he could obtain whenever he might ask for it.

THE DELIGHTFUL SLAVERY ENDED.

At 10 o'clock of the twenty-second night, Kerim Aga rushed into the room and told the Princess, in an excited manner, that one of the grooms had just been dangerously kicked by a horse. She asked the Doctor if he would kindly attend the slave, which he willingly agreed to do. Kerim Aga opened the door by which they had entered the first time, and had remained locked ever since, and asked the Doctor to follow him. As he was leaving, the Princess, kissing her jeweled fingers to him, told him to return speedily. Even as he was descending the marble stairs, although the door had been locked behind them by the eunuch, he could still hear her crying: "Revines, vite, mon cher je t'attends avec impatience." Instead of going by the passage leading to the chalet, and to which direction Canelli knew the stables to be, Kerim Aga opened a door in the opposite direction, and unhooking a lantern from the wall entered a dark passage followed by the Doctor whose suspicions were now fully aroused. He could hear the waters of the Nile ominously splashing at the end of the passage. All the tales he had heard about poor Goll shot through his memory, and he determined to keep his eye on the eunuch and to sell his life dearly if foul play was attempted. They had advanced some distance when Kerim Aga told the Doctor to go before him, which he firmly refused to do. The eunuch then put down the lantern and in a second rushed upon his victim with a drawn yataghan, or heavy cutlass, that he had concealed under his flowing robes; but Canelli, being on the alert, slipped aside, and in doing so upset the light. And now began a dreadful combat in the dark between the two strong men, one of whom was armed with a deadly weapon and bent on murder, and the other unarmed, but having his life to defend. The eunuch lashed about with his yataghan, following up and wounding the Doctor, whose whereabouts he could tell by the noise of his footfalls in the vault. The Doctor then had the presence of mind to slip off his shoes and thus saved his life, for, although he could tell where the assassin was, his own movements were a mystery to his antagonist, who, after vainly searching for him, went toward the door in order to obtain assistance, or perhaps a light. He was closely and silently followed by the Doctor. No sooner had he put the key into the lock than Canelli rushed upon him from behind, and pulling him to the ground, got a grip upon his throat to let go which meant certain death. The slave did all he could to shake him off, using the yataghan to the best advantage and inflicting two severe wounds. He would evidently have been the conqueror had not the Doctor dashed his head against the stone pavement with such force as to stun him. Still the Doctor held on to the wretch's throat until his heart ceased to beat.

THE MOTH RETURNED TO LIGHT.

Having thus escaped from what appeared inevitable death, he pulled the body from behind the door, and turning the key, found himself at the foot of the stairs leading to the Princess' apartment and at the entrance of the passage leading to the chalet, both of which were well illuminated. He found the chalet door locked, and thinking the key might be on the dead eunuch's person, he returned and successfully searched the warm body. Then he remembered that Kerim Aga had opened the door of the cave and that of the Princess' apartment with the same key, and thinking that there might be but one key to all that labyrinth, he took it out of the lock, and found that it not only opened the cellar to the chalet, but also the outer gate leading to the Shoubra road and to liberty. Once there his first thought was to rush home, but he had not gone 100 yeads before he was taken with an irresistable desire to see the Princess again. He actually retraced his steps through the gate, the chalet, the passage and up the marble staircase. Opening the Princess' door he appeared before her, shoeless, his clothes torn to shreds, and covered with blood from head to foot. The Princess was seated on a divan, smoking a perfumed narghileh and surrounded by several female slaves, and on seeing him uttered a cry, but did not otherwise lose her presence of mind. "Madame," said the Doctor, "I have failed to find your wounded groom, but you will have no difficulty in finding the body of your trusted slave and accomplice at the bottom of the steps. Before she could give the alarm he disappeared. Dr. Canelli took refuge in the Austrian Consulate, whence he was sent to Trieste, where he has practiced medicine ever since.

Why Boys Leave the Farm.

Laramie Boomerang.

Numerous writers have been heard from on the question of why boys leave the farm, and the suggestion has been made that one reason is that the rising generation is becoming depraved.

This is not true. They do not leave the dear old farm, where industry and virtue have their eternal abiding place, to mingle with the mad follies of city life. Boys do not desert the quiet homestead, and the fond parents whose life has been devoted to their children, for the reason that they want to mingle in the giddy whirl of metropolitan life and become sharks in business and immoral society stars.

No farmer boy ever forgot in his successful years the quiet home, the sturdy labor or the numberless attractions of that old farm, and during the cares and perplexities of commercial or professional life in a great city there is forever in his heart that picture of contentment and rest, that haven secure from storm tossed billows of uncertain trade and the snares of artificial existence.

Other reasons are varied as the human mind lie at the bottom of this dissatisfaction. The same causes, perhaps never led two different boys to desert the rural home and flee to the city.

The life of a farmer boy is clouded with many nameless annoyances of the great heart of traffic wots not.

He who has not passed through it ought not to write about it, for he cannot deal with the trouble understandingly. If you have been a farmer's son and have swung an old scythe all the forenoon and come home at noon hot and hungry, wearing an old pair of overalls of which you are doubtful and an open back shirt with your sun burned spinal column sticking out out of it clear down to your waistband, and found on your arrival a sweet little city dumpling dressed in cool muslin there to greet you and look over you, and smile at your costume and your appetite, you can say something perhaps. If you have bent your aching form over a two acre field of Early Rose potatoes all day feeding Paris green wthe voracious striped potato bug and then milked nine cows and labored with a primary class of nine calves trying to teach them how to drink and experinced the rural joy of being butted over into the cucumber patch by each one of them and then crawled into bed with a sun-peeled nose and blistered hands at night, you know a farmer boy's communion with nature.

It is true that machinery in every department has lent a charm to it on paper, but still it has its drawbacks and its sorrows.

An Extraordinary Surgical Operation.

Paris Correspondence of Philadelpia Bulletin.

A recent extraordinary surgical operation has created quite a sensation here. A young waiter in one of the cafes bet he could swallow a spoon after the manner of those mountebanks who swallow swords. Unfortunately, the spoon, although nine inches long, slipped from between his fingers and descended into the pit of his stomach. Unsuccessful efforts were made to regain it by means of an instrument passed down the œsophagus. The man was then removed to the Hospital Lariboisien, where the eminent surgeon, Dr. Felizel, successfully performed the operation of opening the stomach by means of an incision and extracting the spoon therefrom.

The stomach had previously been dilated by means of vapor of ether. This delicate operation lasted three-quarters of hour, during which time the patient was kept under the influence of chloroform. He must have been in a funny state. At last accounts he was doing remarkably well, and the doctors think he will be able to leave the hospital in a few days. Remarkable as this case may seem, it is not the only one of the kind. The medical records cite numerous instances of persons swallowing forks, spoons, a bar of lead weighing nearly a pound, and a long list of things so extraordinary that to enumerate them would seem like a too reckless flight of imagination, and of their successfully being relieved of these indigestible articles, either in a natural way or by the help of surgery.

Mr. Mackey has secured a site for the palace which he proposes to erect in New York. It is to surpass the Vanderbilt mansion.

JOCOSITIES.

'Twas Sunday morn, and Jones
Was breakfasting with Gray;
Said Jones: "Another bit of steak,
As I have to preach to-day."
"Guess I'll brace up a little, too,"
Said Gray, his eyes a glisten,
And he helped himself to a hunk of meat,
"For you know I have to listen.

"Do you wear night-caps, dearest?" asked his sweetheart. "Yes love with a little sugar," he replied, and she couldn't think what he meant.

"You're as sweet as a peach," he said, patting her softly on the cheek. "Yes," she murmured, struggling still nearer to him, "I'm a cling stone.

"Dwo vas schoost enough, budt dree vas too blendty," remarked Hans when his best girl asked him to take her mother along with them to a dance.

When a man kums to me for advice, I find out what kind of advice he wants, and I give it to him; this satisfies him he and I are two as smart as there is living.—Josh Billings.

"Women are so contrary," said Blobbs. "I thought when I got married my wife would darn my socks and let me alone; instead of that she lets my socks alone and darns me."

It knocks a man all out after he has wasted sweet words of flattery and kind caresses on a child to find that the handsome lady near by is its step-mother, who rather detests the brat.

"Vy my tear poy," he said at Long Branch, Tuesday, "dare ish no blace like der seaside in October; der air ish fine like silk, und der prizes at der boarding houses is sheeper dan living at home. so dere!"

"Did you see the moon over your right shoulder, my dear," said she to him as they roamed down the walk 'N-n-no, not exactly; but I just saw the old man over my left shoulder, and I'll bid you good-night.

"If it were customary in this country to confer titles upon individuals of rank in literature," asked a shallow but conceited journalist of an old one, "what would I be?" "Barren of ideas, my son," was the response.

"Did you ever play cards with X?" "Only once or twice." "A swindler, isn't he?" "Well, swindler is perhaps a hard word to use of a man of whom I have seen little, but the 'King' did seem to have a singular affininity for him when it is his deal."

"No," she said, "it wasn't a seat in my pew that I grudged but I didn't like the woman. Good Heavens, I didn't want people to think she was a friend of mine and that I consorted with a woman who wore such an atrocious and old-fashioned bonnet.

This slang does raise the very mischief. When a handsome young wife went to a hardware store to get one of those wooden contrivances to mash potatoes, and said, "I want a masher," every man in the shop, from the boss to the office-boy, started to wait on her.

"No, papa, I do not wish to marry yet. What I want is a man who does not drink, smoke, chew, snuff, go out nights, gamble, bet, over-eat, etc.; in short a man with no vices, and one who is always good." "My daughter," said Mr. Dusenberry, "you are but a stranger here; heaven is your home."

A correspondent asks for information as to the "simplest and quickest way to make a hole for blasting purposes." Catch on a nail with your new pants just as you are going to a social dancing party, and if there won't be blasting enough for the next few minutes, there's no soothing syrup in swear words.

A person visiting Chicago for the first time, met a Westerner of the genuine type in the street near a Church. The stranger politely asked whose Church that was. He replied, in a tone which none but one who has been in the West can fully understand: 'Wal, I reckon that Church belongs to the Almighty; but a man by the name of Colver runs it for him!"

She tripped daintly down the street, half smiling at the admiring glances cast by the men at her white neck and arms as they shone through the filmy meshes of her lace over-waist. Two visitors from the rural districts were transfixed at the lavish and unaccustomed display of feminine loveliness, but one of them recovered sufficiently to remark: "Well, by gosh, if I had a dress like that I'd wear an under-shirt!"

Guarded by Thick Glass.

New York Sun.

The jewelry store of Theodore B Starr, extends from 206 Fifth avenue through to 1,126 Broadway. The glass in the show window on the south side of Fifth avenue entrance is half an inch thick. Three inches back of this glass is another pane of half-inch plate glass is extended completely across the window and upward of half its height. Back of this pane is a show-case. Mr. Starr, usually has displayed, up to 11 o'clock at night, a quantity of diamond rings, necklaces, gold watches, and other jewelry, valued at $10,000. Mr. Gray, the night watchman at the store, goes on duty about 11 o'clock, and transfers the jewelry to the safe. On Wednesday night at 11 o'clock he heard a crash of glass at the window, and found that a large hole had been broken in the outer plate. A pyramid-shaped piece of Belgian block as big as Pugilist Sullivan's fist had been thrown at the window. It struck, but did not break the inner pane of glass.

A hackman had seen two young men looking in the show window immediately before the breaking of the glass. One of them stepped back into the street, while the other stood near the window. The man in the street threw the stone. As he did so the other ran quickly up to the window and thrust his hand into the opening made by the stone. His hand came in violent contract with the second pane of glass, and he swore and ran toward twenty-fifth street. His confederate disappeared.

The burglars evidently thought there was but one pane of glass between them and the coveted jewelry. Mr. White, business manager for Mr. Starr, said that the peculiar arrangement of the glass in the show window was designed especially to meet such contingencies. The three sheets of glass are so clear that burglars might easily have mistaken them for one pane.

HOW JEHIEL MADE $50.

Also How the Young Vanderbilts Beat the Record.

Philadelphia Press.

Up in the White Mountains, a week or two ago, I heard of the latest achievement of the Vanderbilts. A party of the third generation of this interesting family (reckoning from the Commodore) was stopping at the Glen House. The party included two daughters and two sons-in-law of the reigning Vanderbilt and a cousin or two. From the Glen House the carriage road ascends in seven miles to the summit of Mt. Washington. Stages run up in about three hours schedule time. The ascent is nowhere very steep, but it is steady and steep enough to make fairly hard pulling for the six-horse teams.

One day it occurred to the Vanderbilt party that noblesse obliged them to go up the mountain in quicker time than had ever been accomplished before this advent. They sent for Milliken. That affable person appeared, his tall hat on the back of his head, and heard the Vanderbilt commands.

"I can give you a special conveyance," said Milliken; "but I don't know about cutting much under three hours. It's an awful pull."

"But it must be done," said one of the sons-in-law. The other son-in-law took Milliken aside and warmly assured him that money was no consideration.

"Most people, persisted the eloquent proprietor of the Glen, "find three hours none to long. The gradually unfolding succession of panoramic views, the new vistas that reveal themselves at every turn, the magnificent range that opens up as you scale the out-works and climb the massive shoulder of Mount Washington itself, skirting the huge and gloomy Gulf of Mexico, with Clay on your right, and beyond that the massive Jefferson then Adams, with its sharp and symmetrical peak, and finally, Madison; in the distance the winding and lovely Androscoggin, like a thread of silver, to say nothing of—"

"No matter about all that," said the son-in-law. "We want your best team and your best driver, and if the thing can, by any human possibility, be done in two hours and a half, we want to do it."

"That would be a very quick ascent," said Milliken, cautiously. Nevertheless, we'll see what can be done."

The result of the protracted negotiations was that Milliken gave the Vanderbilt party his lightest mountain wagon, seating twelve, his six famous grays, the best team in the Glen House stables, and Jehiel Cooper to handle the leathers. Jehiel has been driving on the mountain since 1861.

They started in the morning just before the regular stage, amid great excitement on the Glen House piazzas. Everybody had his watch in hand when Jehiel cracked the whip over the ears of the off leader, and almost everybody was provided with field glasses or telescope to watch the progress of the vehicle after it should have emerged from the wooded belt on the mountain side. "We shall do it!" shouted one of the sons-in-law to Milliken. Milliken removed his hat and merely remarked, "Two hours and a half is mighty quick time."

"Now," said the sons-in-law to the driver, as the stage whirled past the toll-house, "do you suppose we shall do it?"

"Mebee," replied Jehiel with a yank at the jaw of one of the pole-horses, who showed a disposition to caper. "The horses is in good fix and the road is in good fix."

"Make it in two hours and a half," returned the sons-in-law, "and it will be the best day's work you ever did."

The driver grinned and plied his lash. At the Half-way House all the watches were out. Jehiel pulled up to water the team in just one hour and thirteen minutes from the Glen. The excitement of the party increased. "An extra twenty dollar bill if we fetch it in 2:20!" shouted the son-in-law on the back seat. "And a dollar extra for every minute under 2:20!" added the other son-in-law.

The stage spun up the mountain at a tremendous rate, verily whizzing around the sharp turns of the zigzag with a velocity that almost projected the representatives of $200,000,000 into the Gulf of Mexico. The progress of the party was now plainly visible to the interested spectators at the Glen House below. There was also suspense and excitement among the guests at the Summit, for Milliken had telegraphed up that the Vanderbilts were engaged in beating the record. The six gray horses drew up panting and steaming at the platform on the summit, amid the cheers of the crowd. The sons-in-law sprang out and shook hands with each other and with the driver. The time-piece of one of them said two hours and four minutes, while the watch of the other made it in 2:02. It was agreed to split the difference and fix the record at 2:03.

For nearly an hour the operator at the Summit House was kept busy sending enthusiastic messages from the Vanderbilts to their friends in the world below. The family prestige had been vindicated. Some congratulatory replies began to pour in over the wire. The next morning every newspaper in New England contained the names of the Vanderbilts composing the party, and the fact that they had been driven up the mountain in the shortest time ever made on carriage road.

Some days afterward I was discussing the achievement with another old mountain driver. "I hear Jehiel's going to retire from the business," he remarked with a broad grin. "He's made his pile. Jehiel's a sly one."

"What do you mean?" I asked.

"I mean," said he, chuckling, "that when fools come along that are willing to pay greenbacks to see horses run up hill at a four mile gait, Jehiel's ready to accommodate 'em."

"And you don't consider two hours and three minutes the fastest time on record?"

Here he indulged in an explosion of profane mirth. "Record!" said he, "nobody said anything about the record but themselves. They were bound to have it so, and who was going to contradict a Vanderbilt?"

"And what is the fastest time?"

"Well," said the old driver, "I druv those same six grays to the Summit week before last in one hour and twenty-nine minutes with poultry for the Widow Dodge at the hotel. But I didn't git no fifty-dollar bill for doin' it."

Live Dummies.

A reporter for the Mail and Express seeing the following advertisement in a newspaper in New York, answered it and learned something:

Wanted—Young ladies to act as figures in suit department; only those well adapted to that purpose need apply.

"We hire women for their forms," said the shop-keeper. "My business is all form. These women we use for many things; to fix dresses on, and pin cloaks to, and to jam hats over, and, in fact, for everything except to talk to or reason with. Oh, they all find it necessary to bring their finest forms to us, but after the day's business is over we are not interested in what they do with them. Whether they lay them carefully by in their bureaus or squeeze the wind out of them is none our business. The women come of all parts of the city, and as soon as they present themselves to us we send them upstairs to our forewoman. She passes on their eligibility.

If they are up to the required standard we engage them, and pay them $8 a week. They are supposed to remain here from 9 o'clock in the morning until 6 o'clock in the evening, and besides being used as 'figures' they sometimes carry bundles. They are much more handy than the ordinary dummy, because we can simply direct them what to do and we are in the most instances obeyed. It is true we cannot kick them into one corner when they are in the way, as we can with the wire figure, but, you know, there are drawbacks to every advantage. The great majority of women who answer our advertisements are about 40 years of age. They have, no doubt, at one time been pretty, but now there is a sad commentary upon the double shuffle of time in their appearance. In the busy season, as it is at present, the poor, dear girls have a great deal to do. When a lady wants to buy a dress, one of the figures is called up, and she puts the dress on to show how it looks. She walks up and down the floor several times, and impresses the buyer with the beauty of the dress, which I will confidentially say is due to the beauty of the figure. Then the dress is sometimes purchased. Very often, however, the lady is not satisfied with the first dress, and the operation is continued indefinitely. In case the purchaser desires to buy a cloak, the figure has to robe herself in all the furs of the season in order to please the customer. The figure dresses and undresses perhaps 100 times in the course of the day. When the girls are very attractive, they are very good advertisements for the stores in which they are employed.' Their beauty draws custom.

The Cow-Boys and Their Horses

Wyoming Territory Letter in the Providence Journal.

As you mingle with these cow-boys, you find in them a strange mixture of good nature and recklessness. You are as safe with them alone on the plains as with any class of men, so long as you do not impose upon them. They will even deny themselves for your comfort, and imperil their lives for your safety. But impose upon them or arouse their ire, and your life is of no more value in their esteem than that of a coyote. Morally, as a class, they are foul-mouthed, blasphemous, drunken, treacherous, utterly corrupt. Usually harmless on the plains when sober, they are dreaded in the towns, for then liquor has the ascendency over them. They are also as improvident as the veriest "Jack" of the sea. Employed as cow-boys only six months in the year—from May till November—their earnings are soon squandered in dissoluteness, and then they hunt, or get odd jobs, to support themselves until another cattle season begins. They are never cumbered with baggage. What little they may have, besides the clothes they wear, and their revolver or gun, is carried in a bag, which they call their "war bag." Several weeks since, one of them slung his war bag into the wagon, with the careless remark: "There, that holds all I've earned in seven years." They are utterly reckless of live. Mr. Davis recently shot and wounded a huge buffalo—a most ugly antagonist in a fight. Three cow-boys immediately lighted out after him. One lariated him by the horns, another by a hind heel, and the third dismounted and leaped upon the enraged buffalo for a wild ride. "Missou," one of these reckless chaps, came upon four grizzly bears, two old ones and two large cubs. Unobserved by them, he dismounted and shot at one. The wounded bear turned upon the other as though its mate were the offender. For a little while the fur flew, and the very trees seemed to shake with the roar of the fighting beasts. "Missou" says he lay in ambush and shook his sides with laughter while watching the combat. Then he shot again and laid out one of the cubs. This shot arrested the attention of the bears, and they made for him. Dropping his gun, he hastily grabbed the pommel of his saddle, and just succeeded in drawing himself upon his frightened and running horse. The name of this fellow, so called from being a Missourian, suggets the fact that each one is dubbed with a name, and alway one suited to some peculiar characteristic. For example, one upon this ranch is called "Gum-Sack Pete," another "Windy Jim," and a third, "Few Clothes," suggested by the scantiness of his wardrobe. These combined facts will show the appropriateness of title given these fellows in a previous letter—the Bedouins of the plains. They never own any interest in the stock they tend. This dark picture of the cow-boys ought to be lightened by the statement that there is occasionally a white sheep among the black. True and devoted Christians are found among such company—men who will kneel down regularly and offer their prayers in the midst of their brawling and cursing associates. They are like Lot in Sodom.

A word about the horses employed in this business. They are trained for the work, and know just how to avoid the goring horns of the attacking steers and bulls. A fact: One unfamiliar with the business was riding one these horses, when a wild steer left the herd and rushed for him. In his fright he thrust his spurs into the sides of the horse and tried to make him flee. The horse, however, stood as if paralyzed. But just as the steer came up, and while the alarmed rider was anticipating naught but death for himself and his horse, the horse dextrously darted to one side, and, as the steer passed, the horse wheeled and ran directly after him, or began to drive him onward. Then a trained horse will throw the strongest steer or bull. His rider approaches with a lariat, one end of which is firmly tied to the pommel of the saddle. The other end is fixed with a noose, and the expert cow-boy throws this over the head or about the heels of the creature, when his horse settles back upon his haunches, and when the lariat straightens with a sudden jerk, the fleeing animal is as suddenly tumbled over. Of course, such an experiment with a full-grown steer is never attempt on a green horse. The horses are first trained to business by experiments on the younger stock.

Marriage as a Barber Sees It.

New York Sun.

"Marriage ist der best dings out," said the German barber near the Cooper Institute yesterday. "But ven de dime comes to make your feet down, then you must make 'em down right away quick. Yoost see how it was by me mineself. I was dwo or dree weeks marit ven I throw der dable, mit all der dings by it right avay der shtaircase down. I told you how that was: I was marit by a voomaus only seventeen year olt, vot got so much nonsense in her, like all der other vimmens. Ve lif by dree rooms of adenement house in St. Mark's blace. Py und py right avay there comes some fat women—may be some peen Irish, maybe some peen Tutch—dot makes noding out. Some of dem denement vimmen peen all lasy shoost der zame. I vind 'em by my house, und a friend of mine he says. 'Bedder you look ow-id: dem makes der dickens by your house, Some dime you don'd got your dinner und all der tay your vife is trinking beer.' Zo I keebs me mine eye ow-id. I zeen dot, yoost vot mine friend hat set.

"You tay I vos smard like everyding, und I vent around py Dompkins square, und got me my house behind der wrong vay in. I glimb up so shtill like a mouse. Der kitchen comes in der top of der stairs; in der front ist der tiuing room, mit der tark pedroom und-peep in der tining room, mitout saying anydings. I zee mine neighbor voomen by next door, two uf dem fat vimmen vrom town stairs, mine vife und dwo quarts uf peer on der dable togedder. I don't say somedings all der vile, but yoost keep quied like everyding.

"'Dot vos a shame,' der neighbor vooman had said; 'dot vos a shame vot you hat ter done der washing all mit yourself.'

"'Yes, I think dot's sos,' mine vife hat said. 'I vood make him got a voomans to done it,' der neighbor vooman said.

"Den I vas made like a house afire, but I don't say somedings. I yoost keep shtill.

"'I tolt you vot you done,' said von uf der fat vimmen. Such a poor man vot can marry a rich vooman ought to been paid for his smartness.

"Somedimes I think I shall burst my sites oudsite in mit laughing at that barber."

A Clever Retort.

From the Parisian.

A French journalist recently wrote a rather unfavorable criticism of the performance of an actress. The latter felt deeply wounded and longed for a chanced to get square with him. On evening at the Varieties where she was in company with a fast and stupid young gentleman of the aristocracy, she spied the journalist in question. She hada package for him which she requested her friend to deliver in person. The dandy arose, and, taking the package from the lady's hand, walked over to the newspaper man and presented it to him, saying, "Mlle. Daverger, who admires your talent as a journalist, has requested me to present you with this as a souvenir from her. The critic took the package and quietly opened it before the curious eyes of about twenty persons who had heard the dandy's little speech. It contained about a dozen goose quills. Smiles and suppressed laughter were in order, but the scribe was equal to the occasion. "Ah, my dear sir," said he to the dandy, "please give my best thanks to the lady for these pretty feathers. I was aware of the fact that she plucked her admirers, but I really didn't think that she did so on my account."

A very remarkable case of the insanity of an entire family is reported from Tigerton, Shawano county, Wis. The Rev Mr Tompkins, his wife, daughter, and son, have become insane from religious excitement. The wife and son are violent, and a close watch on them is necessary. The father and daughter are not dangerous, but evidently insane. All four are now in the county jail. The son declares he is possessed of a devil, and pours forth a continual storm of terrible oaths, while the mother is engaged in prayer all the time.

Farm and Workshop Notes.

Fifteen years ago the white hogs were preferred, but now the black hogs are in the ascendency. Fully nine tenths of the hogs passing through Chicago are black. At two state fairs last year, at one of which 300 hogs were present, only one was white.

Jerry Perkins, a colored man, of Jackson County, Ark., says the Arkansas Forest and Farm, from three-quarters of an acre of land raised fifty-seven bushels of wheat, or at the rate of about seventy bushels to the acre. It was of the Champlain variety.

Mr J. Parmelee, of Perry, O., on the south on the south shore of Lake Erie, grows twenty-three acres of onions this year, from which he expects a yield of from 12 000 to 15,000 bushels. The land was formerly a muck swamp and entirely worthless for agricultural purposes.

The northernmost place in the world where rye and and oats mature is at Kengis, in the Swedish province of Norrootten, forty-nine miles north of the Polar Circle, whereas the northernmost spot where corn is grown is at Muoniovara, ninety-eight miles to the north of the circle.

Analysis by Mr. S. M. Babcock at the New York State Experiment Station, and by Professor Storer, of pigweed, show this plant, so common in cultivated lands all over the country, to be rich in foddering material, and in connection with its root, to be of value as a green manure.

In Great Britain more land is sown with rye for a green crop than with rye for a grain crop. It is sown in autumn at the rate of two and three bushels an acre, the smaller quantity when intended to stand as a seed crop, and the larger quantity when intended for early green fodder in spring.

The test of good farming is found in the thoroughness with which every scrap of manure is cleaned from the barnyard, at least twice a year, for the use of crops. A considerable quantity of manure will accumulate during the summer, and is best applied as top-dressing for such wheat or grass as is to be plowed next spring.

Grass seeds should never be covered by running the harrow over the ground, for it puts them in too deep. It is well to harrow well the ground well before seeding in order to get it in as fine a condition as possible, but the seed should be brushed in. If sown just before a rain it is only necessary to sow the seed, as the rain will cover them.

The proper time to cut corn is as soon as the seed is glazed, and the stalks will be worth more than if allowed to stand longer. Both fodder and grain are injured if allowed to stand until the leaves are frozen, which latter checks the tendency of the sap to the grain. In the shock the unfrozen leaves continue the ripening process of the grain. —American Cultivator.

In the summer, after the hatching time is passed, collect from thirty to fifty dozen (or buy them fresh, when eggs are from fifteen cents to twenty-five cents a dozen), and prepare a liquid, thus: One pint of common salt, one pint of lime; dissolve in four gallons of boiling water; let it settle, and put the eggs into the liquor in stone jars when cold. Cover the eggs entirely in the liquid, and use "stone" and hot, soft crockery-ware jars. On no account use casks, wooden firkins, tubs, or any thing but stone vessels. Thus embedded eggs will keep for twelve months and come out in good shape.—Poultry World.

A inquirer calls attention to the egg record of twelve hens, mentioned in these columns and credited to the Florida Agriculturist. According to the statement the twelve fowls, "since July," laid ninety dozen eggs, besides hatching broods, etc. This is an error, as no breed of fowls could perform such a feat, but as the Florida correspondent evidently meant "since July, 1881," the average is only ordinary. In that State insects and green food are plentiful the greater portion of the year, and corn is seldom fed as a necessity, but only occasionally as a gratuity, which accounts for the small expense of keep.

This is why BROWN'S IRON BITTERS will cure kidney and liver diseases, consumption, rheumatism, neuralgia, dyspepsia, malaria, intermittent fevers, &c.

Mr. Simon Blanchard, a well-known citizen of Hayesville, Meade county, Kentucky, says: "My wife had been sick for a long time, and her constitution was all broken down and she was unable to work. She was advised to use Brown's Iron Bitters, and found it to work like a charm. We would not now be without it for any consideration, as we consider it the best tonic in the world."

BROWN'S IRON BITTERS is not a drink and does not contain whiskey. It is the only preparation of Iron that causes no injurious effects. Get the genuine. Don't be imposed on with imitations.

HALL'S VEGETABLE SICILIAN HAIR RENEWER

Has been in constant use by the public for over twenty years, and is the best preparation ever invented for RESTORING GRAY HAIR TO ITS YOUTHFUL COLOR AND LIFE.

It supplies the natural food and color to the hair glands without staining the skin. It will increase and thicken the growth of the hair, prevent its blanching and falling off, and thus AVERT BALDNESS.

It cures Itching, Eruptions and Dandruff. As a HAIR DRESSING it is very desirable, giving the hair a silken softness which all admire. It keeps the head clean, sweet and healthy.

The State Assayer and Chemist of Mass. and leading Physicians endorse and recommend it as a great triumph in medicine.

BUCKINGHAM'S DYE FOR THE WHISKERS

will change the beard to a BROWN or BLACK at discretion. Being in one preparation it is easily applied, and produces a permanent color that will not wash off.

DEATH OF GRANDMOTHER DAY.

One of the Oldest Twins in the United States.

SHE WAS ALSO AN AUNT OF GENERAL GEORGE H. THOMAS.

Died, in Waterloo, Oct. 16, 1882, at the residence of her son-in-law, Hon. R. M. Lockhart, Eleanor Thomas Day, at the great age of ninety-four years and four months. The subject of the above notice was born near Hagerstown, Md., June 17, 1788. Her mother dying when she was 10 years old, her father removed to Washington Co. Penn., where she was married to Joseph Day, March 16, 1805. In 1813 they, in company with a few of their friends, concluded to seek a new home in what was then called the far west, the state of Ohio. The trip was made in wagons and on horseback. She rode a horse most of the way, carrying her youngest child on her lap, and crossing the Ohio river by swimming the horse. They came to the small village of Mansfield, Richland Co., then containing but a few houses, and the country full of wild Indians. They purchased land six miles west of Mansfield, and commenced making a home in the unbroken wilderness. For many years they were subjected to all the inconveniences of pioneer life, but as time rolled away and the country became settled—with a large family of children growing up around them, they lived very happily until the death of her husband, which occured Jan. 11, 1854. Soon, after his death she left the old farm, and removed to Crestline, O., living there until 1858, since which time she made her home with her daughter, Mrs. R. M. Lockhart. She was the mother of 12 children; 11 of them lived to be married and 9 of them, 4 sons and 5 daughters, survive her. Her descendants at her death, including children, grand children and great grand children, numbered 136. Her twin sister, Mrs. Elizabeth Thomas Coleman, is yet living, making her home near Morgantown, Indiana. Her descendants are even greater than those of Grandmother Day, exceeding 140 in number. She was a member of the Presbyterian church for over fifty years. Her memory remained unimpaired until within a few days of her death. During her long sickness of over two months, she was visited by her children, coming from four different States. Her mind remained clear, and she died rejoicing in the happy thought that she would soon be at rest in the bosom of that Savior in whom she had placed her trust so many years ago. These twin sisters were the aunts of one of the brave defenders of our country in the late rebellion, General George H. Thomas, better known as Old Pap Thomas. The pall-bearers were chosen from soldiers who served under him: Gen. L. J. Blair, Dr. J. N. Chamberlain, Dr. S. B. Johnson, C. R. Reed, F. W. Willis and John Koons. Capt. A. R. Stevens superintended the arrangements for the funeral services. Religious services were held at the family residence, and were conducted by Rev. Matthews of the Presbyterian church, assisted by Revs. Walts and Butler, of the M. E. and U. B. churches. Several beautiful pieces were sung by a quartette, consisting of Prof. Reed, Mrs. Ezra Patterson and J. C. Boyer, with Mrs. Field as organist, after which her body was laid away in the beautiful cemetery at this place. A large number of friends and neighbors followed the remains to their last resting place, and many beautiful floral decorations were furnished by sympathizing friends.

Great changes have come over our country during the life of Grandmother Day. When she was born, railroads, telegraphs, telephones, electric lights and many other things that we now enjoy were unknown. Life's work with her was well done. May her soul rest in peace.

A Mixed Train.

On some of the western roads they attach a passenger to a freight train, and call it "mixed." It isn't in the order of things that such trains should travel very rapidly, and sometimes there is considerable growling among the "traffic."

"Are we most there, conductor?" asked a nervous man for the hundredth time. "Remember, my wife is sick, and I am anxious."

"We'll get there on time," replied the conductor, stolidly.

Half an hour later the nervous man approached him again.

"I guess she's dead now," said he mournfully, "but I'd give you a little something extra if you could manage to catch up with the funeral. Maybe she won't be so decomposed but what I would recognize her!"

The conductor growled at him, and the man subsided.

"Conductor!" said he, after an hour's silence, "conductor, if the wind isn't dead ahead, I wish you would put on some steam. I'd like to see where my wife's buried before the tombstone crumbles to pieces. Put yourself in my place for a moment.

The conductor shook him off, and the man relapsed into profound melancholy.

"I say, conductor," said he, after a long pause, "I've got a note coming due in three months. Can't you fix it so as to rattle along a little?"

"If you come near me again I'll knock you down!" snorted the conductor savagely.

The nervous man regarded him sadly and went to his seat. Two hours later the conductor saw him chatting gayly and laughing heartily with a brother victim, and approached him.

"Don't feel so badly about your wife's death?"

"Time heals all wounds," sighed the nervous man."

"And you are not so particular about the note?" sneered the conductor.

"Not now. That's all right. Don't worry. I've been figuring up, and I find that the note has outlawed since I spoke to you last!"

It Didn't Burst, After All.

[Detroit Free Press.]

When McClellan reached Malvern Hill in his retrograde movement he had the Federal gunboats at his back. They sent their monster shells over the Federals and into the woods where the Confederates were forming. One of the shells fell in front of a brigadier general from Georgia and two aides, and came rolling to their very feet. Like lightning each of the trio threw himself flat on the ground, rolled over once or twice, and then hugged the ground and waited. They could hear the sputter of the burning fuse, and the chances of being wiped out were ninety-nine in a hundred. In this situation one of the aides called out:

"Gentlemen, I believe secession is wrong, and I'm sorry I took arms."

"And I know that rebellion is wicked, and I'm ready to resign!" groaned the other aides.

It was then the general's turn to say something, and while they were waiting to hear him declare himself he suddenly called out:

"Get up, gentlemen; get up. The dum thing isn't going to bust at all."

TESTIMONIALS.

GENTLEMEN: Your buggies have given me entire satisfaction, both in style and durability I have used them for the past three years Your recent improvements on road wagons I consider the best in the market.

JAMES H. BAMBURG.

Frederick Maryland.

DEAR SIRS: We have used buggies of your make that have been in use three years, and no buggy we have that cost twice the amount has given better satisfaction.

JAMES H. ALEXANDER.

Johnstown Pa.

GENTLEMEN: We have used the Columbus Buggy Company's work for the last five years and can conscientiously recommend it as strictly first class as to style, material, workmanship and durability. Your buggies have given better satisfaction than any other make of vehicles we had in use for the last ten years

PALMER & WHITTAKER.

Red Oak Iowa.

GENTLEMEN: It gives me pleasure to state that I have been selling your buggies and carriages for four years, and can safely recommend them to any one in want of a buggy or carriage. Yours Truly, J. L. GRIBBLE.

Macomb, Illinois.

GENTLEMEN: With over fifteen years experience in building buggies, wagons, &c., I do not hesitate in saying your buggies and carriages are strictly first-class in workmanship, material and proportions, filling a long-felt want for a reliable article that can be sold at a price lower than any ordinary manufacturer can produce and sell the same quality of work at. Yours, etc. I. S. KRICK, Conneautville Pa.

GENTLEMEN: I have used your Brewster side bar buggies for four years, together with buggies that cost me $300 and $250, and your buggies were the first that went out, on account of being side-bar. They have not cost me $5 for repairs, and those I have sold of your make have given good satisfaction. I think that you make the cheapest and best road wagons that are made in the United States for the money

Respectfully, P. H. HAMLIN, Lawrence Kansas.

DEAR SIRS: We have been using your buggies for the last four or five years. They have given entire satisfaction. I think they are the best buggies made for the money.

W. B. GRIMES & CO., Liverymen Whitehall Illinois.

GENTLEMEN: We have been handling your work for two seasons, and have in every instance found your buggies first class. We never have had one of your jobs returned to us for repairs; neither have we had a single complaint on account of work not being perfectly satisfactory. Very Respectfully, H.P. BUCKLEY & CO., Springfield, Illinois.

GENTLEMEN. I have no hesitancy in saying that the buggies manufactured by the Columbus Buggy Company are the best work for the price I have any knowledge of. In not a single instance has there been any dissatisfaction on the part of any one of my customers.

FRANK L. HALL.

Owensboro, Ky.

DEAR SIRS: For the past two years we have used your buggies side by side with other makes in both our stables, and are perfectly satisfied with the strenght, durability and workmanship compared with others. As fast as our stock in livery is used up we shall replace them with your manufacture, knowing from experience that it is the best we can do. Respectfully,

SWEET & FOLLANSBEE,

Otis Tufts and the First Passenger Elevator.

It is to the brilliant genius and energy of this Boston inventor (now deceased) that the credit is due of inventing and constructing the first passenger elevator in the world driven by steam power. His "Vertical Screw Railway" was patented by him August 9, 1859, and the first one constructed was put up in the same year in the Fifth Avenue Hotel, New York. The hotel was then in progress of construction. (William Washburn, architect; Paran Stevens, Hiram Hitchcock and others, lessees). An exactly similar screw elevator was soon after put into the Continental Hotel in Philadelphia—a hotel also leased by Paran Stevens. These two machines were the only screw elevators for passengers ever constructed.

People would not at first believe a vertical railway a possible thing. Mr. Hiram Hitchcock, the present proprietor of the hotel, says, in a private letter to the writer, that "hundreds, even thousands of persons visited the elevator daily. Men of note, such as the Prince of Wales, the Prince de Joinville and others, as well as eminent foreign engineers and scientific persons, were greatly interested in it." The object of the inventor was to produce a machine which should be perfectly safe, and he succeeded in doing so. The screw consisted of a great solid iron shaft twenty inches in diameter, and cast in sections. It is extended to the top of the building, and was not inclosed in any hoistway. A huge iron nut with screws encircled the shaft. Within the nut were rollers running upon the upper side of the thread of the shaft screw. In the language of the inventor, "the rollers were virtually carriage wheels traveling upon a rail wound spirally along a cylinder." Upon the nut rested the car. The nut did not turn round, being prevented from doing so by a spur attached to it, and moving vertically with it along one of the guide rails. When the shaft was rotated the rollers inside the nut wound upward around the great spiral thread of the shaft, and thus by a continuous movement elevated the nut, and the car with it.—[W. S. Kennedy, in Harper's Magazine for November.

A bulletin recently issued by the commissioners of the census gives the relative value of fuel of fifty-five varieties of wood. The results which are presented were arrived at, it is said, by the most carefully conducted experiments, the calculations being made on dried specimens dressed to a uniform size. Mountain mahogany heads the list; and it is noteworthy that this is the only tree growing in the United States the specific gravity of which is greater than that of water. Second in fuel value is the southern pine, a very light wood, having only a little more than half the weight of mountain mahogany. Hickory is third on the list. Cedar ranks before white oak, and white elm outranks sugar maple. The secret of the remarkably high rank given to southern pine is the large amount of hydrogen it contains.

Fine Flowering Bulbs.

We have received the new catalogue of flowerings bulbs issued by the great Rochester seed house of Hiram Sibley & Co. It is a work of the greatest value to all lovers of these fine flowers. This number is especially nice in its descriptions and lists of new tulips, hyacinths grasses and other fine plants. This house also publishes an almanac for 1883, which is now ready. All who wish either almanac or catalogue can have them sent free of charge by addressing:

C. V. Inks has been awarded the contract for erecting a large granite monument at Denver, Colorado. The design is one of the finest we have ever seen. The monument will make about a car load and will be worth the neat little sum of $1400. Mr. Inks has an extensive trade in this class of work, and being connected with some of the largest granite quarries in this country and Scotland, enables him to successfully compete with the heaviest dealers east or west and to furnish a superior class of work. The monument referred to in the above was ordered by Mrs. Mary Galbreath, sister of Mrs. Wm. Galbreath, of this place, and will be erected over her husband's grave at Denver.

Interesting Love Making.

A Middleton young lady, says the Hartford Times, never tires of relating an amusing occurence of the sleighing season, last winter. She was enjoying a ride with two Hartford gentlemen and she was driving. One of the gentlemen slyly inserted a hand in her muff and lovingly pressed her disengaged hand. She blushed and withdrew it just as the gentleman on the other side slipped his hand in the muff. She knew by the action of her adorers that the hand pressures were frequent and loving within the silk lining of the muff, for first one face and then the other would bob forward to catch a look at the sweet face and eyes which prompted, as they supposed, the tender pressure of the hand. The by-play lasted until the young lady quietly remarked: "If you gentlemen are through with my muff I will trouble you for it now, as my hands are quite cold." And the two gentlemen who had been comfortably warm up to this time, suddenly felt an Artic chill creeping up their spinal columns, and the mercury of their feelings dropped to 180 degrees below zero. The two gentlemen are strangers now.

Sin Lee and Lee Linn.

Just as we expected, Sin Lee, the heathen Chinee, whose laundry is three doors west of the Courier office, is getting mail matter that belongs to Lee Linn, editor of the Courier, while Lee Linn frequently finds Mr. Sin Lee's letters in his (Linn's) box. Only last Wednesday morning Mr. Sin Lee called at the Courier office, and, going down into that loose fitting garment which serves him as a shirt, vest and overcoat combined, he drew forth a letter, two postal cards and a paper that had been placed in his box at the postoffice, but which were directed plainly enough to Lee Lin. Mr. Sin Lee will please accept our thanks for his honesty, as one of the postal cards was from C. A. Cook & Co., advertising agents, Chicago, proposing to trade us $5 worth of rat traps for $10 worth of advertising and $7.50 in cash. Had Sin Lee "sielved" this postal we would have lived in ignorance that Chicago contains such broad and liberal hearted shysters of C. A. Cook & Co., and our waste basket would have been short just one postal card that legitimately belonged to it.—[Wabash Courier.

The question is often asked as to the meaning and origin of the term "Nickel Plate," as applied to the New York, Chicago & St. Louis railroad, a new trunk line passing through Northern Indiana. The Chicago Times gives the following explanation of the origin of the term: Something over a year ago, when President Cummings, in conversation with a representative of the Times, after a glowing description of the road, its equipments and prospects, concluded with the facetious remark, "Oh, the road is nickel-plated in every respect." From this remark originated the title, "Nickel-Plate." This is claimed to be the only true and genuine version, although there are others, as a matter of course. The enemies of the road contend that the term is descriptive and is appropriate because applied to a very inferior road with very great pretentions.

Ups and Downs of Life.

The Waterloo (Iowa) Reporter says: As an illustration of the ups and downs of life, we notice that Stephen Hempstead, the second governor of Iowa, is now a candidate for justice of the peace in Dubuque. He was the last democrat elected governor in this state, and was succeeded by Jams W. Grimes.

To which the Dubuque Herald replies: This statement is correct, and we understand there is a general disposition on all sides to give this position to Governor Hempstead, in whose integrity and ability the whole community has confidence. He has been financially unfortunate—in a word, has always served the state and the public better than he has himself.

A Professional Confession.

THE UNUSUAL EXPERIENCE OF A PROMINENT MAN MADE PUBLIC.

The following article from the Democrat and Chronicle, of Rochester, N. Y., is of so striking a nature, and emanates from so reliable a source, that it is herewith re-published entire. In addition to the valuable matter it contains, it will be found exceedingly interesting.

To the editor of the Democrat and Chronicle:

SIR:—My motives for the publication of the most unusual statements which follow are, first, gratitude for the fact that I have been saved from a most horrible death, and, secondly, a desire to warn all who read this statement against some of the most deceptive influences by which they have ever been surrounded. It is a fact that to-day thousands of people are within a foot of the grave and they do not know it. To tell how I was caught away from just this position and to warn others against nearing it, are my objects in this communication.

On the first day of June 1881, I lay at my residence in this city surrounded by my friends and waiting for my death. Heaven only knows the agony I then endured, for words can never describe it. And yet, if a few years previous, any one had told me that I was to be brought so low, and by so terrible a disease, I should have scoffed at the idea. I had always been uncommonly strong and healthy, had weighed over 200 pounds and hardly knew, in my own experience, what pain or sickness were. Very many people who will read this statement realize at times that they are unusually tired and cannot account for it. They feel dull and indefinite pains in various parts of the body and do not understand it. Or they are exceedingly hungry one day and entirely without appetite the next. This was just the way I felt when the relentless malady which had fastened itself upon me probably I had taken a cold which would soon pass away. Shortly after this I noticed a dull, and at times a neuralgic pain in my head, but as it would come one day and be gone the next, I paid but little attention to it. However, my stomach was out of order and my food often failed to digest, causing at times great inconvenience. Yet I had no idea, even as a physician, that these things meant anything serious or that a monstrous disease was becoming fixed upon me. Candidly, I thought I was suffering from malaria and so doctored myself accordingly. But I got no better. I next noticed a peculiar color and odor about the fluids I was passing—also that there were large quantities one day and very little the next, and that a persistent froth and scum appeared upon the surface, and a sediment settled in the bottom. And yet I did not realize my danger, for, indeed, seeing these symptoms continually, I finally became accustomed to them, and my suspicion was wholly disarmed by the fact that I had no pain in the affected organs or in their vicinity. Why I should have been so blind I cannot understand.

There is a terrible feature for all physicians neglect, and impending danger always brings a person to his senses even though it may then be too late. I realized, at last, my critical condition and aroused myself to overcome it. And, oh! how hard I tried! I consulted the best medical skill in the land. I visited all the prominent mineral springs in America and traveled from Maine to California. Still I grew worse. No two physicians agreed as to my malady. One said I was troubled with spinal irritation; another, nervous prostration; another, malaria; another, dyspepsia; another, heart disease; another, general debility; another, congestion of the base of the brain; and so on through a long list of common diseases, the symptoms of all of which I really had. In this way several years passed during all of which time I was steadily growing worse. My condition had really become pitiable. The slight symptoms I at first experienced were developed into terrible and constant disorders—the twigs of pain had grown to oaks of agony. My weight had been reduced from 207 to 130 pounds. My life was a torture to myself and friends. I could retain no food upon my stomach, and lived wholly by injections. I was a living mass of pain. My pulse was uncontrollable. In my agony I frequently fell upon the floor, convulsively clutched the carpet, and prayed for death. Morphine had little or no effect in deadening the pain. For six days and nights I had the death-premonitory hiccoughs constantly. My urine was filled with tube casts and albumen. I was struggling with Bright's disease of the Kidneys in its last stages.

While suffering thus I received a call from my pastor, the Rev. Dr. Foote, rector of St. Paul's church, of this city. I felt that it was our last interview, but in the course of conversation he mentioned a remedy of which I had heard much but had never used. Dr. Foote detailed to me the many remarkable cures which had come under his observation, by means of the remedy, and urged me to try it. As a practicing physician and a graduate of the schools. I cherished the prejudice both natural and common with all regular practitioners, and derided the idea of any medicine outside the channels being the least beneficial. So solicitous, however, was Dr. Foote, that I finally promised I would waive my prejudice and try the remedy he so highly recommended. I began its use on the first day of June and took it accordingly to directions. At first it sickened me; but this I thought was a good sign for me in my debilitated condition. I continued to take it; the sickening sensation departed and I was able to retain food upon my stomach. In a few days I noticed a decided change for the better as also did my wife and friends. My hiccoughs ceased and I experienced less pain than formerly. I was so rejoiced at this improved condition that, upon what I had believed but a few days before was my dying bed. I vowed, in the presence of my family and friends, should I recover I would both publicly and privately make known this remedy for the good of humanity, wherever and whenever I had an opportunity. I also determined that I would give a course of lectures in the Corinthian Academy of Music of this city, stating in full the symptoms and almost hopelessness of my disease and the remarkable means by which I have been saved. My improvement was constant from that time, and in less than three months I had gained 26 pounds in flesh, became entirely free from pain and I believe I owe my life and present condition wholly to Warner's Safe Kidney and Liver Cure, the remedy which I used.

Since my recovery I have thoroughly re-investigated the subject of kidney difficulty, Bright's disease, and the truths developed are astounding. I therefore state, deliberately, and as a physician, that I believe that more than one-half of the deaths which occur in America are caused by Bright's disease of the kidneys. This may sound like a rash statement, but I am prepared to fully verify it. Bright's disease has no distinctive symptoms of its own, (indeed, it often develops without any pain whatever in the kidneys or their vicinity,) but has the symptoms of nearly every other known complaint. Hundreds of people die daily, whose burials are authorized by a physician's certificate of "Heart Disease," "Apoplexy," "Paralysis," "Spinal Complaint," "Rheumatism" "Pneumonia," and other common complaints, when in reality it was Bright's disease of the kidneys. Few physicians, and fewer people, realize the extent of this disease or its dangerous and insidious nature. It steals into the system like a thief, manifests its presence by the commonest symptoms, and fastens itself upon the constitution before the victim is aware. It is nearly as hereditary as consumption, quite as common and fully as fatal. Entire families, inheriting it from their ancestors, have died, and yet none of the number knew or realized the mysterious power which was removing them. Instead of common symptoms it often shows none whatever, but brings death suddenly, and as such is usually supposed to be heart disease. As one who has suffered, and knows by bitter experience what he says, I implore every one who reads these words not to neglect the slightest symptoms of kidney difficulty. Certain agony and possible death will be the sure result of such neglect, and no one can afford to hazard such chances.

I am aware that such an unqualified statement as this, coming from me, known as I am throughout the entire land as a practitioner and lecturer, will arouse the surprise and possible animosity of the medical profession and astonish all with whom I am acquainted, but I make the foregoing statement based upon facts which I am prepared to produce and truths which I can substantiate to the letter. The welfare of those who may possibly be sufferers such as I was, is an ample inducement for me to take the step I have, and if I can successfully warn others, from the dangerous path in which I once walked, I am willing to endure all professional and personal consequences. Simon B. Paige, of Oshkosh, Wis., offered $5 000 for the rescue of his wife, dead or alive, from a burning hotel. The body was saved by C. Rief but Paige refused to pay him, and was sued. The county court decided in favor of Paige, on the ground that the rescuer was a fireman and in duty bound to save anybody without reward. The supreme court has now reversed the decision.

When the supply of coal gets short elsewhere, the world can turn to China for "black diamonds." Baron Richthofen shows that in that country the supply of antharacite coal is not less than 630,000,000,000 of tons, and the bituminous coal supply is just as large. The Baron thinks that, taking what is left in other parts of the world with the Chinese area, we need not fear a fuel famine. He thinks that the supply in the Chinese province of Shansi alone will last the world about 4,200 years.

Acting Secretary of the Interior Joslyn has rendered a decision of the utmost importance to a large class of applicants for pensions. He holds, in effect, that seven years absence may be taken as proof presumptive of a soldier's death, and such proof shall warrant the issue of a pension to his family, if the other requirements have been complied with. This decision is a direct reversal of the practice that has hitherto prevailed in the pension bureau. Positive proof of a soldier's death was required, which in many cases it was impossible to produce.

Gov. Blackburn, of Kentucky, says that he will retire to private life when his present term of office is ended and never meddle with politics again. He claims that he has nothing to regret in the record made while he has held the Governorship. About his numerous pardons he says: "I have pardoned a great number of convicts, it is true, but I would rather pardon then have them die in prison, and thus bring everlasting disgrace upon their relatives."

The vote in Ohio at the recent election shows the following totals: Republican, 294 092; Democratic, 314 515; Prohibition, 11,632; Greenback, 4,930; a grand total of 625,170 votes for Secretary of State in the eighty-six counties. This is the smallest aggregate vote cast in the State for years. In 1876 the total was 658 549, and in 1880 the aggregate was 724,967. There was thus a falling off from the vote two years ago of about 100,000, of which the Republican loss was nearly 80,000. The Prohibition vote of the State shows the following variations: In 1876 there were 1,636 votes; in 1880, 2,616; in 1881, 16,957, and in 1882 11,632.

A New Bedford dispatch says: A letter received in this city from Captain Crapo, of the lost schooner Surprise, of this port, at Basket Island, near Punta Arenas, gives the particulars of the loss, and also says that the boat's crew that he left at the Island was subsequently massacred by the natives, with the exception of a Portuguese boy. He also says a boat's crew belonging to the British bark Rosebeath, which foundered at sea, containing the mate and four men, were also murdered by the natives, except ing the mate, who was afterwards rescued by some friendly Indians, and sent to Valparaiso where he has arrived. A third boat's crew had also been massacred by the natives at this point.

There have been many remarkable changes in the vote of Ohio during the past twenty-two years. The Columbus Journal notes some of them, as follows: "In 1861 Governor Tod, Republican, was elected by a majority of 55,204 over Mr. Jewett, and in 1862 Mr. Armstrong was elected Secretary of State on a Democratic ticket by a majority of 5 500, a change of 60,763. In the following year Brough, Republican, was elected Governor by a majority of 100,882, a change of 106,442. In 1876 Colonel Barnes, Republican, was elected Secretary of State by a majority of 6,636, and in 1877 Governor Bishop was elected by a majority of 23,529, a change of 30,136. In the following year Barnes was re-elected by a majority of 8 154, a change of 26,674."

Jackson's Old Servants.

Visiting the Hermitage not long ago, I found two old servants who had belonged to General Jackson, and had never left the place where they were born. Not those of the old hero's own blood could feel greater pride of birth or a more religious reverence for his name. The present incumbent at the Hermitage is a lady in feeble health, who never receives visitors. So Aunt Gracie was our cicerone. That General Jackson was the greatest man that ever lived is as fixed in her mind as the eyes in her head, and she feels that his lightest word has a value demanding caution and dignity in her repetition. She took us through the house, showed us her master's books and sword and favorite chair, this last comfortably facing Washington's arm-chair, so that neither need be moved an inch if ever the two great ghosts want to talk together in the dim old room. Then we went through the old fashioned garden neglected with a method, one might say, so pleasant was it in its wanton growth and neglected wealth of roses. We seated ourselves on the granite steps of the tomb, under the dome with its Corinthian pillars, planned by the restless brain it covered, and read the inscriptions on the two flat slabs—the one long and of a pathetic eloquence, the other bearing only the name "Andrew Jackson" across its surface. "He said if dar was mo' ter tell, history would tell it," said Aunt Gracie in a solemn voice. By this time her husband, Uncle Alfred, ragged hat in hand, had joined us from the field. "He was a great companykeeper, de General was," said Uncle Alfred; "he always kep' de front door open. Never made no difference between rich an' po, pervided they had behavior. You know dar's a heap o' difference betwixt jist a man an' a gentleman." Uncle Alfred was evidently a tremendous old aristocrat. "De General never got mad," he said, "unless you disputed him an' he found you was on de realities; den his blood would rise." This was rather obscure, but we inferred from it that the General only "got mad" when he perceived that his opponent was in the right. In answer to an inquiry of how Christmas was spent at the Hermitage, Aunt Gracie, by way of impressing us with the general elegance of things under the old regime, declared loftily that "it was Christmas all de year roun'." But Uncle Alfred came in with, "Den de real Christmas, dat was a time. We would all go up to de house jes' like a troop of soldiers. Mis' Rachel she would gib de women presents, an' de General would gib de men sto-clothes, an' head-handkerchers, an' terbaccer. Den we would draw rations fur de week's holliday—flour, an' sugar an' coffee an' tea. An' we would walk aroun' de house singin', de General a bowin' an' a-waivin' his hat at de front do'. An' by de time we had got roun' to de back do', dar he was to receive our greetin's." "He didn't have a servant but would 'a died for him," said Aunt Gracie, softly. The Hermitage is not paid for, and when an appropriation for the State debt was voted on, not long ago, old Alfred got all the negroes within his influence to vote for it "for the sake of General Jackson's home and honor."

Low Wages of Working Girls.

Boston Globe.

The advance sheets of the twelfth annual report of Miss Jennie Collins, of Boffin's Bower, the institution devoted to the welfare of the working girls of Boston, have just come to hand. While every one may not agree with the theories of political economy expressed by Miss Collins, surely no one can but deprecate with her the evil effects on the working girls of the ruinous competition in the clothing and other business. The meagre sum paid shop girls in not a few of the large and small establishments doubtless frequently results, as she intimates, in the demoralization of the purest and best. One prepossessing young woman some two months since is said to have related her case as follows: "I came to make you a present of $10. Use it to help some one else [illegible] where I am. I ha[illegible] I tried housework [illegible] the family washing was beyond my strength. I then procured a place in a shop commencing with $3 a week with the promise that at the [illegible] it would be increased [illegible] ability. At the end of that time I was discharged and another novice taken with the same inducement. My next place was in an office for $3 a week and from that I w[illegible] up packages of groceries, with the promise that when I got used to it I could make $6 or $7 a week. It was the same old story; I was discharged and another novice taken in my place. I next got a position to tend in a cheap variety store with advance fo $4 a week on this stipulation, that I must 'dress as well as other young ladies.' To do that I was obliged to live upon one meal and part of a meal a day. Half starved, disheartened and depressed, I drifted where I am now.

Mrs. Percy Yerger is a woman, but she is not well posted about church festivals, and she is not refined as she might be. The Episcopal clergyman happening to remark in her presence that it would soon be advent, she replied: "Then we will all have to mortify ourse ves again, but I don't mind it a bit. Last advent I saved enough enough out of the butcher's meat for the servant's table to get me a $75 cloak to go to church in." "That was Lent, madam." "No it was'nt lent. Three or four neighbor's wives wanted me to lend them them that cloak, but I told them it wasn't mine and lied out out of it that way."—[Texas Siftings.

Who is Maria?

"Who is Maria? was the question that startled Mr. Brown (who talks in his sleep) as he waked up the other morning and found Mrs. Brown sitting up in bed with an exclamation, an interrogation point in one eye and an exclamation point in the other.

"Maria? Maria who?"

"That's just what I wanted to know; you repeated the name over and over again last night.

"Let me see—oh, yes; that's Parker's dog—a splendid animal. I've been trying to buy her.

"You ought to own her, certainly; you are so excessively fond of her. You asked Parker's dog to put her arms around your neck and kiss you. You even went so far as to tell Parker's dog that you loved her with all your heart, and that when you come to die if you could only lay your head on Parker's dog's bosom you could breathe your life out sweetly there. Then you asked Parker's dog to have another plate of ice cream, and if the watch that you had given her kept good time. During the night you kissed Parker's dog a dozen times, called her all the pet names known, and proved to me conclusively that you ought to live with Par[illegible] and not with me."

"Yes," chimed in the rest of rest of the guests, "tell us how papa says grace." "Well, when he comes in to dinner, he looks at the table and then at mamma, and then says, 'Well this is a h—l of a meal to set before a white man." Mr. B. subsided.

NEW YORK.

In the examination of Edward Hanley, Thomas Goulvan and William Platt, charged with attempting to blackmail Walter Malley by letters written to Blanche Douglass, the latter testified that she had lived with Hanley as his wife and had been intimate with a large number of men. She had borne the names of Blanche Douglass, Annie Hines and Annie Maxwell. The latter name was given her by Walter Malley. Her true name is Annie Zimmerman. One night recently, in a beer saloon, Hanley told her he had taken her letters and intended getting money on them. When he refused to give them back to her, she broke three beer glasses over his head. She lived, she said, on money sent her by Malley—some $30 per week. In writing to him she always addressed him as "Mr. Wall Maxwell." She denied she ever told Hanley that she, Walter and his brother had dosed Jennie Cramer, or that she had put stuff given by the Malleys into wine which the unfortunate girl drank.

While giving this portion of her testimony, the girl laughed outright in derision of the idea, which she termed one of Hanleys "made-up games." Goulvan and Platt for the present refused to make any statement.

J. H. Deveraux, President of the Cleveland, Columbus, Cincinnati and Indianapolis Railway Company, and Judge Stevenson Burke, Vice President of the Columbus, Hocking Valley and Toledo Railway, as representatives of a syndicate that is interested in both roads, have acquired control of the New-York, Chicago and St. Louis Railway, more familiarly known as the Nickel Plate. The capitalists they represent are not known. The Tribune says: "In the opinion of many, the purchase of the Nickel Plate line will be regarded as removing it from the list of active rivals to the Vanderbilt railroads. Deveraugh, however, has been prominently connected heretofore with the Erie Railway interests, both in the East and West, and he was receiver of the old Atlantic and Great Western, which is an adjunct of Jewell's road."

The action brought by Samuel Wilkeson against Henry Ward Beecher, for breach of contract, in failing to complete the "Life of Christ," has been postponed until November 6.

Abbey's Park Theater, at Broadway and Twenty-second street, burned Monday evening, four hours before Mrs. Langtry was to make her debut in an American city. The building with all its contents was destroyed. The loss is estimated at $250,000. The scores of employes on the stage at the time of the fire all escaped with the exception of Henry Clark and William F. Doran, who were driven to the upper windows by the fire, and in jumping out were badly injured. The origin of the fire is obscure. It started in a proscenium box, behind a private box, apparently in the partition wall, perhaps caused by a bursting gas-pipe. The fire swept on rapidly and was beyond control when help arrived. Much delay was caused by the failure of the automatic alarms on the stage to work and likewise of the fire extinguishers. Ten minutes elapsed before the arrival of the firemen; then the flames were bursting through the roof, and the building was doomed. From the balcony of the Albemarle Hotel, two blocks away, Mrs. Langtry and Mrs Labouchere viewed the conflagration. Mrs Langtry had just finished packing her wardrobe in which she was to appear in the evening, and was in the very act of sending it the theatre when the fire broke out. Abbey's loss is $100,000 and his insurance is nearly that sum. He immediately made arrangements to open Monday next in the Grand Opera House, with Mrs Langtry, in the "Unequal Match." The theater was small and elaborately decorated. The main entrance was on Broadway through a three-story building, in which was stores and offices, and on third floor the property-room. The theater itself was built only in 1874. It extended from Twenty-second street half way to twenty-first street on Broadway. The stage entrance was on Twenty-second street. It had been newly frescoed and upholstered in preparation for Mrs Langtry's debut. The scenery for the play was costly and elaborate, especially that for the second act, being painted on satin and hand-embroidered. It was all destroyed. The fire spread so rapidly that valuable paintings could not be removed from the office. Mr Abbey was on his way to the theater when the fire broke out, and he hastened to inform Mrs Langtry of his misfortune.

C. H. George, mural decorator, who who occupied a store under the theater, $75,000, insured for $45,000; Parsons & Scarlet, occupying the second floor, merchant tailors, $30,000, partialy insured. The building suffered to the extent of $40,000; insured.

To-night John Leo, stage carpenter at the theater, is reported missing. It is thought he perished in the flames.

WASHINGTON.

Foreman Dickson, of the late Star Route jury, was arrested this morning, on warrants issued at the instance of the Department of Justice.

Dickson was arraigned in the Police Court, and gave bond of $5,000 to appear. Counsel for Dickson asked for an early trial, and Judge Snell said he would take the cases in order, beginning with that against Payne, on Tuesday next.

The report of the Assessor of the District of Columbia shows that the assessed value of taxable real estate in the District on June 30, 1882, was a little more than $92,500,000. To this may added the value of the property of the United States, which was more than $85,000,000 on June 30.

Lyons, October 27.—The Anarchist conspiracy has taken deeper root than was suspected, and this morning the situation is very critical. The citizens are panic-stricken at the revelations made yesterday of the local strength far-reaching power of the desperate men who constitute the organization, and consider an outbreak almost inevitable. A mob has been formed in the street, and, in addition to threats against the Republican newspapers, now direct their venom against the banks and public buildings, which are being carefully guarded, but by an inadequate force that would not be able to protect the property, if the rioters made anything like a determined attempt to overpower them. The conditions of affairs here adds new and unforseen difficulties to President Grevy's position. It is not unlikely that a Ministerial crisis will be precipitated and that the resignation of the President himself will be considered advisable, as soon as the Chambers assemble. This feature of the case is being much discussed here and advices from Paris indicate that the same view is held in many quarters there.

Cairo, October 27.—A portion of Arabi Pasha's correspondence having been translated by order of the authorities, a letter has been found from the Sultan which urges the rebel chief to resist the invasion of England and France, or any other foreign power, and to defend the faith of his country against those who busy themselves to bring about a triumph for its adversaries.

Odessa, October 27.—The governor of this district has given strict orders that the movements of the Austrians who reside in Bessarabia be sharply looked after. This seemed to the governor to be necessary, because a connection had been discovered to exist between the Austrian Socialists and the revolutionary party of Russia, an alliance that has long been feared, and that will now be frustrated as soon as it shows its head, if the authorities can effect it.

Cairo, October 28.—Professor Palmer's party was attacked by Bedouins at midnight on the 10th of August, after the two parties had exchanged several shots. The Bedouins overpowered the English, looted everything found in their baggage, and took all the clothes from the bodies of their victims, and destroyed all traces of their work.

The Egyptian government is on the point of sending six battallions of black troops from Damietta to Soudan to take part in the operations there.

The floods along the Thames are very serious. Windsor is inundated, and the water is still rising.

A disastrous fire occurred at Margate. The assembly rooms, the vicarage, and the whole side of Cecil Square have been burned. Loss, $300,000.

Lord Penzance will listen to the Bishop of Manchester's application for the Rev Dr Greene's release, on next Saturday.

London, October 28.—The correctness of the report of the loss of the yacht Kari, which went to the Arctic regions in search of Leigh Smith's party, is denied.

General Sir Garnet Wolseley landed at Dover this afternoon on his return from Egypt. He was enthusiastically received by a large crowd.

Paris, October 28.—The Socialists of the city held a meeting here last night at which Louise Michael and others violently denounced the Governments of France and Italy for expelling the turbulent and dangerous Italian Socialists at Lyons on Saturday. The scare at the outbreak and the fear of further violence continues to increase. Letters making threats against commercial firms are daily received, and add to the general sense of insecurity.

London, October 28.—The Bey of Tunis is dead, and his brother has assumed power.

Dublin, October 28.—Three hundred people on Troy Island are without food, and other portions of the population of Western Ireland are threatened with starvation.

[Troy Island is off the northwest coast of Ireland, County of Donegal.]

The Home Rule League has issued a summons for a meeting of its members to consider the policy of merging that league into the Irish National League.

Panama, October 30.

On Saturday from 400 to 500 rebels at Juchinta, the hotbed of the malcontents, about twenty miles from Salina Cruz, surrounded the soldiers, taking their arms. The rebels are now roving over the country robbing and killing the people. Troops are marching to meet the rebels.

Boston, November 1.

There has been incorporated here the Palestine Colonization and Christian Missionary Association, formed for the purpose of colonizing Palestine with industrious and energetic Christians, and by their prudence, labor and perseverance restoring it to its former grandeur, so that it will not only be the center of the world geographically but also in art, science and wealth. The members of the association claim that under proper management the soil can be restored to a very high state of cultivation, mineral sources developed and mechanical industries established, thus producing vast commercial intercourse with other nations. It is the purpose of the associations to run a line of packets between Boston and Palestine, and the management is now negotiating for the purpose of suitable vessels.

East Dubuque, Ill., November 1

The Rev Father Gormley, the Catholic priest of a diocese comprising East Dubuque and Vinegar Hill for the past two years, expired Tuesday night at his residence in East Dubuque of liver and kidney disease. He came to his charge from Huntley, Ill., two years ago, and has been in failing health for some months.

A boy named Murray, while celebrating All Halloween here Tuesday night, fell from a garden fence and broke his arm while in the act of purloining cabbage to use in his mischeivouse pranks.

West Bend, Wis., dispatch:

Jane Vermeer, 28 years of age, was put on trial to-day on the charge of murdering by poison her aged mother and a brother for the purpose of procuring the family estate, valued at $1,000. On December 21, 1881, Jane dined with her mother, Mrs. Rinke Lockhurst, who lived with her two sons. She brought some soup with her, which, however, one of her brothers refused to eat. Soon after dinner Mrs. Lockhurst and her son were taken violently ill and died. The post mortem revealed arsenic, and Jane was arrested. Three or four years ago the husband of the accused dropped dead while on a reaper, and it is now thought he was poisoned by his wife. At the time of the crime the neighbors threatened lynching. The defense will endeavor to show that the poison was administered by the brother or mingled with the food by accident.

Philadelphia dispatch:

Casper Younger, and elderly man, had a hearing Monday afternoon upon the charge of attempting to kill his daughter, Mrs. Goekel; her husband, August Goekel; the two children of the Goekels, and Mrs. Younger, wife of the prisoner. August Goekel, who is a tailor, recently gave a home to his mother-in-law, who left Younger in Baltimore on account of cruelty to her. Shortly after 10 o'clock Friday night Goekel was startled by a crash of his window, and still another crash of a swinging coal oil lamp hanging near his head. Bewildered and in darkness, he made his way to the door. Here he was met by his wife and children, who, hearing the noise, had run up stairs from the lower floor. While thus grouped at the head of the landing, a loud report was heard almost at their feet, but beyond the shock caused, no injury resulted to them. Upon examination, a piece of lead pipe, about six inches long and covered with oil-cloth, was found on the floor. The pipe had been corked at one end, and the other had contained a fuse. This was the missile which had been hurled through a window. As the fuse burned short, the pipe was discharged, fortunately in a direction at right angles with the family standing in the doorway, and doing them no harm. On the east side of the room there were found marks of the deadly force of the contents of the missile, and on the floor lay leaden bullets, pieces of iron and fragments of black glass with which it had been charged. Some lead pipe, a number of bullets similar to those found in the room, a piece of fuse a yard long, a lot of black glass and a revolver were found in the stable where Younger usually slept.

Cohoes, N. Y., October 30.

Joseph Rivet, while repairing a bridge Monday fell into the Courtland Street Canal. He was carried over a "weir" twenty-five feet high, and into a raceway running at right angles at a rapid rate; he was whirled along to a dam fifty feet high, over which he was carried, and rushed through a wild gorge into the Mohawk river. His efforts for life were witnessed by 1,500 people. His body was recovered. Rivet leaves a wife and five children.

The strike of the East Liverpool, O., potters which was inaugurated over five months ago has become only a strike in name. Of the 700 who quit work when their employers notified them that any of them who joined the Knights of Labor would be discharged, all but 150 have either returned to work or left town. Of the eight potteries implicated, five are running at nearly half their capacity, two are entirely idle, while the largest has nearly all the hands needed. In all these works the iron-clad contract which binds each man to keep out of the Knights of Labor organization is in force.

Owen M Gillice, of Pittsburg, one of the sub-contractors for the construction of the Pittsburg, McKeesport and Youghiogheny Railroad, was Monday arraigned at the Central Station on charges of forgery and embezzlement. He was in the employ of Harris Bros. & Co., contractors, and, a week ago was given two checks, amounting to $1,550 to pay the workmen. He had the checks cashed, and left. He was arrested at the Grand House Sunday night, and committed Monday for further hearing.

A letter received in this city from Captain Crapo, of the lost schooner Surprise, of this port, which was wrecked at Basket Island, near Punta Arenas, on the Strait of Magellan, gives particulars of the loss, and also says the boat's crew that he left at the island were subsequently massacred by the natives, with the exception of a portugese boy. He also says a boat's crew belonging to the British bark Roseneath, which foundered at sea, containing the mate and four men, were also murdered by the natives, excepting the mate, who was afterward rescued by some friendly Indians and sent to Valparaiso, where he has arrived. A third boat's crew had also been massacred by natives at this point.

DR HARTER'S

A combination of Protoxide of Iron, Peruvian Bark and Phosphorus in a palatable form. The only preparation of iron that will not blacken the teeth, so characteristic of other iron preparations.

GENTLEMEN: I have used DR. HARTER'S IRON TONIC in my practice, and in an experience of twenty-five years in medicine, have never found anything to give the results that DR. HARTER'S IRON TONIC does. In many cases of Nervous Prostration, Female Diseases, Dyspepsia, and an impoverished condition of the blood, this peerless remedy has, in my hands, made some wonderful cures. Cases that have baffled some of our most eminent physicians have yielded to this great and incomparable remedy. I prescribe it in preference to any iron preparation made. In fact, such a compound as DR. HARTER'S IRON TONIC is a necessity in my practice. DR. ROBERT SAMUELS,

ST. LOUIS, MO., NOV. 7th, 1881. 3104 Wash. Avenue.

It gives color to the blood, natural healthful tone to the digestive organs and nervous system, making it applicable to General Debility, Loss of Appetite, Prostration of Vital Powers and Impotence.

Moody raised Kain, and "raised" Baxter. In fact he raised his former majority.

The day of victory, is a day to be devoted to magnanimity and decency. Let us forget the example set by republicans in their frequent victories, and have no word of personal abuse, or misrepresentation. The republican candidates fought hard and long, but the democrats fought better, and had a better cause. The republicans ran good men, in nearly every case, and so far as their personal character was concerned they deserved better fortune. They have our sympathy. But we must not forget that there were causes other than mere personal character, that tended to influence the election. Democrats had become tired of helping to put republicans into office and then stand by and see them use the power thus given them, to defeat the democratic party and to debauch the ballot box at every election. People had become tired of their vilification and abuse. They were tired of hearing the men they had helped elect abuse the party to which they still owned allegiance. Tired of being called rebels,—tired of the "solid south,"—tired of being cheated by false professions of morality and temperance, by men who were neither moral nor temperate,—tired of being humbugged into supporting a party that claimed the support of the people, because it believed in a high tariff that is continually dragging the working classes into hopeless poverty. Many of the best republicans themselves are tired of these things, and had determined to cut loose from a party that is profuse only in barren promises of reformation within the party, and which, when put again into power, never reformed. They have learned that their own party is not quite infallible—that republicans do not always live up to their promises —that some of them drink whisky as well as democrats; that all the morality in the country is not centered in their party; that the only way to reform their party and correct the many abuses it has fallen into through its long lease of power, is to leave it and act with a party that has always been safe because always conservative. All these causes have tended to start the political cyclone that has just struck the country and made nearly a clean sweep from Maine to California. Republicans have learned a valuable lesson, and democrats should profit by their experience. Democrats should profit by their own experience, too. Let them use the good fortune, and the power it may give them, with justice, judgment and moderation. As we have stood numberless and crushing defeats with a fortitude little less than sublime, let us not forget, in our hour of victory, that it is the people who have given us the victory and to them we must hold ourselves responsible for our acts. There should be no great revolutions, no excesses, no extreme measures, no extreme talk, no extreme course taken in any way. We have felt the popular pulse and should know what the people want. And knowing this, our course is clear.

DILLS made a good race for the judgeship, being beaten by only about 500 votes. This reduces McBride's vote to about 500 below his ticket. The very tricks and other unfair means that were resorted to, to defeat Dills tended to increase his vote. Candidates may some day learn that throwing dirt, besides being dishonorable, does not pay.

IF a little more of the able talent from Waterloo and Pleasant Lake had gone into Steuben county to make republican speeches, that lively little county would have wheeled into line and gone democratic.

WE give a brief statement of the majorities for the county ticket this week, and also on Myers, secretary of state, as far as the county vote goes. We will give a full statement of the official count next week.

THE smart Alecks who started the spurious ticket business would do well to retire to the privacy of their homes and study the effects of such trickery as shown in the recent election. They will not be likely to do it again.

MOODY had a double load to carry but he proved equal to the emergency, and walked over the course, Kain in hand, and came up smiling on the last quarter.

THE result of Tuesday's elections will most likely be that the democrats will have a majority in the next House of Representatives.

THE unused spectacle of a crowd of democrats rejoicing over an election, brought out the whole town to stare at them.

INDIANA is democratic 10,000.

A Traveler's Story.

After spending months at watering places and consulting the best physicians without benefit, I returned home disheartened and expected to die. A friend urged a trial of Parker's Ginger Tonic. Three bottles and careful diet have brought me excellent health and spirits, and I hope my experience may benefit similiar sufferers.—Cincinnati lady. See other column. 44-4w.

Soldiers Take Notice.

The Union Soldier's Association will meet at their hall in Auburn, on Saturday night, Nov. 11, to take in consideration whether to disband or not, as this subject was suggested at our last meeting. All members are requested to be present. SEC'Y.

—Dr. LaRue the only reliable specialist in this country, has located at the Auburn House, Auburn, Ind., until March 1, 1883. tf.

—It should be remarked that there was very little or no drunkenness in town Wednesday.

—A new line of dress goods to sell at 8, 10, 12½ and 13 cents a yard, at McQuiston & Long's. 42 3.

—The vote polled was a heavy one, and no one can complain that his friends were not out.

Queensware and glassware at cost at Boyer & Beidler's, in Waterloo.

Mr. W. Stevens, 45 Broadway, Logansport, was cured of pain in the back and inactive liver by Brown's Iron Bitters.

—Mrs. A. J. Little wishes to take a reliable girl to learn the millinery trade with her. Here is a good chance for the right party.

Boyer & Beidler, Waterloo, are determined to not be out done in putting cheap and good goods on the market.

Impaired vigor of mind and body, in both male or female, old or young, cured by the timely use of Dr. E. C. West's Nerve and Brain Treatment. Sold at F. E. Davenport's.

—Choice styles of plaid dress goods and reversable suitings at McQuiston & Long's. 42 3.

For underwear, good all wool blankets, horse blankets, gents' gloves and mittens, rubber coats, and etc, go to Boyer & Beidler, for they will not be undersold. Waterloo.

—Mrs. Little is selling off her new stock of goods rapidly. She selects with good taste, and judgment as to prices, quality and season. Give her a call.

—We see by a note in another part of this paper that Mrs. Boyer, of Franklin township, has received the insurance on the life of her son, Jay B. Boyer, which was due from the order of the Knights of Honor.

—Frank Ryan and Fred Davis lost their little geography Tuesday and voted in the wrong ward. It was a stand off, of course, as they vote opposite ways, but the boys had their fun over it.

—We heard one lady say that she would willingly go without a new winter bonnet to see Moody elected. There is devotion for you. But she can now drop into Mrs. Little's and select as nice a winter outfit as she pleases.

—Mrs. Fin Gibson called in to look over the COURIER office this week. Always glad to have our friends call in.

—Miss Jessie Espy, dropped into the COURIER office this week. We understand she is teaching instrumental music here.

—Miss Rose Blair, came over from Waterloo, yesterday to console the COURIER folks in regard to the election news.

—"Gust" Leas had no influence! so it was whispered among the wise ones of the republican party. Of course he hadn't. Look at the figures. Figures won't lie.

—The republican leaders did not consult A. S. Leas. They wanted to try a new machine.

THE republican "organs" didn't seem to pull together very well. Too many cooks.

THE Garrett Herald made a correct prophesy last summer, when it put the republican success in this county, at zero.

HUBBELL would have run better had his temperance talking and his temperance practice agreed a little better.

NOBLE COUNTY goes republican on the county ticket by a small majority.

MICHIGAN comes over the divide with a fusion majority of ten to fifteen thousand.

NEW YORK state went democratic by over 59,000.

AT last Ben Butler is governor of Massachusetts. His majority is about 20,000.

THE prohibition amendment in Nebraska has been defeated.

PENNSYLVANIA goes democratic by about 30,000 majority.

"WE have received a copy of "Fink's Great Southwest," a paper published at Las Vegas, in New Mexico. Like most far west frontier papers, it sports a fancy motto, and is a wide-awake, spicy journal. Its motto, by the way is: "A pound of pluck is worth a ton of luck;" and characteristic of a great deal that is found on the frontier.

—Miss Libbie Parnell is now clerking at McQuiston & Long's. Libbie has been for several years a successful teacher and will now try mercantile life for awhile. We believe "Mac. & Mike" will find her as good an assistant as could be found anywhere.

—The Auburn public schools will commence on the 20th of November. All pupils who are to be examined on work, or who desire to talk with me regarding their studies, will meet in the high school room, on Saturday the 18th of November, at 9 o'clock.

M. W. HARRISON.

—I take pleasure in acknowledging the receipt of $2,000 from the supreme treasury of the Knights of Honor through the hands of the officers of Union Lodge No. 1436, at Waterloo, Ind., as insurance on the life of my son, Jay B. Boyer, who was a member of that lodge. [Signed] SARAH BOYER.

—Mrs. J. A. Barns entertained her Sunday-school class last Friday afternoon. Their names are: Misses Nannie and Aggie Lewis, Ida and Ada Gross, Josie Klotz, Jessie Weaver, Minnie Wilson, Bertie Shaffer, Hortie Culbertson, Alza Ralston, Lena Korff and Mabel Hartman. To judge from appearances they spent a very pleasant evening.

—The new telegraph line went through town last Friday on a run. At 7 a. m. it was at a point about a mile east of town, and at night, it was west of the Jackson road on the west side of town. The line will evidently be first class. The poles are the largest and best ever used in this part of the country, and are arranged at present for four wires.

—A certain republican candidate promised Isaac Ochs his clover seed, and thinking he might gain a vote or two, took it up to Waterloo via. Jackson street, but Mr. Ochs' keen eyes fell upon him, and he sent the following dispatch to his brother Simon who was electioneering at Butler:

"Give him h—l, Simon, he took his cloverseed to Waterloo."

—Wasn't it rather small business for republicans or any one else to lead an old blind man to the polls, and when his vote was all safe then allow him to wander off home as best he could? The man, of whatever party he may be, who found the old man wandering around and lost, and who took him home, did a noble and kindly act for which every lover of his race will thank him.

—Prof. C. P. Hodge and family removed to their new home near Auburn, DeKalb county. The Professor Hopes to be benefitted in health by the change to farm life. He has superintended our city schools for two years past, and on the account of poor health determined to remove to his farm. It is to be hoped that he will not be driven from his chosen profession, for he is one of the foremost educators of the State.—[LaGrange Democrat.

Mr. John R. Bennett, Druggist, Muskegon, Mich. In regard to your inquiries about Ely's Cream Balm for the cure of Catarrh, my answer is, I can recommend it always as the best remedy I have ever used. Dr. J. S. Vaughan, Dentist, Muskegon, Mich. 2t.

—For gloves, mittens, caps, scarfs and underwear go to McQuiston & Long's. 45-3t.

Strange Fatality.

Our readers well remember the death, a few years ago, of Mr. Heckathorn, who was killed by lightning as he was going home, a short distance north of this place. Now, as noted elswhere in to-days paper, his daughter has met with the same fearful accident. There is one old saying that lighining never strikes twice in the same place, but this event proves that it may strike twice in the same family.

New Music.

We have just received a copy of the Magdalena March for the piano by Paul Steinhagen. This march is played by all the leading bands throughout the country and is becoming very popular, no doubt our friends who have heard any of Paul Steinhagens compositions will be delighted with this one. Every person in possession of a piano should buy a copy. Price 35 cents. Address all orders to the publisher G. W. Cutter, 266 Fifth Street, Cincinnati Ohio.

The Dixon Pencils.

These excellent pencils have been at the head of the list so long that it seems almost superfluous to say anything in their behalf. We have used them for years and continue now to use them to the exclusion of all others. Their durability and good wearing qualities as well as the evenness of their composition, recommend them for general use. And to those who write a great deal, they are an especial convenience, on account of their clear, clean cut lines and the ease with which they run over the paper. Nor should we forget the peculiar make-up of the rubber head, or eraser. We think this device—putting the head in a lateral slot—the best in the world. Pick out a Dixon pencil, hard or soft, and try it.

—Sam, Pete & Max of the Ft. Wayne Star clothing store speak to our readers this week in a new ad. gotten up on purpose for them by the COURIER boys, who have an eye for nice clothing when it comes at such reasonable prices. Go and pick out a suit.
